Culture Club

A very pleasant social event was enjoyed Thursday by the ladies of St. Joe Culture Club, it being their mid-summer meeting which was held at the home of Mrs. W. C. DeLong, of Butler, Ind. The ladies left St. Joe in their carriages at 10:30 o'clock arriving at Butler in time for an excellent luncheon which was served by the hostess and heartily enjoyed by all. The ladies were then called to order and immediately preceded to business. Programs for the year 1909-10 were read, discussed and adopted. Many pleasant and profitable evenings are looked forward to in the study of Stories of the Nineteenth Century. After the meeting adiourned a pleasant social hour was enjoyed and were favored with some fine music by the Mesdames Hamilton and Krise. At this time W. C. DeLong made his appearance with his camera and the results of his visit remain to be seen. We then made a tour of the city and at 5 o'clock were called to dinner by our hostess, and all did ample justice to the following menu:—Chicken and salmon, potato salad, baked beans, corn, tomatoes, bread and butter, jelly, olives, pickles, radishes, cheese, cherry pie, strawberries, ice cream, purple and gold club colors, coffee. The ladies then departed for their homes feeling that the afternoon would long be remembered as one of the pleasant features of life.

Birthday Surprise Party.

Last Saturday, many friends and relatives of S. L. Widney gathered at the home of B. E. Widney in honor of his 70th., birthday. They began to gather about 10 o'clock, and when Mr. Widney came to the house he was very much surprised, but was heartily glad to see them all. He had several beautiful gifts presented to him. Life 100,000 Years Ago.

Scientists have found in caves in switzerland bones of men, who lived 100,000 years ago, when life was in constant danger from wild beats. To-day the danger, as shown by A. W. Brown of Alexander, Mo., is largely from deadly disease. "If it had not been for Dr. King's New Discovery, which cured me, I could not have lived," he writes, "suffering as I did from a severe lung trouble and stubborn cough." To cure Sore Lungs, Colds, obstinate Coughs, and prevent Pneumonia, its the best medicine on earth. 50c and $1.00. Guaranteed by H. Milliman. Trial bottle free.

WAS SOMETHING OF A JOLT.

Addressed by Child as "Grandpa," Man Forced to Admit He Is Getting Old.

"I hate to think it," said the man with frost in his hair, "but really I must be growing old.

"Three times within as many weeks young men have got up in street cars to give me their seat, showing thereby, as they fancied, due respect for age. I wish they wouldn't, for I don't feel old, and I have to think I look old and I don't believe I do. I think those three young men were too polite, well meaning and all that, but not good judges of age, misled by the gray in my thatch; and so I don't consider that their mistaking me for an old looking man really proves me so or should in any way disturb me; but I did get a judgment on myself this morning, a natural, instinctive and absolutely unbiased judgment that did give me quite a little jolt.

"A little child that I was looking at, a small child just old enough to be beginning to talk, looked at me and smiled and said: 'Grandpa!' and that was hard to get away from.

"I guess now I'll have to dye my hair."

May Cure Snoring, Too.

"I've found a cure for nightmare," said the man who will eat despite his subsequent sufferings. "When I go to bed at night I slip a string through an empty spool, secure the spool firmly so it will not slide, and then tie the string around my waist in such a way that the spool comes in the middle of my back. The result is that if I try to turn on my back in my sleep I lie on the spool, and I can assure you it wakens me promptly.

"No, it isn't pleasant to be wakened in that way, but it is better than having to go through one of the diabolical nightmares from which I have suffered for several years."

Let Him Stay a Man.

A man soon gets mighty tired of treating his wife like a goddess. If he cannot be at ease with her, and smoke when he pleases, and take off his coat if he wants to, and throw ashes on the floor and cigar stubs all over the house, he is going to be mighty uncomfortable, and long to go where he can. For it is born in a man to like to do these things, just as it is born in a girl to like to do her own pet things. Moreover, if a girl has once known a man in a perfectly comfortable chummy way, she will find him worth twice as much as before he dropped his awe of her. Men are pretty nice as they are, but for goodness sake, don't try to make a man ladylike. He isn't and won't be if he is even half a man.—Atchison Globe.

Stewart will be the principle speaker, there will also be a gold medal contest. Music and boating at your pleasure. It is hoped 500 white ribbon women will attend from this district.

John M. Henderson made this office a very pleasant call one day last week, while he and his wife were waiting for the eastbound train on the P. & O., enroute to Findley, Ohio. They expect to visit in the home of Joe Carming. Their visit will be principly with Mrs. Hannah Henderson, who is over ninety years old. Mr. Henderson related an instant that caused him to have great reverance for this aged lady. When he was but 15 years old, he left home and went to Ohio, and made his home with the above named woman, who was distant related to him. She cared for him as one of her own children for sometime. Since the time Mr. Henderson left Ohio he has never seen her and now in his old age she requested that he come and see her which will probably be their last meeting here upon earth as her health is failing fast. Over a half century has past since they last saw each other.

M. T. Bishop was at Auburn last Wednesday evening attending the tent meetings.

Wm. Dewey and wife of Jackson, Mich., came last Saturday evening in their automobile to visit with Dr. C. R. Price and wife.

An ice cream social will be given on the Fairview church lawn one week from Saturday night. Everybody come.

Tested over 15,000 pounds

You have no doubt heard some people knocking about things they know nothing about. Some time ago a representative of the Universal Portland Cement Co., was in St. Joe and visited the tile factory. He secured four 8-inch tile and sent them to Chicago for testing. Returns have been received and it shows that each tile stood over 15,000 pounds pressure. The tile were 6 months old and if they had been fully matured they would have tested over 20,000 pounds. The clay tile used in the test were from Iowa and only tested 5,510 lbs. Do you see what the comparison means? When a man says that the cement tile will break down he is off. The older cement tile gets the better they are. This showing is one that our factory and town should be proud of. Another portion of the communication received is as follows:

"For comparison I am sending you tests on cement tile made at Sibley, Iowa, from sand very much inferior to yours, testing only 360 pounds per square inch at the end of 28 days while yours tests 472 pounds for a similar period. This of course is a decided advantage in your favor and with proper attention to manufacture you should be able to produce a product even superior to that made at Sibley."

PAST AND PRESENT

AS IT COMES TO US FROM ALL CORNERS OF THE EARTH.

Telegraphic Information Gathered by the Few for the Enlightenment of the Many.

Lone Robber Makes Big Haul.

A branch of the Wagoner Bank and Trust Company on Main street, in the heart of the business section of Fort Worth, Texas, was held up by a lone highwayman at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. The robber escaped in an automobile with $8,100 in currency. Officers are in pursuit. The robbery was the most daring attempted in Texas in years. Cashier Walter E. King was alone in the bank at the time balancing the business of the day when a well dressed stranger walked in. As the man approached the window of the cashier's department King looked up and down the barrel of a revolver. Next came the demand for the money in sight. "Make a move or a noise of any kind and I'll kill you," was the greeting Mr. King remembers. The cashier complied and, stuffing the roll of bills, $8,100 in denominations ranging from $1 to $20, in an inside pocket of his coat, the man backed out of the door under cover of his pistol, and as Mr. King ran to a telephone he saw the man walking down the street and mingling with the crowds with an air of unconcern.

Indiana Bankers in Convention.

With an attendance of fully 400 the thirteenth annual convention of the Indiana Bankers' Association is in session in the banquet hall of the Anthony Hotel at Fort Wayne. Topics of interest to banks and bankers were discussed at length and the sessions were interesting to all present. The topic on the program which caused the most discussion among the bankers was the address of welcome by the Hon. Charles McCulloch, president of the Hamilton National Bank of Fort Wayne, in which he discussed the question of the guarantee of bank deposits. In the trust company section of the convention, the most animated discussion was held on the subject of advertising and soliciting.

Triple Tragedy at Columbus, Ohio.

William Reed Puyear, assistant electrical engineer at the Ohio State University, Columbus, shot and killed his brother-in-law, Fred West, fatally shot his wife, and then rushed to the attic while the police were after him and sent a bullet into his brain. The tragedy resulted from a quarrel. Puyear made accusations against his wife and she told her brother, West. He upbraided Puyear and the latter began shooting after quarreling for some time. Mrs. Puyear can not live.

Roosevelt Family Going to Europe.

Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt and three of the Roosevelt children, Miss Ethel, Archie and Quentin, left New York June 26 on board the White Star line Cretic for Gibraltar and Naples to pass the summer on the continent. The Roosevelt party will spend a month with Miss Carew, Mrs. Roosevelt's sister, at her villa near Rome, afterward going to France on a trip planned especially for Miss Ethel's benefit. Mrs. Roosevelt and her children will sail for America about November 1.

Well Known Musician Is Missing.

Edward Dicey, the musician who was employed at the Majestic Airdome in Fort Wayne, Ind., is still missing as far as the police have been able to ascertain and no trace of him has been found since the report came to the officers. He was very industrious and had no bad habits known to his companions. All his friends are at a complete loss to account for his sudden disappearance and it is causing some worry.

Child Bonfire Victim.

While playing near a bonfire Gladys, aged 4 years, daughter of Mrs. Harry Evans, of Bellefontaine, Ohio, fell into the fire. Her clothing was burned from her body and her flesh to almost a crisp. She cannot live.

Nine Tourists Drowned at Killarney.

A boat containing nine tourists, presumably Americans, and four boatmen was swamped on lower Killarney Lake, in Ireland. All the tourists and two of the boatmen were drowned.

Landslide Derails a Train.

The Great Northern west-bound Oriental Limited passenger train was derailed near Ural, Mont., on the Kootenai river. Thirty passengers were injured, but none killed. A landslide caused the accident.

Painter Gregor Dies.

Edward John Gregor, R. A., president of the Royal Institute of Painters in Water Colors, died at Great Marlow, Eng. He was born in 1850.

CHEVROLET WINS CUP IN MOTOR CAR RACE

Crowd of 35,000 Persons Cheers Victors in West's First Big Automobile Meet.

MATSON TAKES INDIANA TROPHY

Daring Drivers Defy Curves of Death, and Machines Reach a Speed of Nearly 100 Miles an Hour.

Amid plaudits from shrieking thousands, Joe Matson, a Western speed annihilator, on Friday won the Indiana Trophy stock chassis race, the first event in the West's big two-day automobile meet. He drove his 25.6 horse power Chalmers-Detroit car over 232-74 miles on the Crown Point-Lowell course in 4:31:21, or at an average speed of 51½ miles an hour. He was sixteenth and last to start and third to cross the tape. The redoubtable George Robertson, winner of the Vanderbilt cup race last fall, was second in the Locomobile, covering the ground in 4:39:03. In third place ran A. Monsen, in a Marion car, his time being 4:42:03. Terrific bursts of speed were made at times over the best portions of the roadway, Burman in a Buick making one lap around the 23.27-mile course in 23:41, near-enough to be a mile a minute to call it such.

Not a racer was spilled and not a car turned turtle. The pilots went around the curves discreetly instead of precipitately. They had been cautioned by their managers against being foolishly reckless and they took no more chances than needed at treacherous spots.

Chevrolet Wins Cobe Cup.

Out of a field of twelve speed demons Louis Chevrolet Saturday won the Cobe Cup race—the West's premier auto prize—driving his Buick car over 395.66 miles on the Crown Point-Lowell course in 8:01:39, or at the rate of 49.3 miles an hour.

"Billy" Bourque, in the Knox, came second, beaten for first place by a margin of :01:05, while George Robertson, in his Locomobile, got third place, his time being 8:14:30. Because he started tenth and was crowded closely in the final laps, Chevrolet followed Bourque over the tape. In spurts of speed nearly 100 miles an hour was reached.

The following table shows the record of each car and order of time standing:

Order.	Car.	Driver.
1	Buick	Chevrolet
2	Knox	Bourque

*Strang was still on course when race finished.

At the conclusion of the race Chicago Auto Club officials announced $60,000 had been expended on the event and that they were well satisfied. No statement of receipts or deficit was given out.

The first ambitious effort of the Chicago Automobile Club to present a Western automobile "classic" which might compare with the Eastern Vanderbilt cup races was a success from the automobile racing point of view.

Perfect weather, a course which is pronounced excellent by racing authorities, and entirely sincere enthusiasm on the part of the intense persons who drove the cars combined to make the opener a hit with the lovers of rapid transit who saw the races.

Estimates vary as to the attendance at the big race, as the onlookers were scattered over the 23.37 miles of the course, but the highest figures place the attendance at about 35,000. Troops stationed along the route kept the course clear.

ODDS & ENDS OF SPORT

Chicago horsemen hope to have racing at Harlem track this summer. The betting system now used in the East may be employed.

The Marshalltown Iowa Driving club which proposes to hold a bi-weekly harness racing at the local fair grounds, was organized at a meeting of horsemen.

At the annual interscholastic Black Hills track meet, held at Belle, Fourche, S. D., Rapid City won the meet and the silver cup, beating Deadwood high school for first place by one point.

The appeal of the Kentucky State racing commission from the judgment of the Kenton Circuit Court holding the act of the legislature creating the commission invalid, is now in the hands of the judges of the Court of Appeals.

According to the Western Horsemen, New York merchants and manufacturers have agents searching the Middle West for good horses for delivery work, and the agents have not been able to fill the orders, so scarce are good animals on the market.

NINE KILLED IN WRECK.

Two Heavily Laden Cars Crash Together with Fatal Results.

Nine men were killed and at least a dozen men and women injured Saturday night in a head-on collision between two heavy cars of the South Shore Electric Railway at Samuel's Crossing, Ind. The accident occurred shortly after 9 o'clock. A west-bound car was coming at high speed down a long hill, which is formed by the elevated structure under which the Lake Shore railroad tracks pass. The car was well filled. At the foot of the hill it met an east-bound car, also going at a terrific speed. The cars were buried in each other. The motorman of the west-bound car was killed, while the motorman of the east-bound car put on his brakes and jumped. The passengers were farmers and residents of Porter and Michigan City. It was hours before all the bodies could be extricated. The injured were taken to farmhouse s and rushed on special cars to South Bend and near-by towns.

BALLOON FALL KILLS THREE.

Russian Count, Court Chamberlain and Wife Dashed to Death.

Court Chamberlain Palitzin, his wife and Count Rostofftseff, director of the private chancellery of Empress Alexandra, were killed in a ballon accident at St. Petersburg. The balloon, General Wannowski, belonging to the army department, in which four officers had a similar misfortune a year ago, ascended from the military balloon park in charge of Captain Korbe. In the basket with him were Court Chamberlain Palitzin and his wife and Count Rostofftseff. The balloon drifted across the city at an altitude of a little less than a mile, and when it was just above the outskirts Count Rostofftseff, by mistake, pulled the rip cord. As the gas escaped from the envelope the balloon descended rapidly to the ground, and the car fell in the garden of a country house. Captain Korbe escaped with a broken leg.

SLAIN MAN'S BODY IN CAR.

Victim of Murder and Robbery Is Found at Akron, Ohio.

The body of an unidentified man about 40 years old, who doubtless had been murdered and robbed, was found in a box car at Akron, Ohio. The man's skull had been crushed in and his pockets cut open and rifled. The car was received from Hammond, Ind. A slip of paper, found in a pocket, addressed to "J. M. O'Lear," said: "Take Fairfield elevated to La Grange car, get off at Ogden avenue." The note is believed to have referred to a Chicago address.

Man Identified as Slayer.

Joe Totaro, the 14-year-old New York boy who brought to light the murder of Samuel Bersin, identified Sigmund Goldberg, a painter, as the man who had employed him to watch the two bundles which later were found to contain the headless and dismembered body of Bersin.

MINISTERS OUST FOSTER.

Expelled from Chicago Conference on Account of Heretical Views.

Professor George Burman Foster on Monday was expelled from the Chicago Baptist Ministers' Conference because of the alleged heretical beliefs expressed in his recent book on "The Function of Religion." After a long and heated debate, in which the clergyman indulged in bitter personalities, the organization at its weekly meeting decided by a vote of 40 to 10 to drop the University of Chicago professor from its membership. The action does not affect Professor Foster's standing as a Baptist minister, but simply advocates disapproval of him and takes from him the right of fellowship in the conference. The resolution finally passed was stripped of all unnecessary verbiage, and in such form was able to command the support of a number who disliked the sort of tactics pursued by the foes of Professor Foster. As introduced by Rev. Johnston Myers, leader of the anti-Foster forces, the original resolution recited the various accusations against Professor Foster and declared his retention in the association injurious to the denomination. It also called upon the trustees of the University of Chicago to dismiss Professor Foster from the faculty of the institution. With the consent of Mr. Myers the resolution was amended and simplified until its final form, as passed, was as follows: "Resolved, That the Baptist Ministers' Conference of Chicago drop Professor George Burman Foster from its membership."

FIRE ON SHIP NEAR CZAR.

Russian Gunners Nervous in Guarding of Emperor.

The German imperial yacht Hohenzollern, with Emperor William on board, joined the Russian squadron convoying Emperor Nicholas on board the imperial yacht Standart at 10 o'clock Thursday morning. Emperor Nicholas immediately went on board the Hohenzollern and welcomed Emperor William. All the ships present were dressed and manned. The extreme anxiety of officials for the safety of the Czar was shown the previous night when a British steamer was fired on by a Russian torpedo boat for approaching too close to Pitpikas Bay, on the Finnish coast, where the two emperors met. The steamer in question is the Northburg, Captain Robertson. She was hailed off Wirolhati, Island of Biorke. The projectile from the torpedo boat pierced a steam pipe, and one member of the crew of the English vessel was wounded. Russian torpedo boats have been patrolling Pitpikas Bay for several days, and it was one of these guard vessels that fired the shot.

WORSHIPERS BITTEN BY SNAKES

Women and Children Suffer at Meeting—Prosecution Awaits Death.

An appeal has been made at Hutchinson, Kan., to County Attorney Helinger to break up a religious sect of "snake worshipers," at whose meetings women and children are said to have been bitten by poisonous reptiles. The sect has thirty-three members, who style themselves "the true followers of Christ." The members say the handling of snakes without receiving injury is a supreme test of grace. Township Commissioner Grubbs declares that at one meeting two women and one child were bitten. The child is said to be in a critical condition. The authorities say they are powerless to act until a death has resulted from the unusual practice.

FIRE KILLS 5 MEN, 68 HORSES.

Origin of Blaze Mystery and Barn Damaged $30,000 Worth.

In a fire of unknown origin late Saturday afternoon five men and sixty-eight horses were cremated in the board of trade livery barn in Duluth, and damage was done to the building to the extent of $30,000. The building was owned by Barrett & Zimmerman, horse dealers of St. Paul. The fact that the men had lost their lives was not known until after the fire had been subdued, when firemen in looking through the ruins discovered their charred remains near the rear entrance through which they had tried to effect their escape.

Work of Congress

The Senate Friday adopted, by a vote of 44 to 32, the finance committee's amendment placing a duty of $4 a ton on print paper instead of $2, as provided in the House bill. Senator Brown's amendment for free print paper was voted down, 52 to 29. Senator Lorimer, who had just been sworn in, casting his first vote against the amendment. Shortly before adjournment Senator Bailey's income tax amendment became a regular order of business, and an agreement was sought for the disposition of that measure. Senator Aldrich stated that he was willing to take up the amendment and dispose of it when the schedules are completed. Senator Bailey sought unanimous agreement by which the Senate would take a direct vote on the passage of his amendment, excluding any motion to refer it to a committee. This was not agreed to, and at the established hour, 7 o'clock, the Senate adjourned. The House was not in session.

-:—:-

The Senate Saturday covered a multitude of subjects in connection with the tariff, but made final disposition of nothing of importance. Beginning at 10 o'clock the income and corporation tax questions received attention for some time and ultimately were postponed, with the understanding that they should not be taken up again until after the tariff provisions proper should be finally settled. Senator Aldrich brought in the committee amendment to the wood pulp paragraph, which proved to be a provision for doubling the duty on wood pulp coming from countries which undertake to prohibit the exportation of logs to this country. Senator Beveridge presented an amendment for the cutting in two of the House ad valorem duty on cash registers. Mr. Aldrich also presented the finance committee's provision for a duty on hides. All these measures were brought to the attention of the Senate, but so far as action was concerned were left at the close of the day where they stood at the beginning. The House was not in session.

-:—:-

The amendment of the Senate committee on finance taking hides from the free list and restoring the Dingley law of 15 per cent ad valorem was before the Senate all day Monday. Senator Warren of Wyoming and Senator Carter of Montana supported the provision and in vigorous language attacked the attitude of the free hide advocates, while Senator Page of Vermont defended the action of the House in placing hides on the free list. In support of free hides Mr. Page contended that the adoption of such a policy would not injure the farmers, while at the same time it would be of vast benefit to the leather manufacturers. He said the beef trust garnered all the profits on hides from whatever source. Availing themselves of the presence of a quorum, the leaders of the House obtained action upon several important matters. Principal among these was the conference report on the bill providing for the taking of the thirteenth census, and with respect to that measure the debate hinged on the Senate amendment requiring that applicants for appointment must take the examinations in the States or Territories in which they profess to live and that they must have had at least one year's actual domicile therein previous to such examination. The amendment was concurred in, but all other amendments were disagreed to and the bill was again sent to conference. The Senate resolution providing for the continuance of unexpended balances in connection with certain river and harbor improvements also was adopted after lively discussion. At 5:24 p. m. the House adjourned until Thursday.

-:—:-

By a vote of 46 to 30 the Senate Tuesday took hides from the free list, where they had been placed by the House, and gave them a duty of 15 per cent ad valorem, the same as under the Dingley law. Just before adjournment for the day at 7 o'clock Senator Aldrich, on behalf of the finance committee, presented the committee's new lumber schedule and also a number of amendments relating to linoleum and oilcloth. The committee proposed a rate of $1.50 per thousand on sawed lumber, which is a 50-cent increase over the House rate. Neither the lumber nor linoleum schedule was acted upon. The House was not in session.

NUBBINS OF NEWS.

Charles Miller, who worked as a waiter in the old Astor House in New York at $34 a month, has resigned and is going for a trip to Europe. He has accumulated a fortune of $200,000.

George Baglin, vice president of the United Copper Company and aid of F. Augustus Heinze, was sent to the Tombs prison in New York for failing to produce the company's books in court.

Edgar Serber, 16 years old, was called from his home in Nashville, Tenn., and shot and killed by Jesse McPherson, 15 years old, who later admitted that he was settling an old grudge.

James J. Hill at Seattle said that James A. Patten did not cause a corner in wheat. It was the law of supply and demand that caused the flurry, he said, as this country now consumes 630,000,000 bushels a year, leaving only 20,000,000 for export.

THE BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY

CHAPTER X.—(Continued.)

Within a few days two more checks from Porter to Peckham passed through the usal channels of the bank. By the simple feat of dividing the amount of each check by the current quotation on Traction, Wheaton was able to follow Porter's purchases. The price had remained pretty steady. Then suddenly it fell to thirty. He wondered what was happening, but the newspapers, which were continuing their war on the company, readily attributed it to a lack of confidence in the franchise. Wheaton met the broker, apparently by chance, but really by intention, in the club one evening, and remarked casually:

"Traction seems to be off a little?"

"Yes; there's something going on there that I can't make out. I imagine that the fellows that were buying got tired of stimulating the market, and have thrown a few bunches back to keep the outsiders guessing."

"Right now might be a good time to get in," suggested Wheaton.

"I should call it a good buy myself. I guess that franchise is all right. Better pick up a little," he said, tentatively.

"To tell the truth," said Wheaton, choosing his words carefully, "those out of town people I spoke to you about have written me that they'd like a little more, if it can be got at the right figure. You might pick up a hundred shares for me at the current price, if you can."

"How do you want to hold it?"

"Have it made to me," he answered. He had debated whether he should do this, and he had been unable to devise any method of holding the stock without letting his own name appear. Porter would not know; Porter was concealing his own purchases. Wheaton could not see that it made any difference; he was surely entitled to invest his money as he liked, and he raised the sum necessary in this case by the sale of some railroad bonds which he had been holding, and on which he could realize at once by sending them to the bank's correspondent at Chicago. He might have sold them at home; Porter would probably have taken them off his hands; but the president knew that his capital was small, and might have asked how he intended to reinvest the proceeds.

A few days later Burton sent for Wheaton to come to his office. One hundred shares had been secured from a ranchman. Wheaton carried the purchase money in currency to Burton's office; he was as shrewd as William Porter, and he did not care to have the clerks in the bank speculating about his checks.

He locked his certificate, when Burton got it for him, in his private box in the vault, and waited the rebound which he firmly expected in the price of the stock. His sole idea was to make a profit by the purchase. He felt confident that Porter had bought Traction stock with a definite purpose; he still had no idea who were the principal holders of Traction stock or bonds, and he was afraid to make inquiry. A man who was as secretive as Porter probably had confidential sources of information, and it was not safe to tap Porter's wires. His conscience was easy as to the method by which he had gained his knowledge of Porter's purchases; he certainly meant no harm to Porter.

CHAPTER XI.

Timothy Margrave was, in common phrase, a good railroad man. He had advanced by slow degrees from the incumbency of those lowly manual offices called jobs, to the performance of those nobler functions known as positions. Margrave's elevation to the office of third vice president and general manager was due to his pull. He had resolved that the railroad was getting too much out of him and that he must do more to promote his own fortunes. The directors were good fellows, and they had certainly treated him well; but it seemed within the pale of legitimate enterprise for him to broaden his interests a trifle without in any wise diminishing his zeal for the Transcontinental. The street railway business was a good business, and Clarkson Traction appealed to Margrave, moreover, on its political side. If he reorganized the company and made himself its president he could greatly fortify and strengthen his pull.

Almost any day, he was told, the Eastern bondholders might pounce down and put a receiver in charge of the company. Margrave did not understand receiverships: they were an excuse for pillage, and it was a regret of his life that no fat receivership had ever fallen to his lot. But he was not going into Traction blindly. He wanted to know who else was interested, that he might avoid complications. William Porter was the only man in Clarkson who could swing Traction without assistance; he must not run afoul of Porter. Margrave was a master of the art of getting information, and he decided, on reflection, that the easiest way to get information about Porter was to coax it out of Wheaton.

He always called Wheaton "Jim," in remembrance of the early days of Wheaton's residence in Clarkson when Wheaton had worked in his office. He had watched Wheaton's rise with interest; he took to himself the credit of being his discoverer. When Wheaton called on his daughter he made no comment; he knew nothing to Wheaton's discredit, and he would no more have thought of criticising Mabel than of ordering dynamite substituted for coal in the locomotives of his railroad. When he concluded that he needed Wheaton, he began playing for him, just as if the cashier had been a councilman or a member of the legislature or a large shipper or any other fair prey. He now resorted to that most insidious and economical form of bribery known as the annual pass.

Wheaton accepted the pass as a tribute to his growing prominence in the town. He knew that Porter refused railroad passes on practical grounds, holding that such favors were extended in the hope of reciprocal compliments, and he believed that a banker was better off without them. Wheaton, whose vanity had been touched, could see no harm in them. He had little use for passes as he knew and cared little about traveling, but he had always envied men who carried their "annuals" in little brass-bound books made for the purpose. Ho be sure it was late in the year and passes were usually sent out in January, but this made the compliment seem much more direct; the Transcontinental had forgotten him, and had thought it well to rectify the error between seasons. He felt that he must not make too much of the railroad's courtesy; he did not know to which official in particular he was indebted, but he ran into Margrave one evening at the club and decided to thank him.

"How's traffic?" he asked, as Margrave made room for him on the settee where he was reading the evening paper.

"Fair. Anything new?"

"No; it's the same routine with me pretty much all the time."

"I guess that's right. I shouldn't think there was much fun in banking. You got to keep the public too far away. I like to be up against people myself."

"But you railroad people are not considered so very warm," said Wheaton. "The follows who want favors seem to think so. By the way, I'm much obliged to some one for an annual that turned up in my mail the other day. I don't know who sent it to me—if it's you——"

"Um?" Margrave affected to have been wandering in his thoughts, but this was what he was waiting for. "Oh, I guess that was Wilson. I never fool with the pass business myself; I've got troubles of my own."

"I guess I'll not use it very often," said Wheaton, as if he owed an apology to the road for accepting it.

"Better come out with me in the car some time and see the road," Margrave suggested, throwing his newspaper on the table.

"I'd like that very much," said Wheatonu.

"Where's Thompson now? Old man's pretty well done up, ain't he?"

"He went back to Arizona. He was here at work all summer. He's afraid of our winters."

"Well, that gives you your chance," said Margravce, affably. "There ain't any young man in town that's got a better chance than you have, Jim. I believe there's going to be a good thing for some one in Traction stock. Porter ought to let you in on that." Margrave didn't know that Porter was in, but he expected to find out.

"Mr. Porter has a way of keeping things to himself," said Wheaton, cautiously; yet he was flattered by Margrave's friendliness, and anxious to make a favorable impression. Vanity is not, as is usually assumed, a mere incident of character; it is a disease.

"I suppose," said Margrave, "that a man could buy a barrel of the stuff just now at a low figure."

"What's your guess as to the turn this Traction business will take?" asked Wheaton. He had not expected an opportunity to talk to any one of Margrave's standing on this subject, and he thought he would get some information while the opportunity offered.

"Don't ask me! If I knew I'd like to get into the game. But, look here"—he moved his fat body a little nearer to Wheaton—"the way to go into that thing is to go into it big! I've had my eye on it for a good while, but I ain't going to touch it unless I can swing it all. Now, you know Porter, and I know him, and you can bet your last dollar he'll never be able to handle it. He ain't built for it!" His voice sank to a whisper. "But if I decide to go in, I've got to get rid of Porter. Me and Porter can't travel in the same harness. You know that. Now, I don't know how much he's got, and he's so mysterious you can't tell what he's up to. You know how he is; you can't go to a fellow like that and do business with him, and he won't play anyhow, unless you play his way."

"Well, I don't know anything about his affairs, of course," said Wheaton, yet feeling that Margrave's confidences must be reciprocated. "Just between ourselves, he did buy a little some time ago, but no great amount. It would take a good deal of money to control that company."

"You're dead right, it would; and Porter hasn't any business fooling with it. You've got to syndicate a thing like that. He's probably got a tip from some of his Eastern friends as to what they're going to do, and he's buying in, when he can, to get next. But say, he hasn't any Traction bonds, has he?"

Wheaton had already said more than he had intended, and repented now that he had been drawn into this conversation; but Margrave was bending toward him with a great air of condescending intimacy. Porter had never been confidential with him; and it was really Margrave who had given him his start.

"I don't think so; at least I never knew of it." His mind was on those checks to Peckham, which clearly represented purchases of stock. Of course, Porter might have bonds, too, but having gone thus far he did not like to admit to Margrave how little he really knew of Porter's doings.

"That's all between us—that little matter," said Margrave.

"Certainly, Mr. Margrave."

CHAPTER XII.

Porter went into Fenton's private office and shut and locked the door after him. He always did this, and Fenton, who humored his best client's whims perforce, pushed back the law book which he was reading and straightened the pens on his blotter.

"I didn't expect you back so soon," he said. Porter looked tired and there were dark rings under his eyes.

"Short horse soon curried," he remarked, pulling a packet from his overcoat.

There was something boyish in Porter's mysterious methods, which always amused Fenton when they did not alarm and exasperate him. Porter sat down at a long table and the lawyer drew up a chair opposite him.

"Which way have you been this time?"

"Down in the country," returned Porter, indefinitely.

Fenton laughed and watched his client pulling the rubber bands from his package.

"What have you there—oats or wheat?"

"What I have here," said Porter, straightening out the crisp papers he had taken from his bundle, "is a few shares of Clarkson Traction stock."

"Oh!" Fenton picked up a ruler and played with it until Porter had finished counting and smoothing the stock certificates.

"There you are," said the banker, passing the papers over to Fenton. "See if they're all right."

Fenton compared the names on the face of the certificates with the assignments on the back, while Porter watched him and played with a rubber band.

"The assignments are all straight," said Fenton, finally.

He sat waiting and his silence irritated Porter, who reached across and took up the certificates again.

"I want to talk to you a little about Traction."

"All right, sir," said Fenton, respectfully.

"I've gone in for that pretty deep this fall. I started in on this down East last summer. Those bonds all went East, but a lot of the stock was kicked around out here. If I get enough and reorganize the company I can handle the new securities down East all right. That's business. Now, I've been gathering in the stock around here on the quiet. Peckham's been buying some for me, and he's assigned it in blank. There's no use in getting new shares issued until we're ready to act, for Barnes and those fellows are not above doing something nasty if they think they're going to lose their jobs."

"The original stock issue was five thousand shares," said Fenton. "How much have you?"

"Well, sir," said Porter, "I've got about half and I'm looking for a few shares more right now."

Fenton picked up his ruler again and beat his knuckles with it. Porter had expected Fenton to lecture him sharply, but the lawyer was ominously quiet.

"I'm free to confess," said Fenton, "that I'm sorry you've gone into this. This isn't the kind of thing that you're in the habit of going into. I am not much taken with the idea of mixing up in a corporation that has as disreputable a record as the Traction Company. It's been mismanaged and robbed until there's not much left for an honest man to take hold of, they issue no statements; no one of any responsibility has been connected with it for a long time. The outside stockholders are scattered all over the country, and most of them have quit trying to enforce their rights, if they may be said to have any rights. You remember that the last time they went into court they were knocked out and I'm free to say that I don't want to have to go into any litigation against the company."

"Yes, but the franchise is all straight, ain't it?"

"Probably it is all right," admitted the lawyer reluctantly, "but that isn't the whole story by any manner of means. If it's known that you're picking up the stock, every fellow that has any will soak you good and hard before he parts with it. Now, there are the bondholders——"

"Well, what can the bondholders do?" demanded Porter.

"Oh, get a receiver and have a lot of fun. You may expect that at any time, too. Those Eastern fellows are slow sometimes, but they generally know what they're about."

"Yes, but if they weren't Eastern fellows——"

"Oh, a bondholder's rights are as good one place as another. Those suits are usually brought in the name of the trustee in their behalf."

"Now, do you know what I'm going to do?" demanded Porter. "I'm going to turn up at the next annual meeting and clean this thing out. You don't think it's any good; I've got faith in the company and in the town; I believe it's going to be a good thing. This little gang here that's been running it has got to go. I've dug up some stock here that everybody thought was lost. At the last meeting only eight hundred out of five thousand shares were voted."

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Warsaw people have succeeded in raising a fund of $3,000 thus far to provide a city hospital there.

The United States Senate has confirmed the appointment of Calvin L. Lantzenhiser as postmaster at North Manchester.

Almer McCutcheon, a painter of Evansville, fell from the top of a three-story building and was fatally injured. His skull was fractured and he was injured internally.

Buried beneath a tremendous weight of sand, Herbert Seilman, of Elkhart, 12 years of age, lost his life in a landslide in a garvel pit, where he was at play with his companions.

When his wife was preparing the family dinner at their home in Anderson, Douglas Shott, aged 48 years, slashed his throat several times. The doctors think he will live.

The marriage of Thos. B. Fessler, of Indianapolis, and Miss Agnes L. Wyatt, of Petersburg, makes the tenth marriage of deputies employed in the Petersburg postoffice during the past twenty-one months, two of them being a son and daughter of Postmaster Hoerdes.

Olin Calhoun, 18 years old, of Evansville, may lose the sight of both his eyes because of his anxiety to see the eclipse of the sun last week. The lad was injured while trying to break a glass jar to get a small piece through which to view the eclipse, particles flying into his eyes.

Jerome Barker, the 14-year-old son of Charles Barker, a farmer living two miles from Elizabethtown, met with a serious accident. The boy was driving a disc harrow and fell in front of the knife, which split his left heel, dividing the bone to which the large muscle is attached and he will be a cripple for life.

Horace William Crane, 52 years old, was married in South Bend to Alma Lillian Patterson, 55. They were engaged thirty-five years ago, but the girl's parents objected. Then Crane ran away to sea. Later he married. His first wife died. He divorced his second in March. The original bride to be also married. The union was unhappy and she divorced her husband at Battle Creek, Mich., a week ago. Then she married Crane.

Two weddings of deaf mutes, one in Shelbyville and the other in Oakland City, took place recently. Miss Clara Garlitch, of Walkerville, a suburb of Shelbyville, was united in marriage to Mr. Otto Thuls, formerly of Vincennes. Miss Flossie Thompson, of Oakland City, became, on the same day, the bride of George Owens, of Shelbyville. Many deaf mutes from Indianapolis witnessed the ceremony. It was performed by an Indianapolis minister.

The blowing of the 6 o'clock whistle at the Erie coal storage plant in Hammond saved 16-year-old Frieda Sielaff from being torn to pieces. While walking home the girl stopped to pick flowers near a hidden cable used to pull cars to the storage plant. She fell on the cable, which started to move, and drew her into the spokes of a wheel whose revolutions broke both her legs, and was drawing her to certain death when the 6 o'clock whistle blew and the machinery was stopped.

Thomas J. McCoy, former chairman of the Republican Tenth District Congressional Committee, and formerly one of the most prominent bankers and politicians in Indiana, who on June 18 was sentenced to an indeterminate term of from one to three years for embezzling the funds of the bank which he and his father conducted at Rensselaer, was released from the Indiana State Prison, having completed the maximum time of his term. McCoy has gone to Chicago, where he expects to enter the live stock business.

Grover Anderson, arrested at Goshen for desertion from the army, protested his innocence and proved an alibi. He had not enlisted for the period named. When shown a photograph of the deserter he said it was Lou Lynn, of Ligonier, a former comrade of Anderson's in the National Guard. Lynn enlisted at Elkhart, giving the name of Anderson. It is alleged he deserted from B troop, Fourth cavalry, at Ft. Atkins. An officer has been sent to Mishawaka to arrest Lynn, who, it is thought, is employed there. Anderson has been released.

Herman Wendt, who was elected a member of the City Council at Peru last fall, to serve an unexpired term, has tendered his resignation, to take effect at once. He has come to the conclusion that a business man in Peru has no business being a member of the Council. At the present time, while the city's books are being examined by experts, people are promiscuously alleging city officers are dishonest. Rather than have his good name besmirched Mr. Wendt said he would quit serving on the Council. "I don't have to stand for it, and I won't," he said.

While the 3-year-old son of Charles Youngman, of East Mt. Carmel, was playing around some timbers a heavy piece fell on the child's bare foot, slicing off the great toe.

Ollie Kolb and Edward P. Downey, of Princeton, are entitled to the prize for the biggest catch of fish so far this season. At Long Pond they caught 241 croppies in five hours with hook and line and they assert they could have broken all records had they had more bait.

Four Berkshire sheep belonging to Fred Alexander, west of Petersburg, averaged eighteen pounds of wool each, which was sold at 18 cents a pound. It was the highest average weight in the county.

Mrs. Anna Sanders, aged 98, mother of the wife of W. P. Blair, the brick paving manufacturer of Terre Haute, died from a fall which broke her shoulder. She was widow of John F. Sanders, twice grand master of Indiana Odd Fellows.

During a funeral service at Park cemetery in Greenfield, A. B. Thomas observed several honey bees clustered about the urn of a monument. After the funeral he went to his home, obtained a hive, returned to the cemetery and hived a colony of fine bees.

Refused the use of any of the churches in Elberfeld, for commencement exercises, the High school of that place gave its commencement at Heldt's Hall. The pastors of the churches said it would be "sacrilegious to permit paid entertainments to be held in the churches."

At the home of John Harger, in Noblesville, he and his sister, Mrs. Jane Gray, of Iola, Kan., who had mourned each other as dead for fifty-four years, were reunited. They were separated when children, one going with the father and the other with the mother. Mrs. Gray recently heard a man named Harger was living in Noblesville, and he identified a juvenile photograph of himself which she mailed him.

Bad luck is pursuing the family of James Horrall, a prominent Hells Neck farmer. Mr. Horrall broke his arm in brushing away a fly on his nose by accidentally releasing a lever on a lifting jack which held up a wagon. Jerauld, a 16-year-old son of Mr. Horrall, suffered a broken leg when the horse he was riding tumbled into a ditch and fell on the rider. The boy was going to a revival meeting.

Arza Shafer, who had charge of the electric light plant at Arcadia, was killed by electricity at his home. The town receives its current from the Noblesville Light and Power Company, and the switch with which the current is turned off and on is in Shafer's home. He was standing on a stepladder at the time, turning the current off, when he came in contact with a live wire. Death was instantaneous. Shafer was 32 years old and leaves a widow and one child.

A young woman of about twenty summers came to see a lawyer in Nashville a few days ago in regard to obtaining a divorce. They talked over the case, and he advised her that they would probably have no difficulty in getting a decree on the grounds of non-support, and that it was likely to be a default case. She then asked him his fee, and he told her it would cost her $40. "Well," she said, "mother has got three divorces and I have got two for $25 each, and that's all I'm going to pay for this one."

Frank M. Allison, former trustee of Adams Township, was peacefully sleeping at his country home, two miles north of St. Paul, a few nights ago, when a large rat ran up on the bed and bit him on the head. Mr. Allison is now considering the advisability of protecting himself by having a bodyguard of fierce Maltese or Angora cats to watch while he sleeps. No molly-coddle pussies are desired by him. He will draw the line on nice, pet Angoras or lazy Persians. Quarrelsome, striped alley cats, his friends say, are what he needs to clean out the rats.

In the arrest of Walter Parisho, aged 28 years, and a painter by trade, at his home, southeast of Columbus, the officers believe they have solved the mystery of some of the robberies there. Parisho was found hiding under a pile of canvas in his barn and was arrested by Sheriff Cox. On the way to jail he confessed to having stolen three bicycles. The first of these wheels was stolen about eighteen months ago, and the police declare the man has stolen a bicycle almost every month since that time. A wagon was sent to his home and a load of bicycles and bicycle parts brought to Columbus.

Attired in men's clothing, her masquerade being so deceiving as to defy detection, Miss Sylvia Daily, 18 years old, who says she lives at Alexandria, was arrested by the police at Richmond in company with Clarence Wells, 21 years old, who also gave Alexandria as his place of residence. Miss Daily told a strange story to the police, one that is deeply romantic, but one which did not have such an ending as the girl's fondest hope had been. She said she and Wells were in love and decided to elope from Alexandria. They were practically penniless, however, and decided that in order to get money to launch their matrimonial ship that both should contribute their labors. Wells is a boiler maker by trade and the girl offered to don masculine attire and become his helper wherever he might find work.

Earlham College at Richmond in its semi-centennial commencement exercises, conferred the degree of bachelor of science on Wilbur and Orville Wright, who received their early education there.

Lewis M. Murphy, once a wealthy resident of Hope, but now a man possessed of little property, is in jail at Columbus at the request of his wife, who feared he would do her bodily harm. Murphy had been drinking and was arrested.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

Business shows prompt response to the more seasonable weather and broadening of demands in the leading industries. Heavy financial operations in part account for the sustained high level of payments through the banks, but there is a notably better absorption of money for commercial use, together with a discount rate, which favors enterprise. Less complaint arises as to the course of dealings in the prominent retail lines, there being improved absorption of light weight apparel and general merchandise and an adequate reduction of stocks here and in the country. Wholesale dealing is well maintained in the staples, bookings showing further increase for fall deliveries of dry goods, footwear, suits and clothing. Improvement is also seen in the buying of furniture, carpets and draperies.

The general demand for food products, jewelry, art wares and sporting goods makes a substantial advance. Heavy contracts are booked for future outputs in iron, steel, wood and leather working, the principal products now drawing upon capacity closer to the normal, while further progress is made in machinery and hands employed. Track needs furnish considerable tonnage for the rail mills, quite a portion being for South America. The demand for light rails is the best in almost two years. The conversion of raw materials exhibits expansion and the prices are very firm for pig iron, lumber, minor metals, hides and wool.

Bank clearings, $282,057,748, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1908 by 28 per cent and compare with $243,541,754 in 1907. Failures reported in the Chicago district number 26, against 21 last week, 33 in 1908 and 22 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 9, against 4 last week, 9 in 1908 and 9 in 1907.—Dun's Weekly Review.

NEW YORK.

The tendency is still toward improvement, the general crop situation, manufacturing industry and bookings for fall showing further gains, but irregularities of weather still retard the fullest development of retail trade and thereby affect re-order business with jobbers.

In industrial lines the tendency is toward further expansion of operations. Numerous early cuts in wages have been restored and employment is more widely diffused. The building trades probably lead in volume of activity, but there are still complaints that lumber is not selling as freely as expected.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with June 17 were 213, against 197 last week, 254 in the like week of 1908, 165 in 1907, 173 in 1906 and 157 in 1905. Business failures for the week in Canada number 28, against 29 last week and 23 in the same week of 1908.—Bradstreet's.

According to Secretary Wilson of the Department of Agriculture, there is little excuse for a man being out of work this time of the year. Secretary Wilson has just returned to Washington from a trip through the West where he has found a great shortage of hands on the farms of this country. This too, comes at a time when the cities are reported to be overrun with men who are out of work. Truly the fascinations of the sidewalks are great.

To frame a measure bearing upon any important governmental problem so perfect in expression as to defy criticism, or easily to overcome it when made by experts, is not an easy thing by any means. In the matter of the corporation tax, however, there is every reason to believe that we will get a law clearly expressed and one that will be able to pass mustier in the courts if taken there. Not only is President Taft, the father of the corporation tax measure, a lawyer of the first class, but his advisers in this matter, Mr. Wickersham, Mr. Knox, Mr. Root, and several others, are known to be the best qualified lawyers in the country to decide upon this or any other legal question. Already solutions have been found to the problems which so sorely perplexed the Republican members of the Finance Committee in connection with his amendment, as the result of a series of conferences being held at the White House between the President and his advisers. While it is explained that the solutions are not absolutely final, it is known that they are so nearly final as to need very little material change.

The provisions of the "Taft amendment", to date, have been summarized as follows: All corporations will be subjected to a tax of 2 per cent on their net earnings above $5,000 a year, except that the funds necessary to pay interest on bonds shall be deducted from such net earnings. Bonds, as defined in the provision exempting the funds necessary to pay the interest thereon, do not include income or debenture bonds, or bonds into which the capital stock has been obviously converted, or any bonds in excess of the capital stock of the insuring company. National and State banks will be subject to the same tax as other corporations, except that in the case of national banks there shall be deducted from the income tax they are required to pay the amount of the tax they pay on their circulation. All corporations will be required to submit to the collector of internal revenue a detailed statement of their gross receipts, operating expenses, and any interest they are required to pay on bonds. Of course where the net earnings fall below $5,000 no tax will be imposed. This feature insures the opportunity for federal inspection which the President deems so important.

just entering into womanhood, often suffer much pain and misery during the change of their physical organization. Many women will tell you their female trouble started during that trying period, and has clung to them ever since.

Cardui is a friend to young girls, as well as to women of all ages. It has been found to help women during their trying periods by relieving pain and restoring disordered organs to health.

Take CARDUI

Mrs. Mary Hudson, Eastman, Miss., writes: "While staying with me and going to school, my young sister was in terrible misery. I got her to take a few doses of CARDUI and it helped her at once.

"I have taken Cardui myself and believe I would have been under the clay had it not been for that wonderful medicine."

Try Cardui. It will help you. For sale everywhere.

No Rest
Day or Night

"I would lay awake for hours without any apparent cause, or dream terrible dreams which would bring on extreme spells of nervousness. After taking Dr. Miles' Nervine and Tonic for awhile I could sleep well, and the nervous spells have left me." MISS ALMA HUG, R. R, No. 4, Canal Dover, Ohio.

Without sleep the nervous system soon becomes a wreck, and the healthful activity of all the organs obstructed. Restful, body-building sleep accompanies the use of Dr. Miles' Nervine because it soothes the irritable nerves, and restores nervous energy. When taken a few days according to directions, the most restless sufferer will find sleep natural and healthful. Get a bottle from your druggist. Take it all according to directions, and if it does not benefit he will return your money.

Will Build Addition.

A special meeting of the stockholders of the Chute & Butler Piano Company of Peru, Ind., was held last week and it was decided to erect a large brick addition to the factory and install additional machinery, all of which the company states is necessary on account of increasing business. The new officers of the company are: President, T. W. Butler; vice president, B. H. Bouslog; secretary and treasurer, H. E. Chute. These officers and R. A. Edwards and I. S. Hudsell constitute a board of directors

At Peru, Indiana, a city of 15,000 inhabitants, may be found situated on a belt line connecting with the Wabash Railroad, the Chicago, Cincinnati & Louisville Railroad, and the L. E. & W. division of the New York Central lines, the substantial, modern and extensively equipped plant of The Chute & Butler Co., the birthplace of the Chute & Butler piano. The necessity for the new building has arisen because the Chute & Butler pianos are good all the way through; and stay good through the passing years.—May issue of the Presto.

Young Couple Wedded

THAYER—JONES.

Thursday's Journal Gazette.

A beautiful wedding, befitting so fair and lovely a bride, took place last evening at 8 o'clock at the residence of Mr. F. L. Jones, of Hougland Avenue, when his daughter Bessie became the bride of Mr. Chas. F. Thayer, jr., of Charlotte, N. C., in the presence of relatives and the most intimate friends. As the guests arrived they were welcomed by Mr. Jones, father of the bride, her aunt, Miss Hatch, and the groom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Thayer, of St. Joe, Ind., and an aunt, Miss Flint. The house was beautiful with a profusion of flowers arranged by Miss Flick. The reception room was in white, with vases of white gladiola, and snowy snapdragon, and graceful sprays of asparagus vine curtained the doorways and windows of the hall, reception room and living room, where the marriage service was read by the Rev. C. Travis, of the Wayne Street Methodist church. A rustic basket in the hall held white carnations and plumosus and wall vases filled with white blossoms, snowy snap-dragon and bride roses made the doors and windows of the ceremony room a mass of beauty and bloom. Palms and "mock orange" blossoms filled the corner of the room where the marriage vows were spoken and a colonial shower of bride roses and plumosus completely hid the chandelier. Miss Ida Baldwin, of Erie, Pa., played the wedding march by Mendelssohn announcing the approach of the bridal party. The bride entered with her father, and was met in the living room by the groom and his best man, the bride's brother, Ralph Jones. The wedding gown was exceedingly handsome and was fashioned in a simple mode that became the slender figure of the girlish bride. White satin duchess composed the gown, which was princess, with real hand-made princess lace for trimming. Instead of a veil a chaplet of rosebuds was worn in the hair and the bridal bouquet was a shower affair of roses. Following the extension of felicitations a buffet supper was served in the dining room, which was in pink. Over the table, handsomely laid in cluny, was a shower decoration of pink sweet peas and a quaint basket of pale pink was tied with an immense chou of palest pink gauze and held sweet peas of the same exquisite pink. Silver filagree hoods lined in pink capped the candles at the four corners of the table. Jars of pink roses and snap-dragon stood on buffet and small tables and the mantel was banked with hampers of whitmanii ferns, pink roses and sweet peas. Mrs. Alex Reid, of Richmond, a cousin of the bride, presided at the coffee urn and Miss Florence Hatch, also a cousin, served the salad. Miss Carrie Snively, Miss Mabel Hatch and the Misses Dorothy and Beatrice Kell assisted in the dining room. Guests from a distance included the grooms parents and aunt, Mr. Isaac Baldwin and Miss Ida Baldwin, of Erie, Pa.; the Misses Florence and Ruth Hatch, of Union City, Pa.; the Misses Bohman, of Hartford City; Mrs. Reid, of Richmond; Miss Green, of Albion; Mrs. Ogden Pierce, jr., of Chicago. For the seashore trip which Mr. and Mrs. Thayer will take the bride will wear a grey green three-piece traveling costume with embroidered linen batiste guimp, and with this she will wear a smart hat of grey green with trimming of foliage and chrysanthemums. After their trip Mr. and Mrs. Thayer will go to Charlotte, N. C., where they will commence house-keeping. The bride is a graduate of the Fort Wayne high school and is a young woman of charm and refinement. Mr. Thayer met his bride at the time that his family was located in Ft. Wayne and both young people graduated in the same class at high school. From preparatory here the groom went to Boston School of Technology, where he took an engineering course and is employed as a machinery expert.

Mr. Chas. Rhoads and wife of the County Line were Thursday guests of C. B. Leighty and wife.

A Warm Ball Game

One of the most strenuous and exciting ball games ever pulled off on the St. Joe diamond was played on the school house grounds Saturday afternoon between the Harlan "Cubs" and the St. Joe "Infants." The "Infants" walloped the "Cubs" in a closely contested score of 30 to 9 in seven innings The "Infants" outclassed the "Cubs" in everyway but avordupois.

The grand stand (the wood pile) was one mass of human beings, while the bleechers was lined with enthusiastic fans.

The real fun started when Casey lined out a home run with three men on bases and which so thoroughly rattled the "Cubs" that they almost flunked at the quarter stretch. But when Rastus fanned out in the second the "Cubs" took courage and hit a few fowls in the third. Bob made so much noise with his feet in running bases that the first baseman got on the blink and couldn't catch a cold. Stub did a few stunts with the bat and with the ball in the field. Dutch walked around the bags a few times like he was going to an Irish picnic. Runt stumbled up in the seventh and dclared that he was as dizzy as a goat in running around the bases and didn't know whether he was coming or going. Polly came along with his share of rides on the merry-go-round and caught a few hot ones in the field.

The "Infants" did the act with seven men while their opponents had their full quota. Such close games as this will revive the old time interest in baseball in St. Joe.

RIVERVIEW EXPOSITION.

Chicago's Greatest Amusement Enterprise Completed at a Cost of $5,000,000.

None of Chicago's other marvelous achievements equal the great amusement enterprise it has just launched, RIVERVIEW EXPOSITION.

This exposition surpasses everything of its character since the original World's Fair. Five million dollars was expended to make it a crowning gem in Chicago's coronet of beautiful parks. Last season 7,600,000 persons visited the exposition. This year it will accommodate 10,000,000. A trip to Chicago would be incomplete without a visit there.

RIVERVIEW EXPOSITION surpasses Caesar's ancient Circus Maximus where 5,000 dancers entertained Rome. Five thousand dancers could be lost in any one of its courts, esplanades, causeways or wooded groves. That many show girls, trick riders, Indians and cowboys are used in its "Frontier Day Fetes" alone.

Twice as many are accommodated in the amphitheater, where Mexican bull fights occur. Wild bulls and daring Toreadors daily enact thrilling contests for life and death. A Spanish band of 100 pieces discourses national music. Many military bands render open air concerts. The industrial exhibit includes wireless telegraphy, flying machines, dirigible balloons, aeroplanes and other mechanical marvels.

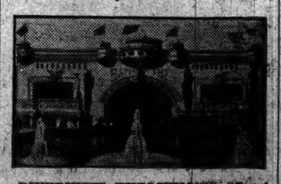
RIVERVIEW EXPOSITION'S matchless attraction is "The Creation." This stupendous scenic spectacle animated by Biblical characters of the Garden of Eden, is destined to attract world-wide attention. It is the product of the genius of E. W. McConnell, builder of several world's fairs, and his staff of a hundred artists.

The scene is the Valley of the Euphrates, where tradition locates Eden. Awed spectators view as near to its reproduction as man may conceive. The great religious drama closely follows the Scripture.

"There is first a void, then darkness, dawn and light; separation of the sky, the earth and the waters; the beginning of life in the air and the waters, birds and fishes, creeping and crawling things, celestial anthems of unseen spirit bands; the creation of Adam and Eve, their temptation, transgression and expulsion by Angel Gabriel, who drives them forth with a flaming sword."

A great $25,000 pipe organ intones appropriate music. Its deep tubes produce thunder, and its flute-like notes the mimicry of forest small life. Flashes of lightning and angry storms are made by electrical and water effects. Space forbids an adequate description of this magnificent spectacle.

Another great novelty is "The Races," an English panorama. Fifty horses attached to chaises race over the highway to Coventry.



RIVERVIEW EXPOSITION'S "Court of Honor" has never been equaled since the Ancient Hanging Gardens of Babylon. Its center is a lagoon of crystal water, through which flash myriads of silver and gold fish. The limpid edges are fringed with emerald lawn set in rows of stately Lombardy poplars. Cascade fountains play prismatic sprays high overhead and cooling mists float downward into the lagoon. Fantastic facades and white pavilions gleam through the trees as a marble setting for the beautiful landscape.

"Over Niagara Falls" reproduces on a mammoth scale the famous waterfalls.

The inspiring strands of great bands, softer tones of orchestras, sounds of merriment from joyous throngs, sunlit waters and foresetry, gay show-places, the whirr of aerial cars and flying machines, whistles of miniature railroads, vocalization of the animals of "Circle D Ranch," chanting Indians, the familiar "rooting" enthusiasts in the baseball park, the silent onward movement of the river that courses through the great park and millions of activities that impart pleasure, mystery and delight, make RIVERVIEW EXPOSITION a place of magic, the like of which the world has never seen.

A WHOLE YEAR FOR $1.00

That's what you can do for some friend—send him THE ST. JOE NEWS fifty-two times for only a dollar.

Better than a letter, because it gives ALL the home news each week; there is positively no token you could offer which would make a home so happy in your remembrance as this newspaper mailed to some distant relative or friend.

We are making it just as good as it possibly can be done for $1.00. In fact, lots of publishers have raised to $1.50 on not so creditable a paper as this—and we tell you frankly that when you plank down your dollar on our table for a friend, you'll get your money's worth. This is a good copy to start with. We'll save an extra one until Monday. Yes?

Letter From California

Through the kindness of Miss Josephine Carnes we are able to print a letter from Miss Gladys Paff of Long Beach, California.

June 16th, '09.

Dear Cousin:-

I will write a few lines to you this afternoon. I have company here from Cedarville, Mr. Edwin Paff and we have been going around taking in the sights, yesterday was the most interesting trip we have taken yet. There were six of us, Miss Edna Paff, Mr. Merton Elwiss of Los Angles, Mr. Edwin Paff, my mother, father and myself. We went on what is known as the Baloon Route. We left LosAngles at 9:40 a. m., with us was a very jovial guide which made it much more pleasant for us. While passing through Los Angeles we saw many large and beautiful buildings among these were the Polytechnic High School and the Hope Hospital, the largest in southern California. Leaving Los Angeles we went to the coast. The land around Los Angeles is used for gardening which is carried on by the Chinese and Japanese. Farther on a large amount of barley is raised and cut green for hay, some fields of barley covers five or six hundred acres.

Coming to the coast we reached the city of Plata Del Rey, but we did not stop as we were coming back that way. We went south along the water for about nine miles to the city of Redonda. Here we made our first stop. Our guide took us through the large hotel here we had our pictures taken, we then went down to the docks where large steamers were unloading lumber, we watched them only a short time, as our car was ready to go again but only for a short time, and we were at Moonstone Beach, we failed to find any moonstones as the Mexicans and Spaniards keep them picked up to sell. Leaving this place we did not stop until we got back to Plata Del Rey, we ate a lunch here, there is not much to see here excepting a large still water lagoon.

From here we went to Venice of America, the greatest and unique resort in California. Broad canals covered with gondolas and bordered by Venetian Villas are found east of the trolley way, while colonnades, arcades, large auditoriums, dancing pavilions, Oriental exhibits, and the ship hotel, which is a large ship raised out of the water, are found out Windward Air and the pier. We found awaiting us the Miniture railroad, the engine is not as high as a man and the cars are like the seats of a roller coaster. This little train took us a two mile trip around the city and over beautiful canals. We then went with our guide to the large Aquarium where we saw almost every living thing to be found in the sea. After spending sometime here we left this beautiful place for Ocean Park.

Here we found one of the largest bath houses along the Pacific coast also Japanese and Chinese gambling houses. Ping Pong is the principal game. At Santa Monica our next stop we found a sight which is not found anywhere else in California, the camera obscure, which is a round building with a camera on the top, and a table covered with common white oil-cloth, the camera reflects everything on the cloth that is going on along the beach and about town, our guide told us that the women came in here and stand by the hour watching their husbands on the outside.

Leaving Santa Monica we came to Port Los Angeles, the pier here is nearly one mile long. Around this place we found large palisades and beautiful parks. Here we left the ocean and went east, after a short ride we came to the National Soldiers Home which contains 780 acres of choice land. They have an enrollment of 3800 soldiers, they do all their own cooking, washing and take care of the grounds. The hospital here accomodates 600, and is full all the time. This is the only place they have anyone employed, the death average is about three a day. There are 2200 buried in their cemetery, the soldiers are buried with military honors. The body is taken to the cemetery on a cannon. Leaving here we passed through the largest oil district of Southern California. Some of these wells run five hundred barrels per day. Farther on we passed through rich farming lands, where lima beans are raised on a very large scale, also olives, lemons, walnuts, oranges and figs.

The city of Hollywood, the last city of importance we passed, has fine homes, the wealthy people of Los Angeles live here. It also has a queer looking place, a bachelor's home, it has no eaves on for he doesn't believe in eaves (Eves.) Coming in Los Angeles we went through the oldest part of the town, it is now occupied by Mexicans. This brought us to our journey's end. This trip is one, no one can afford to miss, when you come we will go again, and I hope you will not wait long.

HID BAD TEETH OF EMPRESS

Origin of the Lace Handkerchief Ascribed to Vanity of First Napoleon's Consort.

One of the strangest facts illustrating the vanity of woman is that the lace handkerchief owed its introduction to the Empress Josephine's bad teeth. Josephine's vanity is no new subject with historians, who as a group, however, neglect the care with which she kept the world from observing that her teeth were neither ornamental nor useful. It is with Josephine's vanity as it was manifested toward Napoleon that historians are concerned, not with her instinctive care for her own appearance. She never laughed except from behind the cover of a lace handkerchief. It was a trick the meaning of which was known to every woman in France, yet so contradictory is feminine nature that it took short time for women of all degrees to give themselves to imitation. Whether possessed of good teeth or bad, the French woman in Josephine's golden days always pressed a handkerchief to her lips when she laughed, and because lace handkerchiefs were Josephine's pride they came into general use. There has been a change since Josephine's time, however, for now the rule is to show a handkerchief as little as possible. Even the daintiest linen and lace specimens are to be held from view.

PENS VALUED BY COLLECTORS

Those Used by Great Writers and Statesmen Bring High Prices at Public Sales.

The pen used by Charles Dickens just before his death, which has been sold at Messrs. Sotheby's rooms for £19 10s, must yield the palm of costliness to the well-worn gold pen, used by "Boz" for many years, which found a purchaser some time ago for over £40.

At the sale of the Dalhousie collection a quill pen used by Wellington when writing to Queen Victoria in 1844 brought only 5½ guineas; while one of Sir Walter Scott's pens, selected by Lord Dalhousie in 1829 from Scott's writing table at Abbotsford, only realized three guineas more.

Among the most valuable pens in the world are one owned by Mr. Isaac Reed of New York, carved from a portion of George Washington's lensbox, and used by Lincoln when president, and the quill of a golden-eagle's wing, the property of the Empress Eugenie, with which the treaty of Paris was signed in 1856.—London Tit-Bits.

Ending a Letter.

The simplicity of "yours" as a letter ending would have astounded Jeremy Taylor, whose letters to John Evelyn often wind up with perfect triumphs of complexity in this respect. His best is, "Believe me that I am, in great heartiness and dearness of affection, Dear Sir, your obliged and most affectionate friend and servant, J. Taylor." On other occasions he was "Your most affectionate and endeared friend and servant," or "Your very affectionate friend and hearty servant." Even in his shortest perorations of the kind the "affectionate" and the "servant" are always the two indispensable words. Probably no man, woman or child would combine these two at the end of a letter today.

TEN LITTLE FIRE CRACKERS

Ten little firecrackers, looking fit and fine;
One dropped off the bunch—then there were nine.

Nine little firecrackers, awaiting their fate;
One became a squizzer, then there were eight.

Eight little firecrackers (three shy of eleven).
One lost its fuse, and there remained seven.

Seven little firecrackers lying on the bricks,
A goat swallowed one and overlooked six.

Six little firecrackers glad to be alive,
Water wetted one but never touched five.

Five little firecrackers in readiness to roar;
One proved noiseless, reducing them to four.

Four little firecrackers waiting lit to be;
One's still waiting, so there only were three.

Three little firecrackers not knowing what to do,
One did nothing and left more work for two.

Two little firecrackers their task almost begun;
Half of them got stepped upon, leaving just one.

One little firecracker, bound to make good,
Blew off baby's fingers as well as it could.

Winning a Goddess

"Celebrate? Of course we can't celebrate in this town. We can't do nothing until we get together." Postmaster Haston threw away his cigar impatiently and turned to the group of villagers.

"Maybe that's so, but it ought not to be. Just because the cattlemen live in the north end and the land owners in the south they ought not to quarrel," replied Harry Morse, son of Banker Morse, and just home from college.

"We'll get up our own then," suggested somebody, "and let's meet tomorrow night. Fourth of July will be here in a week."

Harry on his wheel met Led Norton, the son of the owner of Hat Six ranch, on horseback a day later and the two young men rode side by side across the level plain for a time. Harry told his companion of the arrangement.

"That's all right," was the reply. "The north end is goin' to perform, too. These old fogies may fight if they want to, but we won't be so foolish. We can't help it, of course, but let's go in for some fun out of it anyhow."

"I'm with you. We are to have a goddess of liberty in a flag dress and a golden crown. You can't guess who it is to be."

"That homely Miss Lyons, of course. She always forces herself to the front."

"Wrong—Miss Dorine Vandele."

"Why, her father is worth half a million."

"Well, she will do anything for me," with a satisfied air.

"Oh, ho, that's it, is it?" and the cattle king-to-be rode away. In his heart was a little bitterness, for Dorine was to him something better than the rest of the girls of the town, north or south, and he did not like at all the tone of his companion's expression.

So North Mayville prepared for its parade and speeches, and South Mayville did the same. Harry and Led met often and exchanged notes as to the progress of the work. It was to be a very bitter rivalry.

For days the two sections of the town were excited. The tales of the doings of "the other side" were related with great exaggeration. Dorine heard them and wondered if her party was to be so very much outshone.

"They tell me that they are getting up a caricature of me," she said to Harry.

"They would not dare," was the eager response. "If they did I would punish the author myself."

"Who is in charge of the other side?"

"Led Norton, of course."

Dorine's color heightened, but Harry did not notice it. He was at last rewarded by securing her promise that she would act the principal part in the parade. He went away wondering how he could arrange it so that he might be near her on the glorious occasion.

On the eve of the important day there was a gathering in the back room of the Cattlemen's Club. Around the table sat six of the largest owners of stock on the range. They talked of the morrow.

"I am in favor of knocking them out once for all," Colonel Norton was saying. "That side of the town has got to be wiped out eventually or our property will be worthless. Let's scare their old parade out of sight and let them see that we are running the town."

Some objection was raised, but in the end the worthies were all satisfied with a plan that promised dire trouble for the neighboring burg. But only the six cattle barons knew of it when the morning dawned. The rivalry of Western towns does not permit of much confidence or exchange of courtesies.

There was another conference that night, but the cattlemen did not know of it. Only two were in it—Harry and Led. When they parted it was with a laugh and a merry call from the former: "It will be fun for all of 'em."

Independence Day dawned with the beauty of the prairie skies shining over the town. It was a day for the young to rejoice in and for the old to be thankful for. Mayville was astir early and there was not a resident who did not feel that he was interested in the celebration, both for the purpose of making for his side the best showing possible and to outdo the opposition. The rival parades started at 10 o'clock.

The two young men were the respective marshals of the day and each guided his troops as best he could through the crowds that filled the streets. The south enders were gorgeous in their finery from the stores. The Goddess of Liberty rode on a float all by herself and the horses were gayly fitted out for the occasion with ribbons and bunting. The north end had a more sedate, but more expensive aggregation. It had in line all the cowboys of the ranch owners and there were some fancy riders among them who could and did make the onlookers wonder at their skill.

As the bands played and drowned out the noise of each opposition company the two marshals of the day led the lines toward a tree-lined avenue and then with a quick turn brought them out plump against each other in the broad street! It was the most exciting time of the town's history. The men were mad and the women indignant—the children alone were happy. They saw two parades instead of one.

But suddenly something else happened. Out of the grove that hid a stable sprang a number of men with guns. They leaped into the road and fired them with deafening reports. It was intended to frighten the south enders and it did. It also frightened the others, for the parades were there together.

"My stars, what a panic," exclaimed Colonel Norton. "I wish we had not done it."

Well he might. The teams went here and there, out of the control of the drivers. Then one was seen running down the street—it was the one with the Goddess of Liberty. Behind it went two riders—Harry and Led. It was a race for a life. The two young men were well mounted, but they had swift horses to catch. At the end of the road was a hill and down at the bottom a bridge. Their time was short. On one side rode one and on the other his rival. Now both realized that they were to test the love of the woman they both admired.

Dorine clung to the wagon, which pitched and wavered, alone on the vehicle.

"Here," shouted Harry, "jump to me and I will hold you!"

"Here," put in Led, in that strong tone of his, "let me catch you! I'll come alongside."

She looked from one to the other. Even in the terror of the position she saw something of the situation and wished for an instant that she could escape making a choice before the crowd. But a look ahead told her that that was impossible—now was her time.

The hill was nearer and nearer. The people were wondering why she did not leap, for they saw it was impossible for the riders to stop the team. Suddenly she satisfied them. With an abandon that showed how strong was her faith, she threw herself far from the wagon—toward Led Norton.

The young cattleman was ready for the duty of the minute. He reached out his strong right arm and as she came to him threw it around her waist. With a quick motion he brought her to the saddle and then turned his horse back toward the center of the crowd.

"She jumped into the arms of a north ender!" exclaimed a dozen of her friends, "for shame!" But Dorine seemed not to care. She smiled at them when she rode back with Led's arm around her, and Harry was glad that he went on to catch the team and was not there to see.

"That was a smart trick of yours," said Mr. Norton to his son, a day or two after.

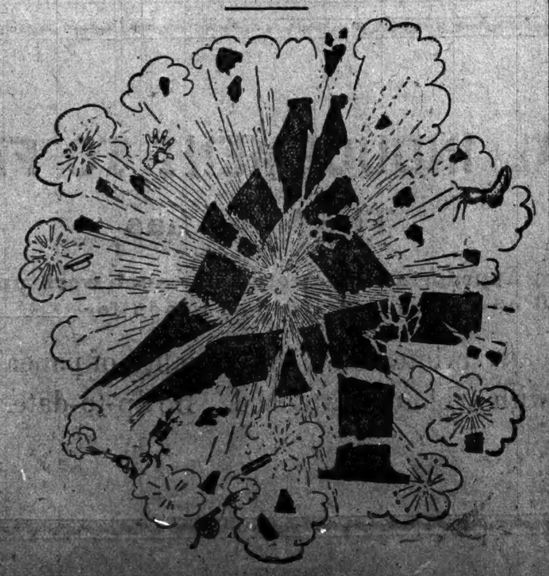
"Not so smart as that of yours and the rest in trying to frighten and break up the south enders' parade," was the reply. "It did good in two ways; it won me a wife and put the two towns on a friendly basis."

"What do you mean, sir? A wife—and friends!"

"Miss Vandele promed me to marry me as we rode back from the runaway and the people were so thoroughly mixed by the fright that they will quarrel no more. A marriage between the two leading families will help straighten things, too, don't you think?"

Mr. Norton did not say what he thought—perhaps he did not think anything fit for expression. As for his son he was more than satisfied. He had won a goddess, as he put it, and had healed a neighborhood quarrel, and that was glory enough for one Fourth of July.

CELEBRATING!



THE POPULAR PULPIT

SAVING TRUTH.

By Henry F. Cope.

"The truth shall make you free."—John 8: 32.

One of the greatest difficulties in religious thinking is that its explanations tend constantly to become its laws. It is hard to keep its thought flexible, vital, and so developing. Every age tends to settle back on the descriptions of the vision of the age before it and declare that nothing may be seen beyond.

The creeds are but the definitions and analyses attempted by the past. They are accounts of what men were able to see and tell of their thoughts of the ways of the infinite among men. They differed because no two men can occupy precisely the same point of view. But the intellectually slothful quickly seized such descriptions and set them up as final; they saved them the labor of looking farther into truth.

Every creed has been at some time the rankest kind of heresy. It owed its vitality to that fact; when all can chant it without dissent, it ceases to have any power. It has memories but no vision; it recites history but it offers no prophecy.

Then new heretics arise. They are the men who tell not what their fathers saw but what they are trying to see for themselves. They dare to tell the truth of to-day in the terms of to day. Whenever you dare to do that you may be certain to hear the stormy protests of those whose slumbers are disturbed by these new sounds.

No new truth is at first welcome to many. Old leaders will fight it bitterly because it seems to them to necessitate their doing their thinking all over again, and usually they are too old or have too long fallen out of the habit of thinking to contemplate that process with any pleasure. Their followers simply echo their alarms because they are told either to do so or be damned.

There are two types of mind everywhere—those that crystallize an idea and those that fertilize it. Some view of truth comes to the first type, and it is immediately packed away in precisely the form in which it first appeared. It cannot be changed; it must either stay that way or be utterly shattered. That mind makes such a form a fetich.

The other type of mind receives truth as a living thing; its ideas are ever developing; each vision promises larger views. The explanation that seems to satisfy to-day is held as tentative always; it must grow in order to explain the larger facts that open up to-morrow. That mind never has a creed save as a matter of temporary record.

These two types seldom understand one another; they never sympathize. They are almost sure to clash, and the first will denounce the second as the treacherous foe of truth. Our theological battles lie between these two types of thinking, between those for whom truth is delivered in sealed, unbreakable packages and those for whom it breaks out in larger meaning every day.

You find these two types everywhere in life. No one needs even to suggest which is more valuable in all the affairs of the world, which has made possible scientific discovery and its adaptation to human comforts and usefulness. The man to whom truth is a living thing is the man who will steadily seek to apply truth to life to make it live.

That application of living truth to vital things is the all important distinction. It is that which we most need to see clearly in matters of religion. The great thing is to take such an attitude to religious truth that we shall see every vision as meaning something real, livable, as opening truth to us only as something to be realized and lived. Truth saves as it is lived. Life discovers untruth and reveals the power and glory of the true. Be what you believe and put your creed into conduct and character.

PLEA FOR OPTIMISM.

By Rev. Ernst A. Tappert.

For what is your life.—James 4: 14.

A Latin proverb says: "Art is long, life is short." But life itself is an art which must be studied. There are two schools that teach the art of life, the pessimistic and the optimistic.

Pessimists arrive at the conclusion that life is hardly worth living. That, however, is not the Christian idea of life. True Christians are optimists and believe that "all things work together for good to them that love God."

In the royal gardens of Potsdam there is an old sun dial which bears the inscription: "I count only the pleasant hours." One might envy it for this prerogative that records none of the dreary hours, but only the sunny and pleasant ones.

There are some persons that have the faculty of overlooking and forgetting the disagreeable features of life and noticing only the pleasant sides. Such a sunny mind is certainly a great blessing and there is no reason why every Christian should not have it. There are hours of perfect happiness in everybody's life—hours which reimburse for years of suffering and woe, the memory of which many years after lightens the worn face with happy smiles. But the pleasantest hours are not always the most profitable, and it is true indeed what is said in the Nineteenth Psalm, that our life's strength is labor and sorrow. There are many of the pleasantest hours which we might just as well forget and there are many among the dark hours which have left behind a lasting blessing. The most fruitful and valuable hours, those which give most impetus to the inner life, are, as a rule, not the pleasant hours of enjoyment and mirth, but the grave and serious hours, days of woe and nights of tears, times of struggle and privation, the memory of which one would not part with for any price.

The holy scripture calls life a "sowing of seed" and says: "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." A selfish life, though it be clean, is without charm and beauty. A sinful and contaminated life is still worse—remorse and self-accusation make it a hell on earth.

The only life worth living is the one of which Christ has left us an example. Devoted to the service of others, full of that all-conquering love that is strong as death, it brings light and happiness into dark places and bears that sweet and blessed fruit which is promised to all. Such a life is neither tiresome nor ever a cause of regret, but finds grace before God and man. May we all try to master this wonderful art and life will become more content, more interesting, more productive of good from day to day until at last it becomes a sweet, harmonious song to the glory of life's Creator.

IMPORTANCE OF HABIT.

By Rev. De Witt L. Pelton.

Teach me, O Lord, the way of Thy statutes and I will keep it until the end.—Psalm 119:33.

Our virtues are habits as much as our vices. Honor, courage, purity, punctuality, prayer and kindness are habits as much as are swearing, drunkenness and lying. When this truth is once perceived it makes a revolution in conduct. Morality with many consists in trying to correct evil habits rather than in striving to form good ones. Human life is largely automatic. We are in reality "walking bundles of habits." To each sort of impression we have an automatic ready-made response.

The sort of habits we are forming is therefore of the greatest importance, and we are forming habits of some kind whether we attend to them or not. We should strive, therefore, to acquire such habits as will strengthen and improve our natures.

This physical organism of ours, which is the clay which, by continual reiteration, is gradually shaped along lines which finally control the ordinary actions of life. Impressions made upon the nervous structure of the brain tend to repeat themselves until well-traveled roads are formed along which ideas frequently passing make highways of the soul. These are habits and control the life.

Bad habits may be checked and good habits formed by making what we desire habitual in our lives. Prof. James enumerates two rules in the formation of habits—first enter upon the formation of such habits with as much determination as possible in order that the initiatory force with which a habit is launched may be as great as possible; secondly, never suffer an exception to occur until a new habit is securely rooted in the life.

The religious life, like other desirable things, should be put under the domain of habit. How can we progress religiously if we live helter-skelter in a hit-or-miss fashion? Right thoughts, right emotions, right decisions in the religious life as in the daily life of busines, must be made habitual. Habit should be the rule in prayer, in church attendance, in the receiving of the holy communion, in times of meditation, in acts of kindness, in deeds of service. Only so shall we become fit followers of Him who lived in habitual prayer and whose life was spent in doing good. Contemplation of the power of habit should not make anyone despair. Even in the worst cases there is hope. History is full of examples, from St. Paul down, in which the habits of a lifetime have been broken under a supreme compelling impulse. The power of the Divine Spirit is omnipotent in human affairs. The worst prodigal can reform. Behind all our efforts there is the power of God. With all His power the habits of a lifetime can be broken and a life of new habits begun.

TUMOR OF FOUR YEARS GROWTH

Removed by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Lindley, Ind. — "Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound removed a cyst tumor of four years' growth, which three of the best physicians declared I had. They said that only an operation could help me. I am very glad that I followed a friend's advice and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, for it has made me a strong and well woman, and I shall recommend it as long as I live."—Mrs. May Fry, Lindley, Ind.

One of the greatest triumphs of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the conquering of woman's dread enemy—tumor. If you have mysterious pains, inflammation, ulceration or displacement, don't wait for time to confirm your fears and go through the horrors of a hospital operation, but try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at once.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills, and such unquestionable testimony as the above proves the value of this famous remedy, and should give confidence and hope to every sick woman.

If you would like special advice about your case write a confidential letter to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

Peasant Charity.

Havelock Ellis, in his "Soul of Spain," has revealed intimately and charmingly the temperament of the Spanish people. According to him, the Spaniard is still fundamentally primitive. In proof of his possession of the primal instincts of hospitality and charity he quotes the following anecdote from an Aragonese newspaper of a few years ago, at a time when there was much distress in Aragon.

A laborer out of work came on the highroad determined to rob the first person he met. This was a man with a wagon. The laborer bade him halt, and demanded his money.

"Here are $30, all that I have," the detained man replied.

"There is nothing left for me but robbery. My family are dying of hunger," the aggressor said, apologetically, and proceeded to put the money in his pocket; but as he did so his mind changed.

"Take this, chico," he said, handing back $29. "One is enough for me."

"Would you like anything I have in the cart?" asked the wagoner, impressed with this generosity.

"Yes," said the man. "Take this dollar back, too. I had better have some rice and some beans."

The wagoner handed over a bag of eatables, and then held out $5, which, however, the laborer refused.

"Take them for luck money," said the wagoner. "I owe you that."

And only so was the would-be robber persuaded to accept.

Men Now Candy Lovers.

But a few years ago women used to be jeered at and even reproved for their craze for goodies, and a man who was seen eating sweets was accounted a rather poor thing. Now figures are showing that the consumption of sugar is increasing, while the amount of alcohol is declining. This is explained by the fact that men of all classes eat sweetmeats much more than they did and that whenever a people eat largely of sugar they take less intoxicants.

A Real Burglar Proof Safe.

A curious modern invention is to be seen by a favored few in the Bank of England. It is claimed to be an absolutely burglar proof safe, because at night it is lowered into a sub-vault of heavy masonry and concrete.

When the safe reaches the bottom of the vault, it is fastened down by massive steel lugs, operated by a triple time lock. Until these lugs are released automatically at a fixed time no human agency can raise the safe. For breaking through the subvault and walls of stone and concrete ten feet thick, even with dynamite—well, the burglar must shake his head sorrowfully and admit that he has met his Waterloo in that safe.

WHEN YOUR BACK ACHES.

It Is a Warning That the Kidneys Are Sick and Need Help.

A bad back makes every day a dull round of pain and misery. It's a sign the kidneys are sick and cannot keep up their never-ending task of filtering the blood. Lame back, backache, dizzy spells and urinary disorders are warning that must not be overlooked.

John M. Burwick, R. F. D., Dayton, Tenn., says: "Three years ago kidney disease fastened itself on me. I failed rapidly until I had hardly enough strength to totter about. My back pained terribly, the urine passed scantily and with pain, and my legs seemed almost lifeless. I lay for three weeks in mortal agony, wishing death would end my sufferings. At this time I began using Doan's Kidney Pills, discharging the doctor. I grew better and in a month's time was out again. In two months I was as well as ever in my life."

It Was the Privilege of a Friend.

An eminent army officer has a man servant who has been with him a number of years, and who occasionally speaks his mind with a candor that, as he imagines, is warranted by his long service. A friend of the officer, who overheard the servitor's frankness, asked why such familiarity was permitted.

"Well," said the officer, "I hardly look upon James as a valet, but rather as a friend; and, as you know, it is a friend's privilege to tell you things about yourself that you hardly like to think about yourself."—Success Magazine.

A Change Explained.

"Don't they run any more accommodation trains on this line?" said the man who had been away for some time.

"Huh?" rejoined the conductor.

"I don't see any accommodation trains mentioned. Don't you stop at the small stations any more?"

"Certainly we do. But the trains that make the stops are called locals. This is a conscientious company and the word 'accommodation' might lead the public to expect too much."—Washington Star.

More to It.

The Tall Man—I admire the busy bee.

The Short Fellow—Yes; but I'd, rather be the man that superintends the hive and holds the first mortgage on the honey.

Romance and Beauty.

Kitty—What is the title of your graduation essay?

Mabel—"Behind the Alps Lies Italy." What's the title of yours?

Kitty—"Beyond the Altar Lies the Washtub."

Gave Himself Away.

Customer—Why, you haven't cleaned that coat at all. I can still see spots on it from here.

Tailor—Excuse me, but I got you mixed up with your brother, who is near-sighted.

Too Particular.

"You say Mr. Wadley is a particular friend of yours?"

"Yes, indeed. So particular that he won't lend me a penny."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Well Supported.

Bill—Are the doctors well supported in your town?

Jill—Well, two of 'em are. They married rich wives.—Yonkers Statesman.

The Party He Belonged to.

A matron of the most determined character was encountered by a young woman reporter on a leading country paper, who was sent out to interview leading citizens as to their politics. "May I see Mr. ——?" she asked of a stern-looking woman who opened the door at one house.

"No, you can't," answered the matron, decisively.

"But I want to know what party he belongs to," pleaded the girl.

The woman drew up her tall figure. "Well, take a good look at me," she said. "I'm the party he belongs to!"—Universalist Leader.

Regulating Commerce.

"What will you say to the consumer when he demands an explanation?"

"The usual thing," answered Mr. Dustin Stax.

"What is that?"

"Please remit."—Washington Star.

Welcome to Stop.

Man at Window—What are you makin' all that row about?

Tourist—I've lost my way and want to know if I can stop here for the night.

Man at Window—Stop there for the night? Of course ye can. (Slams window.)—London Tatler.

The Man on the Bridge.

From Different Viewpoints.

Anxious Mother—I cannot permit you to have such late callers. It was after 11 o'clock when Mr. Huggins left last night.

Pretty Daughter—Why, mamma, I don't see how you can class Mr. Huggins as a late caller. It was only 7:30 when he came.

Western Climate.

"The climate is considered very healthy here, I believe," remarked the tourist in Arizona.

"Yes, if you mind your own business," replied the native.—Philadelphia Record.

Cause and Effect.

"I see your hair is falling out, sir," remarked the barber, getting ready to spring the hair tonic idea on his customer.

"You don't see anything of the sort," rejoined the victim. "What you see is the sequel to a falling out between Mrs. Codgers and myself."—Tit-Bits.

Called His Bluff.

"Yes," said young Windig, boastingly, "I pass most of my time between Chicago and New York."

"That's what your cousin told me," rejoined Miss Cayenne.

"My cousin!" replied Windig. "W-what did she say?"

"She said," replied Miss Cayenne, "that you lived in a little town in Ohio."

Woman's Rights.

The Bachelor—Is it true that you are an advocate of woman's rights?

The Spinster—Yes.

The Bachelor—Then you believe that every women should have a vote?

The Spinster—Oh, no; but I believe every woman should have a voter.

To Be Sent.

The Bride—I want you to send me some coffee, please.

The Grocer—Yes, ma'am. Ground?

The Bride—No, third floor front.—Woman's Home Companion.

Not Quite the Same.

Grace—He said I looked lovely in that gown, didn't he?

Helen—Not exactly, dear. He said that gown looked lovely on you.—Brooklyn Citizen.

After His First Cup.

She—What do you think of this tea?

He—Well—er—what sort of a premium did they give away with it?

Horse and Horse.

The Village Grocer (peevishly)—Look here, Aaron! What makes you put the big apples in the top of the bar'l?

The Honest Farmer (cheerily)—What makes you comb that long scalplock over your bald spot?—Puck.

Too Old to Learn New Words.

"Why don't you try to drive that horse without profanity?"

"It wouldn't do any good," answered the canal boatman. "It ain't fair to the 'orse to ask it to start at its time o' life to learn a lot of polite words."—Tit-Bits.

Saw Some, Anyway.

She—Did you notice the lovely palms in the restaurant?

He—The only palms I saw were the waiter's.

Was Ready.

She—How old do you think I am?

He—I don't know, but I'm prepared for the worst.

Taking No Chances.

"What did Barker do when he discovered that his wife and his chauffeur had planned to elope in his car?"

"He oiled it thoroughly and put it in first class shape."—Brooklyn Life.

Catching.

"What'd you catch?

"Measles, so far."

On Hand With the Goods.

"I want a home," said the city man, "where I can see plenty of fresh green vegetables and have live stock and chickens about me."

"I've got the very thing you want," returned the enthusiastic agent; "a cozy six-room flat right next to a market house."—Washington Star.

Under a Spell.

Biggs—Your friend Meekerton seems to lead a charmed life.

Diggs—Yes; I guess his wife keeps him hypnotized.

In the Usual Way.

"I think his wife has set him on his feet."

"She had money?"

"No, in the usual way."

"In the usual way?"

"Yes; she took charge of his income and put him on an allowance."—St. Louis Post Dispatch.

WOMEN OF KOREAN COURT.

Great Reduction in Their Number—Influence They Once Exerted.

The visit of three Korean court ladies to Japan is an indication of the striking changes that have resulted from the Japanese occupation of the hermit kingdom. Two years ago there were no fewer than 1,800 ladies in waiting, now there are only 100.

This wholesale reduction naturally created consternation, and there was much lamentation among those whose services were dispensed with, the London Telegraph says. Their lot, however, does not seem to have been altogether enviable. It appears that it has been the custom to take girls into the court from the age of 10, and henceforth throughout the whole period of their natural lives they were never allowed to leave the precincts of the palace, so that they lived in absolute ignorance of the outside world.

The few who accompanied the emperor on his recent tour gave evidence of the timidity which had resulted from their long confinement, for they could hardly be persuaded to enter the train, and they finally did so with manifest trepidation.

Hitherto the influence of these ladies at court has been very great. Having constant access to the ear of the sovereign, on the one hand, and being, on the other, accessible to all the intriguing influences that prevailed in the unwholesome atmosphere of the court, their power exceeded even that of the ministers of state.

Experiments by the United States Forest Service have demonstrated that thoroughly air-dried timber has about double the strength of green timber. Moreover, in order effectively to apply preservative agents to timber it must first be seasoned, because it is very difficult to inject antiseptics in green wood. The loss of weight by seasoned timber is quite surprising. Western pine loses half its weight after three to five months' seasoning.

The railway tunnel which is being constructed under the Detroit River possesses some novel features. It will consist of two steel tubes, running side by side 42 feet below the river surface. Each tube has a diameter of 16½ feet. To receive the tubes, a trench, 48 feet wide at the bottom, is dug in the clay of the river bottom, and bedded with a grillage of steel and concrete. On this the tubes are laid. The tubes are made in lengths of 26 feet, and are joined by sleeves 17 inches in length. When completed the tubes will be embedded in concrete all round. Trains are to be run through the tunnel by electricity.

The traditional mountain of the ark always charms the imagination, as if it were the culminating point of the globe. And it is indeed a noble-looking mountain, as shown in a photograph recently made by E. A. Martel, the French geologist and explorer. Mount Ararat is becoming better known because of the growth of interest in the eastern shore of the Black Sea, which Monsieur Martel calls Russia's Riviera. Pleasure resorts, which may rival Biarritz and Monte Carlo, are springing up there along the foot of the Caucasus. Ararat is not visible from this coast, but one must go far up through rough picturesque valleys in order to reach the lofty plain over which it dominates.

A Boy's Idea of Parsons.

Not long ago a class of boys in an elementary school had an essay set the subject being "Clergymen."

This is what one youngster wrote:

Fearful Eczema All Over Baby's Face — Professional Treatment Failed—Perfect Cure by Cuticura.

"When my little girl was six months old I noticed small red spots on her right cheek. They grew so large that I sent for the doctor, but instead of helping the eruption, his ointment seemed to make it worse. Then I went to a second doctor who said it was eczema. He also gave me an ointment which did not help either. The disease spread all over the face and the eyes began to swell. The itching grew intolerable and it was a terrible sight to see. I consulted doctors for months, but they were unable to cure the baby. I paid out from $20 to $30 without relief. One evening I began to use the Cuticura Remedies. The next morning the baby's face was all white instead of red. I continued until the eczema entirely disappeared. Mrs. P. E. Gumbin, Sheldon, Ia., July 13, 1908."

NATIONAL FOOD OF MEXICANS

The Tortilla Is the Bread Used by Our Southern Neighbors—Frijoles Are Boiled Beans.

The tortilla is the ancient Indian bread of Mexico. Its only constituent is Indian corn (maize), which the women soak in lime water until the kernels are at the point of bursting, then wash thoroughly until it is free from lime, when they grind it by rubbing it on a large block of stone, specially cut for the purpose, with a smaller stone which they hold in their hands.

The operation looks very much like rubbing clothes on a washboard and is a laborious and tedious one. The lime renders the corn dough adhesive, like wheat flour dough, and it is easily patted between the hands into cakes the size and shape of an ordinary griddle. Though no salt or leaven is added fresh tortillas are exceedingly palatable.

The one other food mainstay is frijoles—ordinary beans. They are boiled to a mush and with a liberal quantity of lard are warmed as required in a flat earthen dish that answers for a frying pan. The very poor people do not always have the luxury of frijoles and when they do have them cannot always afford the lard.

English Difficult to Pronounce.

The difficulty of English for strangers does not lie in its orthography, but in its pronunciation. Abroad, people will constantly say that they can read and write English readily while unable to utter a word or to understand a word of the spoken language; as, of course, vice versa, a great many English and Americans can read and write French long before they can understand, or make themselves understood; the other languages are just as difficult for them to pronounce as English is for others. The only difference is that English stands alone with its system or lack of system, of pronunciation. When a Frenchman knows how to write German, he is at the same time able to speak the language, if not beautifully, at least so as to be understood; the same holds for a German speaking French.—Prof. Albert Schinz, in the North American Review.

All Can Work and Try.

Milton wrote: "Who best can suffer, best can do." The progress and success of the other fellow always looks easy. But only the other fellow knows all about it. We cannot all work just the same way. Brilliant minds make great leaps. They are daring and courageous. Timid ones must plod because it is their nature. The old saying, "What others have done, I can do," is not strictly true, and is misleading to the inferior intellect. A strong man can lift great weights, for he has the muscular strength. Weaker men cannot do what he has done. But they can work and try. That's about all that most of us can do.

David Andress, living east of Coburntown has sold his farm of seven acres to Wm. H. Worden of Hicksville and expects to make that his future home town some time next fall.

A Hot One

Whether you knew it or not you were hotter Monday than you have been before any time this summer. You may think you haven't suffered as much from the heat as you did Sunday, or "that hot day last week," but you will have to confess yourself mistaken, for Monday at eleven o'clock was registered the highest temperature of the year. Just ninety-one degrees Fahrenheit was the point reached by the government thermometer at eleven o'clock Monday morning. This temperature was maintained for about an hour and a half. At eight o'clock the thermometer registered eighty-five degrees. From that hour on the mercury steadily rose. Previous to Monday, the highest temperature of the summer was ninety degrees, which was reached Sunday. A week ago Sunday the record was established at eighty-nine degrees. During the whole of last week the mercury fell below eighty-six degrees only once, that being on Monday. This means that we have just passed through one of the most protracted periods of extreme heat that we have experienced in years. During the same period we have had one of the heaviest precipitations of rain in years Since the first of the month 7.18 inches of rain have fallen in the city. In the last week the rain fall totalled 2.65 inches, of which 1.12 inches fell last Friday night.

Life 100,000 Years Ago.

Scientists have found in caves in switzerland bones of men, who lived 100,000 years ago, when life was in constant danger from wild beats. To-day the danger, as shown by A. W. Brown of Alexander, Me., is largely from deadly disease. "If it had not been for Dr. King's New Discovery, which cured me, I could not have lived," he writes, "suffering as I did from a severe lung trouble and stubborn cough." To cure Sore Lungs, Colds, obstinate Coughs, and prevent Pneumonia, its the best medicine on earth. 50c and $1.00. Guaranteed by H. Milliman. Trial bottle free.

Right Under Our Nose.

Do you realize that right under our nose a business has sprung up, grown to an extent that few of us realize. We have reference to the "Spring Brook Fruit Farm", just northeast of town.

This last strawberry season Mr. Widney, owner and proprietor, handled over thirteen thousand five hundred quarts of fruit in ten days, employing on the farm during this time over one hundred and fifty different persons working at one thing and another, some picking fruit, some cultivating, some spraying, etc. And the crop was not near this season what it should have been and was last season.

Mr. Widney is a very successful berry grower, getting size and quality equalled by none, which is shown by the fact that he cannot begin to supply the demand for "Spring Brook Berries" right in the home fields of his strongest competitors which are not few by any means. His fruit goes out over a larger radius every year and when once it has reached a town it is always in demand there.

The next thing to come from the farm which is as famous as the strawberries if not more so is the "Spring Brook Cantaloupes". These are in great demand in season. When Spring Brook Melons were first placed upon the market they were as much of a drag as the average melons are, but people soon began to realize their superiority over the average melon or cantaloupe and now Mr. Widney's melon trade is as good as his strawberry trade if not better. Mr. Widney says he owes his success in this line to the selection of seed and treatment of soil.

This fall, Spring Brook will produce about 600 bushels of apples which is a small part of the full crop which would be about 15 to 20,000 bushels in a good season.

Another of the many interesting features of the farm is the onion bed of which Mr. E. Berry has charge. Most any day one can see Mr. Berry in the patch with an army of "Younguns". This is certainly a good thing for our little city as it keeps many of our boys from being idle. In fact there is no excuse for any idle hands around St. Joe, when Spring Brook is busy as Mr. Widney can hardly get enough help to turn off the large amount of work which he has to do.

Picnic a Success

The celebration at Hamilton's grove last Saturday was largely attended and the Coburntown band is to be congratulated upon their efforts to make it a success and pleasant for those attending. A dinner was served on the grounds by the Ladies Aid Society. The day was spent in sports of all kinds. The contests were lively and interesting, a number of the prizes being captured by St. Joe boys. The horseshoe pitching prize was awarded to John Milliman and Fred Hart. Potato race, foot races, greased pole, tub race, goose pulling, and sack race took up a good share of the afternoon, with the concert at noon. A stand was erected where refreshments were served. A good sum of money was cleared by the boys.

Last week we experienced some very warm weather. On Thursday one of Chris Curie's large hogs was overcome with the heat, lay down and died. It weighed over 250 pounds. That was quite a loss as hogs are high now, it being worth at least $18.00.

Those from here who attended the show at Wayne Wednesday were: Ralph Hall, Orange Draggoo, Lewis Layman, Marvin Poper, Ora Wilmot, Evan Link, the Misses Grace Sechler, Gladys Barney, Beulah Koch. Also Frank Kinsey and wife.

Another state has declared the 2 cents per mile bill unconstitutional. This time it is the great Keystone state of Pennsylvania. This will have a stimulating effect on railroad operation in this state and will probably result in unusual activity by the big trunk lines passing through that country.

A party of Auburn, Huntertown and Spencerville young women passed through Garrett Thursday morning over the T. & C. I., en route to Rome City, where they will remain a week, at a cottage, with Mrs. Will Henderson as chaperone. The party carried provisions sufficient to last the entire week, and the traction men were kept busy handling the baskets when the excursionists changed cars in Garrett. The members of the party including the chaperone were: the Misses Anna Dunebarger, Mae Slaybaugh, Minnie Hoff, Mabel Beard, Norah Beaty, Jennette Hoff, and Mrs. Will Henderson of Auburn, the Misses Gladys and Marie Fitch of Huntertown and Ethel Baker, of Spencerville.—Garrett Press.

Rush Wolf and wife, of Bloomingdale, Ohio, were guests in the Rhodenbaugh home several days last week. They came in their automobile.

The Fairview Sunday School will give a picnic near the Fairview church, Saturday, August 7th. The patronage of the public is solicited. Definite announcement of place and program later.

The harvesting of the wheat crop in DeKalb county has not started yet and will not for some time. The crop in this community is good but in some localities the crop will be heavier. The wheat is well headed and in good shape, and the wind has done but little damage, and cases of straw broken wheat are said to be rare. After the cutting begins of course it will be only a short time before the local movement of new wheat becomes general, as most of it will be down the early part of next week. Early this spring the chances for a wheat crop were small. The wheat that was sown late last fall failed to get up and the spring rains brought it on early and is now making the best wheat.

Mrs. Esther Shaffer, the widow of Henry Shaffer, died Thursday morning at 9:15 o'clock at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Ed. M. Bishop, on Ninth street, in Auburn, of heart disease, with which she had been ill for sometime. Mrs. Shaffer was 76 years of age. She formerly resided on the farm near Spencerville, but had been living in Auburn with her daughter for the last year. Her husband has been dead for eight years. Surviving is the daughter, Mrs. Bishop. Mrs. Shaffer was a member of the Methodist church, a Christian lady who was highly esteemed and who had a wide circle of friends. The funeral was held Saturday forenoon at 9 o'clock from the Bishop home in Auburn. The burial was at the cemetery at Spencerville, Rev. Erick officiating.

Killed in Auto Accident.

Thomas B. McEnroe, a New York policeman, was instantly killed and four other men were injured, one fatally, by the overturning of an automobile in which they were riding to Coney Island. The car, which had been borrowed for the trip, was going at high speed when a passenger stepped from a trolley car directly in front. A sudden twist of the steering wheel to avoid the passenger sent the automobile skidding against a curb. The car was overturned and its occupants thrown out or pinned underneath it. McEnroe's neck was broken. John Brohan, another of the riders, suffered concussion of the brain and internal injuries from which he may not recover. Olney escaped injury and disappeared. The car was wrecked.

Robbers Ride In Auto.

Three masked men went to Leland, Ill., in an automobile, dynamited the safe in the postoffice, and escaped with $5,000 in money and stamps after a fight with citizens. The men drove into town about 2 o'clock in the morning, and entered the postoffice by a rear window. A heavy charge of dynamite wrecked the postoffice building, arousing the town. A score of armed citizens attacked the robbers as they were leaving the city. Two bandits stood up in the tonneau and fired their revolvers repeatedly without effect. One robber was wounded, but all got away.

Drowns with Brother He Tried to Save.

In an effort to save his brother, Cecil Galbreath, aged 10 years, from drowning, Estel Galbreath, aged 12 years, gave up his life and both boys were drowned in the Mississinewa river near Marion, Ind. Mrs. Galbreath heard at her home that two boys had been drowned and started for the river arriving there before she learned the drowned boys were her own. The father was summoned from work and the two parents remained on the river bank encouraging the searchers for the bodies.

Grand Rapids Flyer Wrecked.

Michigan Central passenger No. 25, Detroit to Grand Rapids, known as the Grand Rapids Flyer, while running at a high rate of speed left the rails two miles east of Jackson, Mich. According to the officials of the road, the engine overturned and rolled into the ditch, the engineer and fireman escaping injury. The coaches left the rails, but remained upright on the ties. The passengers, the officials say, were considerably shaken up, but none injured.

Great Powder Mills at Hartford City.

The Dupont Powder Company proposes to make Hartford City, Ind., its western headquarters. Representatives of the company have taken options on 640 acres and bargained for the crops on the farms including the tract. The proposed plant will include its present factory, recently constructed at a cost of $100,000, and will be one of the largest manufactories of high explosives in the middle west. It will employ between 800 and 1,000 men.

Cattle Disease Kills Human.

The second human being known to have been attacked by the disease of charbon, an epidemic of which has recently killed many cattle in the South, is J. Breaux, a young farmer and residing several miles from Lake Charles, La. Breaux became inoculated after skinning a cow that had died from the disease and his condition is critical. The first victim was Theophile Bergen, whose death occurred several days ago.

Wolf in Sheep's Clothing Is Deposed.

On charges that he had been guilty of conduct unbecoming a minister of the Gospel in that he had been unduly familiar with certain women whose names were not made public, the Rev. Wm. F. Hunt, pastor of the Presbyterian church at Elizabethtown, Ind., was deposed from the office of minister of the Presbyterian church at a meeting of the Indianapolis Presbytery at the Second Presbyterian church.

WOMAN IS BLAMED FOR CRIME

Roberts, or Eastman, Declares Gage's Protege Was Struck Over Head with Wine Bottle.

Sensation after sensation has developed in the mysterious murder of Mrs. Edith May Thompson Woodill, protege of Lyman J. Gage, at St. Michaels, Md. The first was the death of Emmet E. Roberts or Robert E. Eastman, the supposed slayer, who was followed by a sheriff's posse on the Back creek at 1 o'clock Friday morning, and killed in a fusillade of bullets. Roberts died either by his own hand or the shots of the posse.

In his pockets was found a letter addressed to Miss Vinnie Braxcome, care Klaw & Erlanger, New York, in which the writer asks the girl to come to Maryland to take charge of his body and property, as he intended to commit suicide. Roberts added that he had been out in a boat with four other people, two men and two women, that all had been drunk except himself and one girl; that one of the women struck another over the head with a wine bottle and had killed her.

Mrs. Woodill's Eventful Career.

Some facts of the meteoric career of Mrs. Woodill, in whose brief life, love and romance played such a great part, have been related by an intimate friend of the slain woman who said they were told by Mrs. Woodill herself. Mrs. Woodill said she was born in Minneapolis about twenty years ago. Her mother, who called herself Mrs. Ames, died when she was about 3 years old, leaving her in utter ignorance of her parentage or forbears. Mrs. Charles H. Thompson, of McDaniel, Md., then took her and brought her up, telling her that she (Mrs. Thompson) was her mother's intimate friend, but never disclosing to her the name of her father.

When she was about 12 years of age, they went to Washington, where they lived for some time in the house of Lyman J. Gage, who took a great interest in her. When she was about 15 he sent her, with Mrs. Thompson, to Paris, where she studied music, Mr. Gage paying all expenses. On her return from Paris she went to Boston to complete her studies, and while in Boston she was married to a Mr. Caswell, who was an osteopath. When she was about 17, she went to Baltimore to continue her studies at the Peabody conservatory, leaving her husband. She was known as Miss Edith Thompson, concealing her marriage from all but a few intimate friends.

In a very short time thereafter she entered suit against Dr. Caswell for a divorce. She left Baltimore Easter time a year ago, being engaged at the time to Harry Adams of Mount Vernon, N. Y. After a brief stay in New York she went to California, where in less than thirty days after her divorce from Dr. Caswell she married Gilbert Woodill, of Los Angeles.

During her residence in Baltimore Mr. Gage sent her checks continually, some of them amounting to $1,500, and when she was married to Mr. Woodill he gave her $5,000. At the time of her death Mr. Gage was also building her a house in Los Angeles, with the understanding that he was to come and live with her and her husband.

Story of the Murder.

A few weeks ago Mrs. Woodill left her home in California to visit at the home of Capt. Thompson. She was often seen in company with Roberts, who took her for launch rides on the river. On Saturday, June 19, Roberts told Capt. Thompson that Mrs. Woodill had gone to Baltimore and would be back in a few days. Suspecting that something was wrong, Capt. Thompson gave voice to his belief that the woman had met with foul play. Roberts heard of this and disappeared. A search was made for Mrs. Woodill's body and it was found in Back river, the skull crushed and the corpse weighted with an iron post. A search of Roberts' bungalow revealed a bloody bedroom, but everything indicated that the young woman had been killed outside and the body dragged into the room.

Where and under what circumstances Eastman and Mrs. Woodill met is not known, but both are said to have been immediately attracted to each other.

The alleged slayer of Mrs. Woodill was "Lame Bob" Eastman, a Wall street broker, who failed in New York last July with liabilities of from $150,000 to $200,000. He was a broker on the Consolidated Exchange. Eastman left the city and was arrested in Chicago on complaints made by persons who had lost money through his operations. At that time he said: "There was never a more complete failure than myself. Wall street never witnessed a more complete ruin."

CALLS TWO CENT FARE ILLEGAL.

Declare Statute Unconstitutional and Enjoins Against Enforcement.

The 2-cent fare law passed by the Pennsylvania legislature in 1907 received another blow Friday when Judge Willson in Common Pleas court in Philadelphia declared the law unconstitutional. The decision was in the case of the Philadelphia and Reading Railway Company to restrain the county of Philadelphia from enforcing the law. The local courts rendered a similar decision about a year ago in a suit brought by the Pennsylvania Railroad against the county. Judge Willson holds that the law is contrary to the constitution of the United States and the county is perpetually enjoined from enforcing the act against the Reading company.

MRS. GOULD WINS HER CASE.

Granted Divorce and $36,000 a Year Alimony.

Mrs. Howard Gould won a sweeping victory in her separation suit against her millionaire husband in New York when Justice Victor J. Dowling from the bench granted her a legal separation and alimony at the rate of $36,000 a year, practically $100 a day. In voicing his decision Justice Dowling gave Mrs. Gould a clean bill so far as intoxication is concerned. He said that no proof of excessive drinking had been introduced by Howard Gould's lawyers.

The court intimated that Mrs. Gould under all the circumstances had been indiscreet in her meetings with Dustin Farnum, the actor, even though there were business relations behind them.

The decision of the court was that Howard Gould's abandonment so far as concerned the proof offered, was not only without justification in any degree, but without provocation. The only question which puzzled the justice was the amount of the alimony. He declared that the case was without precedent so far as he knew, the husband's admitted income being in excess of $750,000 a year.

The fact that Mrs. Gould had acquired $57,000 worth of jewelry at her husband's expense since the actual separation was taken into consideration by Justice Dowling. He told Howard Gould that if his wife returned to the stage, an event that he did not think likely, Gould could reopen the case with an application to have the alimony decreased.

Prior to his sailing for Europe President Gompers gave to the press a formal interview or message to the American public on behalf of organized labor. He said he would carry with him the ideal of a world-wide movement on the part of the workers to get their rights. The time was past when "Van Cleave can intimidate unionism." They would demand a solid "square deal," and would get it by force of organization and by international fraternity."

Son of Commoner Marries Miss Berger at Grand Lake, Colo.

William J. Bryan, Jr., and Miss Helen Virginia Berger of Milwaukee, were married at 8:30 o'clock Thursday morning at Kinnikinic Lodge, the summer home of Mr. and Mrs. F. D. Levering, on the west shore of Grand Lake, Colo. The wedding was a quiet affair, and only the immediate families of the couple were present. The ceremony was performed outdoors, under the great pine trees along the shore of the lake, Rev. H. S. Huntington of Crete, Neb., officiating. Miss Edna Baker of Lincoln, Neb., was maid of honor, and Samuel Berger, brother of the bride, was best man. The bridal party were gowned in white. Mr. and Mrs. Bryan, Jr., will spend their honeymoon at Grand Lake and will leave about September 1 for Tucson, Ariz., where they expect to make their home for the next two years.

DEATH OF SARAH ORNE JEWITT

Well-Known Novelist Passes Away in Maine at the Age of 59.

Sarah Orne Jewett, the well-known novelist, died in South Berwick, Me., Thursday night after a long illness from apoplexy and paralysis. She was 59 years old. She died in the house in which she was born, which has been in the possession of the Jewett family since 1740. It is a fine old colonial mansion and has welcomed within its doors many of the literary celebrities of this country and Europe. Miss Jewett's first novel, "Deephaven," was published in 1877. After that she brought out about a dozen successful stories, the last one, "The Tory Lover," appearing in 1901.

Thirty-one of the band have been killed or captured during the last thirty days, but Jikiri himself eludes capture.

Surgeons Operate on Convicted Murderer So He May Be Executed.

The execution of Joseph West of Dayton, Ohio, condemned to be electrocuted July 9 for the murder of his sweetheart, will have to be postponed because of an operation by the penitentiary physician to save his life. West has been suffering with septic poisoning in one of his knees, and it was decided that amputation alone would prevent the malady from spreading. West will not have recovered sufficiently by July 9, physicians say, to be able to go to the electric chair, and Gov. Harmon will be compelled to grant a reprieve.

Work of Congress

The Senate Thursday adopted amendments to the tariff bill increasing the duty on shoes from 15 to 20 per cent ad valorem and on sole leather from 5 to 10 per cent. The greater part of the session was devoted to speech making. Senator Beveridge, advocating his amendment in regard to the size of tobacco packages, declared the tobacco trust was making millions by keeping packages down to war time sizes notwithstanding the war tax was long ago removed. Mr. Bailey and Mr. Newlands discussed the tariff at length. On the eve of the expiration of the current fiscal year the House authorized an emergency appropriation of $10,000,000 for defraying the expenses of the thirteenth decennial census. In presenting the bill for that purpose Mr. Tawney, chairman of the committee on appropriations, explained the situation with respect to the permanent census measure still in conference and announced that unless the money was forthcoming the census bureau would be compelled to suspend all business Wednesday.

-:—:-

The Senate Friday raised the duty on scrap iron from 50 cents, as fixed in the House bill, to $2.50 a ton, increased the duty on wire nails one-quarter of a cent a pound and substituted specific for ad valorem rates on files, rasps, etc. The duty on harness was raised from 35 to 40 per cent. The increase on scrap iron called forth vigorous protests from several Western Senators, but was ordered by a vote of 42 to 28.

-:—:-

Although it devoted almost eight hours to strenuous effort in that direction, the Senate Saturday failed to conclude its consideration of the schedules of the tariff bill, and when at 5:15 o'clock an adjournment was reached there were still a number of important rates to be determined. The day, however, was full of achievement, and a number of provisions were disposed of. Among the more important questions which received attention were agricultural implements, wood pulp, cash registers, lithographic plates, laces and jute yarns. Wood pulp was placed on the free list, but the attempt to put agricultural implements in the same category failed. Senator Beveridge's amendment to cut in two the duty on cash registers was defeated. Other changes made during the day were as follows: Increasing to 2 and 4 cents a pound the duty on hemp, providing for the free importation until 1912 of linen manufacturing machines, increasing to the extent of about 10 per cent over the present law the duties on laces and embroideries, imposing a duty of 50 per cent on engraved lithographic plates, slightly decreasing the duty on jute yarns, striking from the free list the products of petroleum and eliminating the House retaliatory provision regarding wrapper and filler tobacco. The House was not in session.

-:—:-

The Senate Monday afternoon concluded discussion of the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill and the finance committee's income tax constitutional amendment was presented. This amendment with the corporation tax, which is already before the Senate, constitutes the program in the upper House. On motion of Senator McLaurin cotton bagging was put on the free list. Senator Culverson moved to put cotton ties on the free list, but this was defeated 31 to 38. The duty on structural iron and steel valued at more than nine-tenths of a cent a pound was increased from three-tenths to four-tenths of a cent a pound. Ineffectual efforts were made to have school books and salt placed on the free and Egyptian cotton on the dutiable list. After adopting the conference report on the census bill the House adjourned at 12:35 p. m. until Thursday. No other business, except the introduction of bills and resolutions, was attempted.

-:—:-

The most important development in the Senate Tuesday was the announcement of Senator Aldrich that he was advocating the corporation tax as a means of defeating the income tax. He denied, however, that the corporation tax was a subterfuge, as the Democrats were quick to charge, and defended it as a legitimate means of raising revenue. Mr. Aldrich said he expected a deficit for the next year or two, and that the corporation tax would help meet that and then might be abolished. The corporation tax measure was put before the Senate in the stage of a "third-degree" amendment, which precludes further amendments. The tariff schedules were completed, the last vote to be taken being on Senator Tillman's proposition for a duty of 10 cents a pound on tea. Although Senator Tillman made a long and strenuous fight, his plan was lost, 55 to 18. At adjournment at 6:17 Senator Cummins was speaking on the income tax. The House was not in session.

CHAPTER XII.—(Continued.)

"You beat me! You haven't the slightest idea who the other shareholders are; the company is thoroughly rotten in all its past history, and here you go plunging into it up to your eyes. And they say you're the most conservative banker on the river."

"I guess you don't have to get me out of many scrapes," said Porter.

"When's the annual meeting?" asked Fenton.

"It's day after to-morrow—a close call but I'll make it all right."

"Mr. Porter, I want you to remember that I haven't given you any advice at all in this matter. It's an extra hazardous thing that you're doing. Now, I don't know anything definitely about it, but—I've got the impression that Margrave's paralleling your lines in this business."

"Where'd you get that?"

"It's this way," said Fenton, in his quietest tones. "A Baltimore lawyer that I know wrote me a letter asking me about Margrave's responsibility. It seems that my friend has a client who owns some of these shares. A good deal of that stock went to Baltimore and Philadelphia, you may remember. I assume that Margrave is after it."

"Wire your friend right away not to sell!" shouted Porter, pounding the table with his fist.

"I did that this morning, and here's his answer. I got it just before you came in. Margrave evidently got anxious and wired them to send certificates with draft through the Drovers' National. They're probably on the way now." He passed the telegram across to Porter, who put on his glasses and read it.

"Now," continued Fenton, "I don't know just what this means, but it looks to me as if Margrave was hot on the track of the trolley company himself; and Tim Margrave isn't a particularly pleasant fellow to go into business with, is he?"

"But the bondholders would still have their chance, wouldn't they, even if he got a majority of the stock?"

"Well, you haven't any bonds, have you? First thing I know you'll be telling me that you've got a few barrels of them," he added, jokingly. He could not help laughing at Porter.

"My dear boy, I've got every blamed bond!"

Fenton sat gazing at him in stupefied wonder. He walked around the table and put his hand on Porter's shoulder. He was trying to keep from laughing, like a parent who is about to rebuke a child and yet laughs at the cause of its offense, Porter evidently thought that he had done an extremely bright thing.

"As I understand you, you have bought all of the bonds and half of the stock."

"About half. I'm a little—just a little—short."

"Will you kindly tell me what you wanted with the stock if you had the bonds?"

"Well, I figured it this way, that the franchise was worth the price I had to pay for the whole thing, and if I had the stock control I'd save the fuss of foreclosing. You lawyers always make a lot of rumpus about those things, and a receivership would prejudice the Eastern market when I come to reorganize and sell out."

Fenton lay back in his chair and laughed, while Porter looked at him a little defiantly, with his hat tipped over his eyes.

"You'd better finish your job and make sure of your majority," said Fenton. His rage was rising now and he did not urge Porter to remain when the banker got up to do. He was not at all anxious to defend a franchise which the local courts, always sensitive to public sentiment, might set aside.

"I'll see you in the morning first thing," said Porter at the door, which Fenton opened for him. "I want you to go to the meeting with me and we'll need a day to get ready."

The lawyer watched his client walk toward the elevator. It occurred to him that Porter's step was losing its elasticity. While the banker waited for the elevator he leaned wearily against the wire screen of the shaft.

Fenton then sat down with a copy of the charter of the Clarkson Traction Company before him, and spent the remainder of the day studying it. He had troubled much over Porter's secretive ways, and had labored to shatter the dangerous conceit which had gradually grown up in his client. Porter had, in fact, a contempt for lawyers, though he leaned on Fenton more than he would admit. Fenton, on the other hand, was constantly fearful lest his client should undo himself by his secretive methods. He had difficulty in getting all the facts out of him even when they were imperatively required.

The next morning Fenton was at his office early and sent his boy at once to ask Mr. Porter to come up. The boy reported that Mr. Porter had not been at the bank. Fenton went down himself at 10 o'clock and found the president's desk closed.

"Where's the boss?" he demanded.

"Won't be down this morning," said Wheaton. "Miss Porter telephoned that he wasn't feeling well, but he expected to be down after luncheon."

CHAPTER XIII.

Porter's illness was proclaimed in the first editions of the afternoon papers, which Wheaton saw at his desk. News gains force by publication, and when he read the printed statement that the president of the Clarkson National Bank was confined to his house by illness, he felt that Porter must really be very sick; and he naturally turned the fact over in his mind to see how this might affect him. The directors came in and sat about with their hats on, and Wingate, the starch manufacturer, who had seen Porter's doctor, pronounced the president a very sick man and suggested that Thompson, the invalid vice president, ought to be notified. The others acquiesced, and they prepared a telegram to Thompson at Phoenix, suggesting his immediate return, if possible.

Fenton spent the afternoon in court. He intended to call at the Porters' on his way home, and stopped at the bank before going to his office, thinking that the banker might be there; but the president's desk was closed.

"How sick is Mr. Porter?" he asked Wheaton.

"He's pretty sick," said Wheaton. "It's typhoid fever. I spoke to Miss Porter over the telephone a few minutes ago, and she did not seem to be alarmed about her father. He's very strong, you know."

But Fenton was not listening. "See here, Wheaton," he said, suddenly, "do you know anything about Porter's private affairs?"

"Not very much," said Wheaton, guardedly.

"I guess you don't and I guess nobody does, worse luck! You know how morbidly secretive he is, and how he shies off from publicity—I suppose you do," he went on a little grimly. He did not like Wheaton particularly. "Well, he has some Traction stock—the annual meeting is held to-morrow and he's got to be represented."

"He never told me of it,' said Wheaton, truthfully.

"His shares are probably in his inside pocket, or hid under the bed at home; but we've got to get them if he has any, and get them quick. If he has his wits he'll probably try and send word to me. I suppose I couldn't see him if I went up."

"Miss Porter telephoned me to come—on some business matter, she said, and no doubt that's what it is."

"Then I won't go just now, but I'll see you here as soon as you get down town. I'll be at my office right after dinner." He paused, deliberating. Fenton was a careful man, who rose to emergencies.

"I'll come directly back here," said Wheaton. "No doubt the papers you want are in one of Mr. Porter's private boxes."

"Can you get into it to-night?"

"Yes; it's in the vault where we keep the account books, and there's no time lock."

Late in the afternoon Wheaton had been unusually busy with routine work and the directors had taken an hour of his time. He had turned away from Fenton to answer a message from Margrave, then he went toward the Transcontinental office with a feeling of foreboding. As he crossed the threshold of the private office, the sight of Margrave's fat bulk squeezed into a chair that was too small for him, impressed him unpleasantly; he had come with mixed feelings, not knowing whether his friendly relations with the railroader were to be further emphasized, or whether Margrave was about to make some demand of him. His doubts were quickly dispelled by Margrave, who turned around fiercely as the door closed.

"Sit down, Wheaton," he said. He was breathing in the difficult choked manner of fat men in their rage. "Now, I want you to tell me something; I want you to answer up fair and square. I've got to come right down to brass tacks with you and I want you to tell me the truth. How much Traction has Billy Porter got?"

"I don't know what right you've got to ask me such a question," Wheaton answered, coldly.

"No right—no right!" Margrave panted. "You miserable fool, what do you know or mean by right or wrong either? I can take my medicine as well as the next man, but when a friend does me up, then I throw up my hands. Why did you tell me you knew what Porter was doing, and lead me to think——"

"Mr. Margrave," said Wheaton, "I didn't come here to be abused by you. If I've done you any injury, I'm not aware of it."

"I guess that's right," said Margrave, ironically. "What I want to know is what you let me think Porter wasn't taking hold of Traction for? You knew I was going into it. I told you that with the fool idea that you were a friend of mine. You told me the old man had stopped buying——"

"And when I did I betrayed a confidence," said Wheaton. "I had no business tell you anything of the kind."

"When you told me that," Margrave went on in bitter derision, shaking his finger in Wheaton's face—"when you told me that you told me a lie, that's what you did, Jim Wheaton."

"You can't talk to me that way," said Wheaton. "When I told you that, I believed it," and he added, with a second's hesitation, "I still believe it."

"Don't lie any more to me about it. I can take my medicine as well as the next man, but"—swaying his big head back and forth on his fat shoulders—"when a man plays a trick on Tim Margrave, I want him to know when Margrave finds it out. I never thought it of you, Jim. I've always treated you as white as I knew how; I've been glad to see you in my house——"

"I don't know what you're driving at, but I want you to stop abusing me," said Wheaton, with more vigor of tone than he had yet manifested. "I never said a word to you about Mr. Porter in connection with Traction that I didn't think true. The only mistake I made was in saying anything to you at all; but I thought you were a friend of mine. If anybody's been deceived, I'm the one."

"Let me ask you something. Haven't you known all these weeks when I've been seeing you every few days at the club, and at my house several times"—he dwelt on the second clause as if the breach of hospitality on Wheaton's part had been the grievous offense—"haven't you known that the old man was chasing over the country in his carpet slippers buying all that stock he could lay his hands on?"

"On my sacred honor, I have not. When we talked of it I knew he had been buying some, but I thought he'd stopped, as I let you understand. I'm sorry if you were misled by anything I said."

"Well, that's all over now," said Margrave, in a conciliatory tone. "I've been relying on your information; in fact, I've had it in mind to make you treasurer of the company when we get reorganized. That ought to show you what a lot of confidence I've been putting in you all this time that you've been watching me run into the soup clear up to my chin."

"I'm honestly sorry"—began Wheaton. "I had no idea you were depending on me. You ought to have known that I couldn't betray Mr. Porter."

"You ought to be sorry," said Margrave, dolefully. "But, look here, Jim, I don't believe you're going to do me up on this."

"I'm not going to do anybody up; but I don't see what I can do to help you."

"Well, I do. You gave me to understand that you were buying this stuff yourself. You still got what you had? Now, how many shares have you, Jim?"

"Just what I bought in the beginning; one hundred shares."

Margrave took a pad from his desk and added one hundred to a short column of figures. He made the footing and regarded the total with careless interest before looking up.

"How much do you want for that, Jim?"

"To tell the truth, Mr. Margrave, I don't know that I want to sell it."

"Now, Jim, you ain't going to hold me up on this? You've got me into a pretty mess, and I hope you're not going to keep on pushing me in."

"What I have wouldn't do you any good."

"But it might do me some harm! Now, you don't want these shares, Jim. You're entitled to a profit, and I'll pay you a fair price."

"I can't do anything to hurt Mr. Porter," said Wheaton. He remembered just how the drawing-room at the Porters' looked, and the kindness and frankness of Evelyn Porter's eyes.

"Yes, but you've got a duty to me. You can bet your life that if it hadn't been for you, I'd never have been in this pickle. Come along now, Jim, I've got a lot of our railroad people to go in on this. They depend absolutely on my judgment. I'm a ruined man if I fail to show up at the meeting to-morrow with a majority of these shares. It won't make any difference to Billy Porter whether he wins out or not. He's got plenty of irons in the fire. I don't know as a matter of fact that I need these shares; but I want to be on the safe side. How much shall I make the check for, Jim?"

"You can't make it for anything, Mr. Margrave, and I want to say that I'm very much disappointed in the way you've tried to get it from me. I can't imagine that three few shares of stock I hold can be of real importance in deciding the control of this company. I don't say I won't give you these shares, but I can't do it now."

Margrave's face grew red and purple as Wheaton walked toward the door.

"Maybe you think you can wring more out of Porter than you can out of me. But I'll take this out of you and out of him, too, if I go broke doing it."

Poetry and Patriotism.

Zakris Topelius, "the most popular poet Finland has ever known," was a lover of his native land above all else. Once, says Paul Waineman in "A Summer Tour in Finland," he wrote as follows to a little Finnish boy who was at the time residing in England for his schooling:

"You are in a great and rich country, but never forget that you are only an exile.

"If Queen Victoria herself should write and offer you a post in her kingdom, remember that you must answer, 'I cannot, because I have a cottage waiting for me when I am grown up. It has a roof higher than the loftiest hall in Windsor Castle. That roof is the blue sky of my own land.'"

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Leon Ling, strangler of Elsie Sigel in New York, lived in Evansville for over a year. He conducted a chop suey restaurant at First and Locust streets five years ago.

Physicians are somewhat puzzled by an epidemic of enlarged throat glands, accompanied by chills and fever, that seems to have attacked hundreds of Muncie residents. An attack of the strange malady lasts ten days, during which the patient's condition is sometimes regarded as serious.

A jury rendered judgment for $2,000 in the Monroe Circuit Court in favor of Mrs. Charles Kramer, of Mitchell, against Volker, a saloon keeper, who sold her husband intoxicants after he was already drunk and caused him to run into a moving Baltimore & Ohio train. Kramer was in court and showed serious injuries. The American Surety Company, of New York, which was on Volker's bond, was also a defendant.

Small boys shooting fire crackers at Logansport set fire to Gus Dryer's barn, and while firemen were working on the second story the floor gave way, they fell to the ground and were buried underneath a ton of burning hay. Other firemen played the hose on the flaming mass while volunteers went to the rescue of the entombed firemen. Holes were burrowed in the hay and the firemen were taken out. They were not burned, but were almost suffocated.

Frank Pepper, aged 19, of Evansville, will probably have his face disfigured for life and may lose the sight of one eye as the result of trying to show some of his boy friends that he could "eat fire." He filled his mouth full of gasoline and then held his hand with a lighted match at arm's length, while he squirted the liquid toward the light. The gasoline exploded in his face. Both cheeks were badly blistered and one eye was seriously injured.

Tony Glass, living four miles west of Tipton, was injured in a runaway from a most unusual cause. An ice wagon was delivering ice at Kempton and a large cake slipped out of it unseen by the driver. The startling spectacle of a cake of ice lying in the middle of the road in a hot June sun was too much for even a sedate farm horse. The animal became frightened, ran away, smashing the buggy and five dozen eggs it contained. Glass was covered with bruises from head to foot by his fall.

Owing to the scarcity of harvest hands in Gibson County, near Ft. Branch, and in some parts of Spencer County, many farmers are working their wives and daughters in the harvest fields. Women drive binders and also shock the wheat after it is cut in the fields. In Spencer County and some parts of Perry County many farmers have for years been assisted in the fields by their wives and daughters. The women in that section are strong and brawny and can do as much physical labor as a man.

A new commodity—crawfish—have made their appearance on the market at Oakland City. Those with big claws and guaranteed pinching qualities are carefully avoided. Common crawfish are selling at 1 cent each, and those with long waving "whiskers" and red eyes at 2 cents each. The latter are of a more value on account of being more attractive to the bass that live in the waterworks lake, where Oakland City's population is now spending its leisure hours. The crawfish are used as bait by the fishermen.

Harry Hunter, a small boy who lives in Columbus, enjoyed the experience of being run over by an automobile without being touched. Eugene Snyder, a mail carrier, was driving his runabout at a fair rate of speed when the boy started to dash across the street and stopped in front of the automobile. Snyder tried to check his machine, but was too late. Spectators thought the boy would be killed, but the lad had presence of mind enough to lie still where he had fallen. The machine passed entirely over him without even grazing him. "Never touched me," said the boy as he brushed his clothes and continued across the street.

Jesse Overstreet, former representative in Congress from the Indianapolis district, is getting as brown as the proverbial barry at the Crump cottage on White river, a short distance from Columbus. Mr. and Mrs. Overstreet are spending the summer there and are living close to nature. Colonel John Scheible, who knows more about fish and game than any dozen men in the neighborhood, is the companion of the former Congressman. "I supposed he would have the bighead," said Colonel Scheible after he had told about a big catch of bass made by Mr. Overstreet, "but he is just as common as an old shoe. He don't act like a man who knew Presidents, Senators and all the other big-bugs."

Mrs. Cornelia Wolfe, wife of Dr. Harvey S. Wolfe, is dead at her home in New Albany, of concussion of the brain caused by a fall down the stairway ten days ago. She never regained consciousness. She was 66 years old.

The smaller of the two bodies of water, known as the Twin Lakes, and located several miles west of Montpelier, has been completely drained by the recent construction of a big ditch emptying into the Salamonie river.

Christian Small, aged 5 years, accidentally shot and killed his sister Esta, aged 13. Both were children of Elmer Small, of Jasper, who recently sued the Rev. Louis Fleener, of Tennyson, for $10,000 damages for the alleged breaking up of his home.

William Schaum, the first heat victim of this season at Evansville, who was prostrated several days ago, has been adjudged insane, and will be admitted to the insane asylum. For many years he was an engineer on the Evansville & Terre Haute railroad.

In rubbing his foreleg against an iron trolley pole to which he was hitched, and through which a 600-volt current had become grounded owing to inferior insulation, a horse, valued at $250 and belonging to Fred Rump, was electrocuted at Fort Wayne. The pole is on one of the city's main corners, and has a mail box attached to it, causing wonderment that somebody was not fatally shocked in dropping mail into the box.

How would you like to can four hundred gallons of cherries? That's what a Greencastle woman did. The woman is Mrs. Lucy Black, in charge of the dining room of the DePauw girls' dormitory. Mrs. Black is preparing for the students who will board at the "dorm" next winter. She has been in charge of the dining room for many years and is well known by almost every student who has attended DePauw in the last ten years.

An illumination of the southeastern heavens startled residents in some parts of Clark County about 9 o'clock one evening last week. What appeared to be a ball of fire as large as the moon moved rapidly across the sky in an easterly direction and vanished suddenly as if by an explosion, leaving a trail of white light in its wake, which remained visible about ten minutes. Former State Senator W. L. Barnes, a local astronomer, believes the phenomenon was a meteor.

Mrs. Nellie Gleason, of Waldron, a few days ago received word to the effect that the Gleasons, the Joneses, the Richeys, of Waldron, and the Dunlaps, of St. Paul, had fallen heir to millions of dollars. Their ancestors owned 360 acres of property in the heart of Philadelphia, and the ninety-nine years' lease on it expired last March. Fred Anderson, of Rush County, also received word that he was one of the heirs in 350 acres of land in a foreign city.

A big celebration will be held in Mishawaka July 5. It is planned on this occasion to bring to the front all the interesting facts of the city's history. The Indian legend as to how the city got its name will be one of the things portrayed in a float. The big event of the day will be a historical pageant on which much time and money are being spent. The early history of the city is closely interwoven with the Indian legends. The promoters of the celebration are expecting 75,000 visitors.

Guy Table, sent to the Indiana Reformatory at Jeffersonville in September, 1908, to serve one to fourteen years for grand larceny, escaped and rode away on a big bay horse which he took from the Reformatory stables. The horse was recovered at Watson, six miles east, but the rider has vanished for the present. Table was working on a new barn outside the wall, and, with three or four others, was under a guard, whose attention he eluded, then went to the old barn and got away. He is white, aged 28 years, and was dressed in overalls and strawhat.

Nobody ever heard of a horse digging potatoes until Walter Rynerson, a Columbus attorney, brought out a story of that kind, and now he is trying to get a patent on the horse. He turned his horse into the lawn to graze, and, instead of keeping on the grass, the horse jumped a fence and entered a potato patch. There it began to roll and kick, selecting hills containing potatoes for its kicking. At the first attempt the animal kicked twenty-four potatoes out of one hill. This seemed to please it considerably, so it continued the work and dug about half the potatoes in the patch.

The First Presbyterian church in South Bend recently celebrated its diamond jubilee and the twentieth anniversary of the pastorate of the Rev. Dr. Henry Webb Johnson. The morning service marked the jubilee proper, but the evening service was historical in character. Andrew Anderson gave a sketch of the church, as did also Willis A. Bugbee. The principal speaker was the Rev. Henry Morey, of Sline, Mich., who was pastor of the church prior to the coming of Dr. Johnson. A feature of the jubilee was the ringing of an old bell in the tower of the church which has not been rung for many years and which was connected with the early history of the church.

In a stampede following an explosion of gasoline during a moving picture show in the Town Hall of Somerset, Wabash County, dozens were slightly injured in the crush or by leaping from a second story window.

Prof. E. G. Hesser, who for the past two years has been teacher of music and drawing in the Kendallville public schools, is preparing to move to Goshen, where he has accepted a position in the schools of that city as supervisor of music.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

The bank statements show the aggregate resources nearer the $1,000,000,000 mark than at any time hitherto, and the otherwise favorable condition of the principal items reflecting financial strength testify to distinct progress in business generally. The first half of the year is now virtually completed. A comparison with the same period of last year discloses gains in payments through the banks equal to 19 per cent, in bank resources 12 per cent, in deposits 12.8 per cent, in loans 13 per cent, in value of new buildings 77 per cent and in value of business improvements 214 per cent. Commercial failures are also notably reduced in numbers, and in liabilities the amount is 33 per cent under 1908 and 52 per cent under 1906.

"All the comparisons with the great business year of 1906 exhibit more substantial gains except discounts at the banks, which appreciated 12.2 per cent. The more recent comparison also includes recovery in values of various commodities and remarkably high quotations in breadstuffs, live stock and provisions.

"The current developments continue along the line of sustained recovery. The warm wave stimulated leading retail lines to seasonable activity, sales comparing favorably with previous records in light-weight apparel, food products and housewares. Advices from the interior reflect a gratifying reduction of store stocks and some moderate replenishment. Wholesale bookings for fall deliveries continue rising in dry goods, footwear, clothing, men's furnishings, carpets and draperies. Earnings of the Chicago steam roads indicate sustained improvement in the movements of heavy materials.

Bank clearings, $250,960,473, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1908 by 20.6 per cent and compare with $237,547,969 in 1907.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 19, against 26 last week, 32 in 1908 and 20 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 7, against 9 last week, 9 in 1908 and 5 in 1907.—Dun's Weekly Review of Trade.

NEW YORK.

Improvement is more manifest this week, the mainspring of this being better weather and crop reports and further expansion in the volume of industrial operations. Retail reports are still rather irregular, excessive heat being credited with retarding distribution in some sections, but, on the whole, sales of summer goods have been benefited by more seasonable temperatures.

Jobbing trade reports are slightly better, pointing to an improvement in re-order demand, but by far the best reports as to distributive trade still come from wholesale lines, which represent crop reports stimulating the placing of business for next fall and spring delivery. The industries led by iron and steel show expansion of operation, larger output, some wage advances, and more confidence is expressed than at any preceding time since the depression began. The situation in leather trades is one of great strength.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with June 24 were 225, against 213 last week, 258 in the like week of 1908, 150 in 1907, 146 in 1906 and 186 in 1905.

Business failures in Canada for the week number 30, which compares with 28 last week and 31 in the like week of 1908.—Bradstreet's.

The anti-cigarette law, which went into effect in the State of Washington at midnight on June 10, will be rigidly enforced, according to reports received from Seattle. People interested in the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific exposition will endeavor, however, to have it so amended as to permit the sale and use of cigarettes in certain parts of the exposition reservation.

The annual problem of the graduating gown was not only most successfully, but also cheaply, solved in a Chicago public school this year. Thirty eight girls composing the graduating class, set to work several weeks ago under the direction of a supervisor of sewing, and turned out thirty-eight pretty frocks, at an outlay of $3.50 a piece. As the dresses were all alike much heartburning and envy were avoided on commencement day.

President Taft, it is reported, has practically decided to abandon Olongapo, in the Philippine Islands, as a repair station and war base, and instructions have been issued to the Navy Department to prepare plans and estimates for such an institution on Manila Bay, and it is believed that the new station will be established near Manila and not at Cavite, where there is a navy yard. This action is of great importance as it settles one of the veratious questions which have prevailed regarding military and naval policy on the Asiatic station. It is expected that the decision will soon be announced from the White House, after which it will be possible for the President to urge Congress to make definite appropriations for a big naval station in Manila Bay, with some prospect of getting it. There was no chance whatever of course so long as the controversy was carried on in the service concerning Olongapo and Manila.

Announcement is made that there is a possibility of a reduction of the two per cent rate provided for in the amendment to the tariff bill providing for a tax on the net earnings of corporations, and it is stated that, if the decrease is made, it will be in conference and not on the floor of the Senate. Until the conferees have completed their work on the schedules they will not be able to determine, with any accuracy, the revenue to be expected from the customs duties, and if at that time it is apparent that a tax of one and half, or even of one per cent will be ample to supplement the custom receipts, the reduction of the rate should be made, and doubtless will be. The tariff bill should produce ample revenue to meet all the expenses the first year after its enactment, but there is no apparent necessity for piling up a surplus in the Treasury.

Teething children have more or less diarrhoea, which can be controlled by giving Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. All that is necessary is to give the prescribed dose after each operation of the bowels more than natural and then castor oil to cleanse the system. It is safe and sure. Sold by H. M. Milliman, St. Joe, and F. R. Bowman, Spencerville.

The increasing employment for electricty on board ships of war, especially in connection with the system of communication, fire control installation and wireless telegraphy, has reached proportions which indicate that a specialty must be made of that branch, as there is of ordnance and engineering. The Secretary of the Navy is reported to have consideration a recommendation for the establishment of a post-graduate course, for commissioned naval officers in electrical work of all description, including wireless telegraphy. This is in line with the establishment of a post-graduate course of naval engineering and it is purposed to have the course of naval electrical design and power also at the Naval Academy. At present officers who display an inclination for that class of work are permitted to enter the plant of the General Electric Co., of Schenectady.

Avoid Trouble

Women, when threatened with a mishap, should take Cardui and prevent the trouble from occurring.

In your delicate condition it will save you much pain and misery. Thousands have tried Cardui before confinement and have found it of wonderful benefit.

Take CARDUI

Mrs. Fannie Nichols, of Mexico, Mo., writes: "Last year I was threatened with a mishap and Wine of Cardui helped me more than any other medicine. Now I have a fine healthy boy. I think Cardui the finest medicine I know of for female troubles, and I wish all suffering women would try it."

Prolific Nut Trees.

The nut trees of the world could, it is calculated, provide food all the year round for the population of the globe. Brazil nuts grow in such profusion that thousands of tons of them are wasted every year.

Back to the Farm.

There is just one way for the people of the city to find it possible to buy eggs, chickens, meat and flour for less money—that is for some of them to leave the city and go back to raising more hens, more cattle, and growing more wheat. The fact is that the country is getting top-heavy. The cities are calling too heavily on the producing areas. Farming is getting to be one of the most profitable businesses of the country because the proportion of non-producers is getting so large. It is all a matter of supply and demand; just now the demand for foodstuffs is larger than it has ever been in proportion to the supply.—Denver Republican.

Arookies Prayer

The following is the reproduction of a prayer written and sent home by Fred Malone, who is now in the Navy.

Now I lay me down to sleep,
I pray the Lord my gear to keep.
Grant no other sailor take
My shoes and socks before I wake.
Lord, please guard me in my slumber
And keep this hammock on its number
May no clews or lashing break
And let me down, before I wake.
Keep me safely in thy sight
And grant no fire drills in the night,
And in morning let me wake
Breathing scents of sirloin steak's.
God protect me in my dreams
Make this better than it seems,
Grant the time may quickly fly
When my self shall rest on high.
In a billowy feather bed
Where I long to rest my head
Far away from all the scenes,
And the scent of the half-baked beans
Take me back into the land
Where they don't scrub decks with (sand
Where no demon typhoon blows
Where the women scrub my clothes.
God thou knowst all my woes
Feed me in my dying throes
Take me back, I'll promise
Never to leave home again.

Post Card Shower

The following communication is from Mrs. T. A. Frederick of Salina, Kansas, who desires that all relatives and friends send her mother a birthday greeting and we feel it our duty to assist in notifying her many friends here of the fact.

Salina, Kansas, July, 1 09.

Dear Friends:—

We the children of Mrs. Elizabeth Widney, of Minneapolis, Kansas, wish to surprise her with a post card shower on her 78th., birthday, which comes on Thursday the 22nd., of this month. As she was raised and lived all the earliest days of her life in the community of St. Joe, and as most of her relatives and old friends still reside there, we take this means of letting them all know, so all who desire may send her a birthday greeting on that day. I know she will appreciate this more than anything else to know she has been so kindly remembered by so many in her old age. All who read this please tell all the friends they meet as we want to make it as great a success as possible. We expect to present her with a nice album that day and hope to place a card in it with the name of everyone of her relatives and friends and all old acquaintances that is possible. We send our thanks beforehand for the beautiful greetings we know she will receive. Please have them on or before that day. Her address is Minneapolis, Kansas.

Knew When to Stop.

The shrewd lawyer knows when to stop questioning, and none is more shrewd than the one who, conducting a case of bribery, questioned a man the other day, who is rated high in the business world.

"Have you yourself ever refused a bribe?" he asked.

"No, but—"

"That is all," said the lawyer.

At a latter time he was asked why he had dismissed the witness so soon.

"Because," he replied, "I knew by the 'but' that he was going to tell me no one had ever attempted to bribe him."

A WHOLE YEAR FOR $1.00

That's what you can do for some friend—send him THE ST. JOE NEWS fifty-two times for only a dollar.

Better than a letter, because it gives ALL the home news each week; there is positively no token you could offer which would make a home so happy in your remembrance as this newspaper mailed to some distant relative or friend.

We are making it just as good as it possibly can be done for $1.00. In fact, lots of publishers have raised to $1.50 on not so creditable a paper as this—and we tell you frankly that when you plank down your dollar on our table for a friend, you'll get your money's worth. This is a good copy to start with. We'll save an extra one until Monday. Yes?

IN DEFENSE OF THE PILLORY

English Writer Shows Some Good Points About This Old-Time Form of Punishment.

Perhaps one of the few really democratic institutions ever created was the pillory. I do not say that it was a humane institution, though it was certainly more humane than our system of silent imprisonment. But being humane has nothing to do with being democratic. You may have humane and inhumane democracies, just as you may have humane and inhumane despots.

The point is that the pillory was a real appeal to the people. If it was cruel, it was because the people were cruel, or perhaps justly indignant. The people threw dead cats (the less humanitarian, I believe threw live cats), but they could throw bouquets and crowns of laurel if they liked. Sometimes they did. The argument about the old public punishments cuts both ways. The publicity was an additional risk for the government as well as an additional risk for the prisoner, and this is specially true of the executions for treason. It was no small thing that half a million men might possibly treat as a martyr a man whom the king was treating as a murderer; that the prince had to concede to every obscure ruffian exactly what that ruffian probably wanted most—fame.—G. K. Chesterton, in London News.

REALLY NO PUZZLE AT ALL.

Erudite Editor Arises to Explain Why Women Descend From Street Cars the Wrong Way.

"It makes us tired," wrote the editor of the Hickory Ridge Missourian, "when we see some city newspaper wondering why it is that a woman always gets off a street car the wrong way. There ain't no mystery about it at all. Our wife explained it to us years ago, and she never rode on a street car but once in her life, when she was visiting relations in Kansas City. A woman gets off a street car backward because she naturally grabs her skirts with her left hand. That's constitutional with a woman. Then she has to grab something with her right hand to hold on to, and that's the railing at the rear end of the car, so when she steps off she has to face the wrong way. You can't break women of that habit unless you make them get off on the left side of the street car, and if you did that it's just as likely as not they'd be contrary enough to grab their skirts with their right hands. But there ain't nothing strange about the way they get off now. Blamed if we don't think sometimes that some of the stupidest men in the world is working on the big city papers."—Chicago Tribune.

Wives and Wives.

"Mahomedans are not so much more reckless in their number of wives," remarked the Arabian doctor who makes his home in New York, "than New Yorkers. The principal difference is that, instead of living in New Jersey rather than pay them alimony in New York, we keep them altogether in one house at home. Expensive on account of Easter hats? Not at all. The Arabian women wear veils, which are not expensive. But in the matter of the number of wives, many Mahomedans are very exclusive in that particular. For example, while my uncle has 25 wives, my father has never had but one, my mother. My parents are both now nearly 90 years old, but they are as much in love as they were when they were first married, and I am their only son. My uncle, who has 25 wives, has no children."

Shot in Hand

Last Sunday morning Wm. Sommers met with quite a painful accident. He had finished his morning chores and had taken his shot gun and started to his corn field to shoot groundhogs, which are taking his crops. As he went to mount the rail fence the rail turned with him and the gun slipped in his hand and was discharged when it struck the fence, tearing off his third finger completely and part of the second, besides the inner part of his hand being very badly torn. He was removed to the Lutheran hospital at Ft. Wayne where he still remains.

TRIBUTE TO "MOTHER VOLGA"

Haunting Melody of Sorrow and Unrest Heard in Prison and Palace in Russia.

There is an air so popular in Russia that it is even more familiar than their national anthem to the people of that great mysterious empire, says a writer in the Travel Magazine. I have heard it in all part of the czar's dominions, from the Baltic sea to Bering strait and from Archangel to the Caspian; in the glittering palaces of Petersburg and in foul prison dens of Siberia.

It is a simple melody in the minor key, suggestive, like most Slav music, of sorrow and unrest, and it is called "Matushka," or "Mother Volga," as for some cryptic reason every Russian, be he noble or nihilist, is taught from childhood to regard this great river in the light of a maternal relative. Yet the river is full of sad associations, for convicts formerly traveled a portion of the journey to Siberia along its broad, sluggish stream.

I can never forget the haunting sweetness of "Matushka Volga" as I heard it sung on a prison barge one quiet summer evening by a party of fettered politicals banished to the great lone land of exile. For "Mother Volga" was their last link with home and the loved ones they might never meet again.

Fortunately the condemned are now sent into Asia by the Trans-Siberian railroad and the unhappy exile is spared at least one bitter parting—that from his well beloved "Mother Volga."

NOT MUCH TROUBLE TO WRITE

Some Proper Names That at Least Have the Distinguishing Merit of Novelty.

In the Zuyder Zee there is a bay called Y, and Amsterdam has a river Y, while, strange to say, in quite another part of the earth, in China, the same brief name is given to a town.

Elsewhere in the flowery kingdom, in the province of Honan, there is a city called U, and in France there is a river and in Sweden a town rejoicing in the name of A.

Proper names of this brief nature are not, however, monopolized by places; instances are on record where individuals have been similarly named. Some years ago there was a shop kept on the Rue de Louvan, Brussels, by Theresa O, and there is a Mme. O in Paris, who is well-known as the proprietor of a popular cafe.

An amusing incident is recounted in connection with the impressment into the military service of the son of one of the members of the O family. The young man could not write, and so signed his name on the military papers with a cross, it not occurring to him or to any of the officials how easily he could have written his name.

Those Frail Boats.

"In an account of a wreck on the Long Island coast that I read the other day," observed the retired yachtsman, "I was pained to notice in one paper that the crew left the schooner in a 'frail boat,' the said craft being properly described in the Press as the ship's long boat. I know that is the conventional phrase to describe a vessel's small boat, but as I read it I wondered if the 'frail boat' writer ever had seen one of those ponderous fabrics of oak called the ship's long boat? Or if he ever had tried to haul a 14-foot yawl off a beach after it had been left high and dry by the tide? Such a job on a hot July day probably would cure him forever describing even such a boat as 'frail.'"

He Was Fortified.

Professor Masson of Edinburgh, author of a compendious life of Milton, was once exasperated by the listlessness of a student in one of his classes. After hearing long in silence the young man's inattention, the professor one day broke off in the midst of his lecture and addressed himself to the student.

"May I ask you, sir," said he, "whether you expect to pass this course?"

"I have hopes, sir," answered the student.

"Then when the examination comes, sir, you will wish for notes on these lectures. What will you do for them?"

"I have my father's, sir," was the reply.—Bellman.

A WORD WITH WOMEN.

These Facts May Open the Eyes of Many Discouraged Ones.

Mrs. Matilda Lindemann, 4423 Wentworth Ave., Chicago, Ill., says: 'From my own experience I believe the worst of women's troubles originate from weak kidneys. For years my health failed gradually. Pain in the back and a feeling of heavy pressure over the abdomen, poor appetite, nervousness and dizzy spells made life a burden. The kidney secretions were terribly disordered. I could hardly move a muscle without severe pain. I was a physical wreck when I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills. The change was wonderful. Since using them my trouble is gone, I have a good appetite, weigh more and feel well."

The Lunatic's Thought.

The chaplain of a large private asylum in Yorkshire, Eng., recently asked a brother clergyman to preach to the inmates on a Sunday morning during his absence. He said to him: "Preach them a good sermon, for though insane on some points they are very intelligent." The preacher talked to them of Africa and India and of heathen mothers who threw their babes into the sacred River Ganges as offerings to the gods. Tears streamed down the face of one listener. When asked by the clergyman afterward what part of the sermon had affected him, the lunatic replied: "Sir, I was thinking it was a pity your mother didn't throw you into the Ganges."

Impossible Now.

"There's a funny item in this paper about an Ohio man refusing an offer of a fat consulship."

"Where? Let me see it."

"There it is."

"O, you ninny. Don't you see the headline over that collection of items? 'Happenings of Fifty Years Ago.'"—Chicago Tribune.

Enough for Him.

The girl in the grand stand looked puzzled.

"Do you understand the language they use here?" she asked.

"Understand it!" exclaimed the wild-eyed fan by her side; "why, bless you, it's the only kind of language there is!"—Chicago Tribune.

His Preference.

"You know what the poet says. 'Thrice armed is he who hath his quarrel just.'"

"In that case I'd like to be an octopus. Eight-armed is he."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

AN OLD TIMER.

Has Had Experiences.

A woman who has used Postum since it came upon the market knows from experience the wisdom of using Postum in place of coffee if one values health and a clear brain. She says:

"At the time Postum was first put on the market I was suffering from nervous dyspepsia, and my physician had repeatedly told me not to use tea or coffee. Finally I decided to take his advice and try Postum. I got a package and had it carefully prepared, finding it delicious to the taste. So I continued its use and very soon its beneficial effects convinced me of its value, for I got well of my nervousness and dyspepsia.

"My husband had been drinking coffee all his life until it had affected his nerves terribly, and I persuaded him to shift to Postum. It was easy to get him to make the change, for the Postum is so delicious. It certainly worked wonders for him.

"We soon learned that Postum does not exhilarate or depress and does not stimulate, but steadily and honestly strengthens the nerves and the stomach.

"To make a long story short, our entire family continued to use Postum with satisfying results, as shown in our fine condition of health, and we have noticed a rather unexpected improvement in brain and nerve power."

Increased brain and nerve power always follows the use of Postum in place of coffee, sometimes in a very marked manner. "There's a Reason."

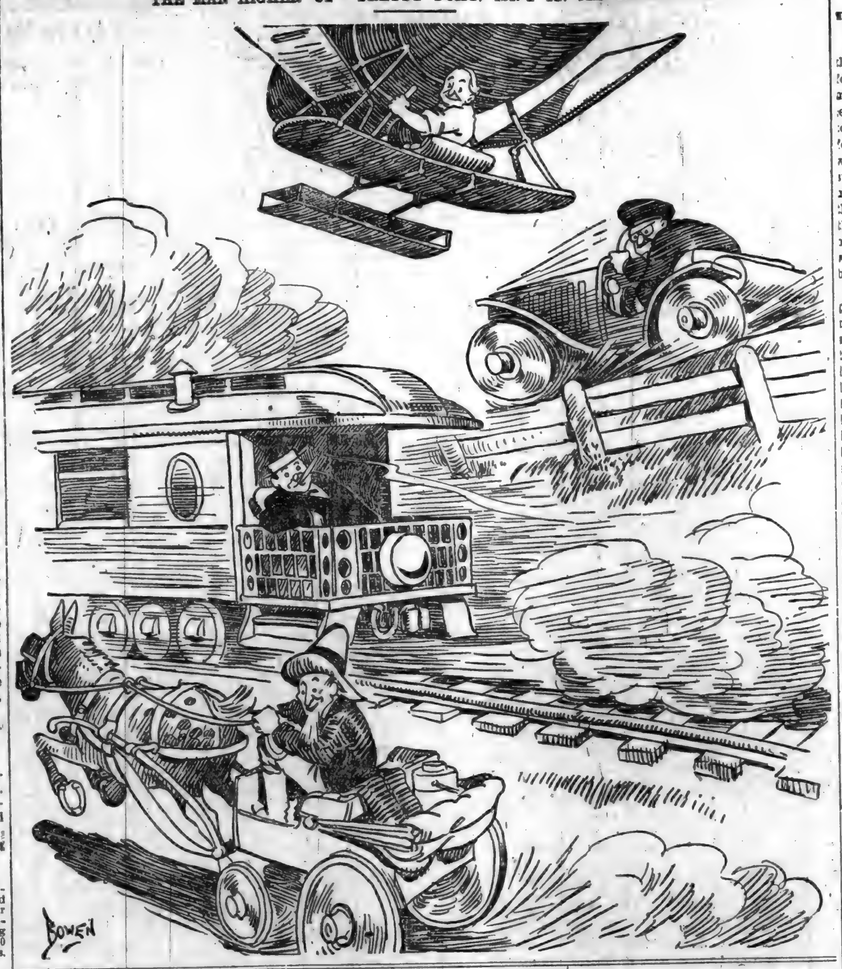
THE MAN HIGHER UP—"PRETTY POKY, ISN'T IT, OLD CHAP?"



WORK OF MISSIONARIES.

In Many Ways It Has Been of Great Use to the World.

Missionaries have rendered great services to the world outside of their labors for the propagation of the Christian religion. Nearly all the dialects of Africa and of the islands of the sea and many of Asia, have been reduced to writing by missionaries; and a large proportion of the translations into African, Asiatic and Oceanic languages have been made by missionaries. These facts are well known. But the services of missionaries to science are not so familiar to the public. They have, however, been abundant and varied. Aside from the geographical discoveries of Livingstone and other missionaries in Africa, the services of missionaries in the science of ethnology have been inestimable. Their long and intimate acquaintance with little-known tribes and peoples have given them a thorough and accurate knowledge, which a few months or even a few years' sojourn by expert scientific investigators have not equalled. In other branches of science, missionaries of scientific tastes have contributed much to definite knowledge. William Carey was a botanist. He established one of the finest plant gardens in the world, and brought to the attention of the scientific world a vast variety of before-unknown plants of India.

Francis Mason, of Burma, was the first to write a thoroughly scientific treatise on the flora and fauna of that wonderfully diversified country. His works were several years ago republished in an elegant edition by the British government, and are an authority and in use in the schools to this day. Baptist missionaries in Assam have done more than any others to bring the characteristics, dialects, customs and racial traits of the hill tribes of that province to the knowledge of the scientific world. This list might be indefinitely extended. And these observations are suggested by the recent announcement that Rev. H. Loomis, D. D., the well known Congregationalist missionary in Japan, after long and careful investigation, has discovered the parasite which holds in check the gypsy moth in Japan. His discovery has been communicated to James Wilson, Secretary of the Department of Agriculture at Washington, and measure are being taken to transplant the parasite to this country. The State of Massachusetts alone has expended several hundred thousand dollars in efforts to exterminate the gypsy moth; and this discovery by a missionary promises to save the people of this country more than all the missions in Japan have cost.

TATTOOING OUT OF STYLE.

Odd Facts About a Custom That Is Referred to in the Bible.

One of the customs of the past ages which is now going out of use almost entirely is that of tattooing or marking the skin indelibly by puncturing it and inserting a coloring matter. The practice of tattooing arose among primitive people in many different ways. With some it was a mark which served to signify subordination to a chief very much as farmers at this day brand their cattle. Among the Sandwich islanders it indicated the district in which the person lived. With many others it had religious significance and sacred emblems were marked upon the body.

Some superstitious services of the dead was evidently indicated in early bible times by tattooing, for the book of Leviticus contains this command, "Ye shall not make any cuttings on your flesh for the dead, nor print any marks upon you," the Pittsburg Gazette-Times says.

Among other people tattooing has been resorted to from sheer vanity, and the practice, so far as it has survived in modern times, has been the result of a mixture of vanity and superstition. Occasionally the "dime shows and the "side shows" contain a tattooed man, some of whom were willingly marked over their whole bodies, while others were tattooed by their captors when they were taken prisoners in savage wars.

At the present day it is sailors and soldiers among civilized people who practice it chiefly, and their arms and the backs of their hands are often decorated with anchors, shields and all sorts of fantastic devices or with religious emblems.

In Europe workingmen frequently decorated their arms with entire sentences. Some one at the great iron works at Neuilly, France, has been observing the tattooed arms of the workmen and has found upon them the following sentences, the first three being very common among French workingmen:

"No luck," "Child of misfortune," "Thin for life," "Death to the unfaithful," "Born under an unlucky star," "Glory, honor, fatherland," and "All for the fair."

Many representatives of clasped hands and emblems of occupations, such as hammers, squares, compasses or anchors, were also found.

Some extraordinary tattooing has been observed among the native recruits for the French service in Algeria. One soldier had tattooed upon his breast an elaborate picture of a lion hunt, while his back was ornamented with a representation of a cavalry charge. As the process of tattooing is painful, the man who bore these works of art must have suffered greatly.

Many men who have had the backs of their hands tattooed in youth and at that time regarded the decorations as something to be very proud of or who, as workmen, have been proud to bear the emblem of their trade, have very earnestly wished, in reaching maturity or in working their way to wealth or social position, that they might be rid of the marks which they took such pains to get; but the marks remain tenaciously and indicate with almost perfect certainty that he who bears them was either a very foolish boy or that his early life was passed among bad associates or in a menial occupation.

There are, however, fewer and fewer men who bear such decorations, and it is probable that tattooing will before many generations disappear among enlightened people.

Hair-Raising.

FARMER AND ROLL-TOP DESK.

Up-to-Date Man Thinks It the Most Useful Implement on Farm.

Last week, writes William Athertor Du Puy, in the Circle, I met a man who had lived on the farm next to my father's when we were boys together in the old slipshod days. I was surprised to learn that he was still on the farm, for his air was that of the successful business man knowing thoroughly his relation to the outside world. I talked to him of the affairs of the old farm and he told me of its transformation. In summing up, he said:

"We have been driven to business methods by the new conditions, and now we are blessing the causes that forced us. We have found that the most effective farm implement that we can buy is the roll-top desk. It regulates our crops, indicates those that are profitable, eliminates those that are not, sells to advantage and is making fortunes for us. It has established itself on the farm and is there to stay. Those who adopted it first have now added an automobile. Those without it are being eliminated from the calculation, for profitable farming these days requires a business method of procedure."

The department of agriculture is removing the bugaboo from the matter of bookkeeping. It has devised a single book that will keep the records of the farm with relation to the outside world and which may be mastered in fifteen minutes. Men in the department started out on the hypothesis that bookkeeping was the merest common sense and could be rid of all its technicalities and complications. The invention of the new system was the result. Prof. Spillman urged it on a certain farmer in Missouri in whose operations he was financially interested. The farmer was 53 years old, and protested that he was past the age of learning new tricks. The demonstrator, however, began copying the records of the farm into the new book and the farmer watched. In half an hour he had mastered it and a year later declared that for his own use he would not take $500 for it. A bulletin is now in course of preparation that will offer to put the new book into the hands of every farmer in the country who is sufficiently interested to ask for it.

WOOD BY THE CORD.

Things the Woodmen Know That May Not Be Known to Others.

A cord of wood is 128 cubic feet, or the contents of a pile 8 feet long, 4 feet high and 4 feet wide. Wood is marketed on this basis. A pile whose length, breadth and height mutiplied together gives this number of cubic feet fills this requirement, no matter whether the sticks are long or short, straight or crooked, round or split, unless there is an understanding to the contrary. Nevertheless a cord, though it comes up to legal measurements, is an uncertain quantity even when the seller is honest and the buyer satisfied, the Forester says.

A lumberman may have a tract of pulp wood which he sells to a paper mill at $5 a cord for as many cords as it will make. It is in the contract that he shall cut and stack it. He cuts it in 12-foot lengths, and when the job is complete it measures 200 cords and he receives $1,000 for it. Would he have made or lost by cutting four-foot lengths instead of twelve? He would have lost in the first place from the additional labor required to cut 4-foot wood, but his principal loss would have resulted from a greatly diminished number of cubic feet, due to the fact that short sticks lie closer together than large. Had the 200 cords of 12-foot wood been cut in 4-foot lengths there would have been only 176 cords and the owner would have received for it $880 instead of $1,000. It was therefore clearly to his advantage to cut 12-foot lengths, but it would have been to the buyer's advantage to have it cut in 4-foot lengths. He would have received the same actual quantity of wood for $120 less.

It also makes considerable difference to the seller whether wood is chopped or sawed. If chopped the chips are lost. Where the logs are large this loss amounts to no small total. In a cord of four-foot wood with sticks six inches in diameter the chip loss is from 6 to 8 per cent, and of course the shorter the sticks are cut the greater the loss. If the wood is sawed the sawdust loss is scarcely the half of 1 per cent.

Cords of split wood contain less than cords of round sticks. The finer the wood is split the more it makes. Hence wood dealers are often willing to sell kindlings all sawed and split for the same price a cord as unsplit wood. They get back the cost of labor in the increased bulk.

A cord (128 cubic feet) of 4-foot hard wood usually contains about 85 cubic feet of solid wood; a cord of 3-foot wood averages 83½ cubic feet or 2-foot wood 84 feet and of 1-foot wood, 85 feet. The conifers (soft woods) contain 90 to 96 cubic feet. Thus the purchaser receives on an average about two-thirds of a cord of real wood and one-third of a cord of spaces.

In some countries wood is bought by weight and the buyer comes more nearly getting what he bargains for but even then he may miss it if he receives green wood when he wants dry. According to timber-testing engineers of the United States forest service, wood may lose half or more its green weight in seasoning.

Alms Instead of a Just Reward.

The Rev. Dr. Alexander H. Young writes: "The army button, which the old soldier wears, he is proud to display. It tells of service rendered his country during the time of her need—exacting drill, of long marches, of midnight vigils, of short rations, of valiant fighting, of painful wounds, of dangerous sickness, of hospital sufferings, of incurable diseases, of shortened life, perhaps of a dreaded death.

"The check of the Board of Relief should be as much a badge of honor as the army button. But how do the recipient and many in the church view it? When application is made for it, the minister asking it of his presbytery does so with bated breath, and hangs his head with shame, as though he were doing something that put a stigma of disgrace upon him. And his friends share something of the same feeling and deeply regret that one whom they love and honor has to submit to such humiliation as this.

"And when the check comes from the board, how does the recipient view it? With gratitude, of course, for the pecuniary relief it brings to him and his. But does he look upon it as the same time as something to be proud of, a mark of distinction that he would fain show to all his friends? Nay; he takes it because he must; because there seems to be no other help for him than this.

"So widespread is this feeling of shame at having it known that one is upon the Board of Relief that formal and reiterated requests have come to the board, asking that the name of the board printed on the end of the checks be omitted that bank officials and others in the smaller towns may not know that one is an annuitant of the Board of Relief."—Success Magazine.

Putting Expression Into It.

The teacher of elocution was nearly discouraged, says a writer in the Boston Transcript. He urged his pupils, in some excitement, to put more expression into their recitations.

"Too flat!" he exclaimed. "Too colorless! You can do better than that. Try again. Now! Open your mouth and throw yourself into it!"

THE REAL SLAVE.

English Actor Says Men, Not Women, Need More Liberty.

"It's all right to talk about woman suffrage," said William Hawtrey, a noted English actor, "but what I think we all need is more liberty for men.

"Women have a lot more real liberty than men. Take the question of hats, for instance. Get a crowd of men together and shout 'Hats off,' and every one of us gets bareheaded in the shortest possible time. Could you do it with women? Not in a million years. Why, they had to pass laws before they could get women to take off their hats in the theaters.

"Suppose a man came home at night and told his wife that he'd bought a new blue hat that was a perfect dream. Would she be interested in the hat? Not at all. A new hat. The idea; why, he had a perfectly good derby that he wore last fall. What possible use could he have for two hats? His mind must be affected.

"Just suppose; I say suppose, for of course no man would have the courage to do it, but just for the sake of argument let us suppose that a fellow did tell his wife that he thought her last season's hat was good enough for this season. Can you imagine what his life would be for the rest of the summer?

"No, sir; what is really needed is more freedom for men."

I went to my doctor, but his medicine could only stop the itching. At night I suffered so fearfully that I could not sleep. I could not bear to touch my hands with water. HOW NOT TO PLANT TREES.

Experiments in England Show Mistakes of the Old Method.

It is an article of faith among fruit growers that fruit trees must be planted in a certain special way if success is to be obtained, says London Nature. The soil is properly prepared, a large hole is made, wide, but not deep, the roots are carefully spread out in all directions and arranged near the surface, with a slight upward bearing at the ends. The soil is filled in with many precautions. Small quantities of the finer soil are first worked in among the roots, hollow places caused by archings in the stouter roots are filled up, and then the rest of the soil is put in, trodden carefully down, and the whole left to the compacting influence of the rain. The tree is supported by stakes until it is sufficiently firmly established.

All this, according to the report before us, is precisely wrong; it is all exactly the opposite of what it should be. The proper way to plant a tree is to make a small hole, to double the roots up anyhow, and stick the tree in, throw in the soil and ram it down as hard as if one were fixing a gate post. The experiments seem convincing enough. They have been made at Woburn, Harpenden, Bedford, various places in Cambridgeshire and in Devonshire. Fifty-nine per cent of the sets showed in favor of ramming, 27 per cent showed no difference—i. e., all the elaborate detail of the ordinary way of planting was simply a waste of time—and only 14 per cent were against ramming. It makes no difference by what criterion the trees are judged; planting in this new way gives better results than planting in the orthodox fashion.

When a new fact is established by scientific experiment that no longer fits in with the old practical formula which has hitherto sufficed to cover all cases, there is invariably a cry raised about the antagonism of theory (or science) and practice. This has duly happened in the present case. But no practical man has been able to give any reason for the faith that is in him beyond the fact that it is sanctioned by established custom; these appear to be first serious experiments on the subject, and they do not seem to be vitiated by any constant error. Examination of the trees shows that ramming has led to a copious development of fibrous roots. Direct experiments showed that the fibrous and small roots produced in the nursery before lifting play no great part as roots during the subsequent life of the tree; the important point is to induce fresh root formation and ramming does this more rapidly than the orthodox method of planting. No harm was done, and sometimes even good resulted, when the old roots were deliberately damaged before planting.

THE POPULAR PULPIT

MAN AS THE IMAGE OF GOD.

By Rev. Junius B. Remensnyder.

And God said, let us make man in our image after our likeness.—Genesis i, 26.

There are two theories of the origin of man. One would bring him up from the earth beneath, placing his genealogy with the worms. The other, the biblical, brings him down from above.

According to Genesis, man was made in the Divine "likeness." What are the marks of this "image of God"?

First, the gift of reason. God is a rational, thinking spirit. And, in distinction from the lower creatures, He has stamped upon us this likeness of Himself. God has graven His mathematical thoughts upon atoms and crystals and snowflakes and on stars and worlds, and we can read these thoughts and admire the wondrous picture He has painted in the vast gallery of nature because we have a faculty of reason akin to His own.

The "image of God," again, consists in freedom. God is free. He knows no law but His sovereign will. He does what He chooses to do. Nature is under the grip of law. Necessity holds it with unbending hand. The animals obey their inevitable instincts. But God has clothed man with this Divine prerogative of free will. He is a sovereign.

"His mind to Him a kingdom is." To Him pertains the power of choice. He is the architect of his own soul. He is the fashioner of his own destiny. In the exercise of this perilous power he can raise himself to the angels or degrade himself below the brutes.

The "image of God" further appears in man's moral nature. As power characterizes the pagan deities, so righteousness and goodness characterize Jehovah. The seat of man's likeness to this divine quality is in conscience. To be pure in heart, to shun injustice and wrong, to cherish noble and unselfish ideals, to do good to fellow men, this likens one most of all to God, his maker.

This unique truth should imbue man with a sense of his greatness. It should impel him to self respect. To stoop to the low and mean is to do violence to his high nature and to commit sacrilege against God, whose image he wears. Only good and noble ends are worthy of him.

Again it shows that we are fitted for divine fellowship. Man's thoughts can reach up and God's thoughts can come down and meet, because our natures are akin. Hence we can have secret speech with God. Prayer is justified. The whispers of our souls are the voices of a sea that beats on the shore of life, but of a sea that stretches away to shores where is set the throne of God.

We taught respect for our fellow man. In every one, no matter how fallen, we should see vestiges of this divine lineage. Hence, too, issues a sure hope of immortality. The supreme characteristics of God is that "He liveth forever." We are made in His image; we cannot die. We have the inbreathing of an indestructible life.

Let no one, then, mar this "image of God," but preserve its pristine beauty and remember that He who made us in His likeness made us for Himself to serve not perishing, but the noblest ends of being.

DARKNESS OF PROVIDENCE.

By Rev. W. H. Baker.

Text—"Jesus answered and said unto him, What I do thou knowest not, but thou shalt know hereafter."—John 13:7.

The darkness rests upon Providence because of its complexity. Even if God's dealings with us had reference but to ourselves, they would be hard enough to understand. What man can tell the uses to which God means to put him, the glory to which He means to exalt him, even in this world; how much less than in the world to come! These threads of the earthly life, how they stretch beyond the chasm of death and are woven into a new web above the stars! But the problem is rendered vastly more complex for us by the interdependence of all our lives. Each thread is necessary to the integrity of the fabric, and has its relation to all other threads. It is in life as in the diagrams of the mathematician, where the same line may represent the side of many different figures. Our personal history touches that of many another, and our influence ramifies through the society in which we move.

The great law of faith renders mystery indispensable. Faith is the law of this probationary dispensation, just as knowledge is the law of the dispensation of reward. If a man says that the doctrine of God's word is incomprehensible, the answer is twofold. God is infinite, and He cannot be perfectly comprehended or apprehended by finite minds. His truths, like the mountains, lift their gray heads and hide themselves in the clouds of heaven; and though we pass around the base, and partly take their measure, we must always enter the world in which these mysteries are lost to sight, before we can take their altitude. Then another answer may be returned, that this intellect of ours must, along with affections and the will, be put upon probation. It is the whole man that God is providing, educating, training. Does not God in this world put the intellect of the creature upon its trial before Him so that he shall see the reasonableness of accepting all the high mysteries of grace, simply by the testimony upon which they rest? This law of faith extends no less to the conscience, inasmuch as the law is made the sole standard of rectitude to man, and he is not permitted to guide himself by his natural conscience except as that conscience is enlightened by God's infallible rule of right.

This law of faith extends to affections, since we are to yield a cordial and loving trust, though God Himself is wrapped in clouds. This law extends to the will, since we must defer to the naked authority of God's commands. Now, if God explains this sickness or that bankruptcy, this bereavement or that sorrow, there could be no exercise of faith, and the law of the whole economy under which we are placed would be completely reversed.

Heaven is the state and place of rewards and praise. In order that we may apprehend its joys and the rewards bestowed upon us by the Master, we must survey our earthly life in all its connections. And the word "praise" indispensably requires that we embalm in song our whole experience.

LIVING FOR ONE'S SELF.

By Rev. Frank M. Goodchild.

For none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself.—Romans 14:7.

Nobody is independent. All human lives are inseparably joined. Things we said yesterday will be recalled with pleasure or pain by somebody twenty years from now. What we did last week will make somebody better or worse when our bodies have been turned to dust.

Life is rather solemn business. Nobody is so insignificant as to be without influence. Most of us would be filled with horror if we could read the record of our lives and see how a word we spoke carelessly started some one on the way to ruin. And it would fill us with a bliss that is like heaven itself if we could see that there are persons who date all the good there is in their lives to some kindly deed of ours done simply from impulse.

However much we may wish at times that we could do as we please without our deeds affecting the lives of others, yet a moment's thought will make us glad that human lives are thus bonded together. There is dignity in life when we feel that a hundred years from now men may be better for our having lived. And, on the other hand, there is responsibility in living, since after we are gone men may be worse for our misdeeds. It doubtless would be more pleasing if our goodness might bless others without our badness cursing them. But you cannot have one side without the other, any more than you can have light without shadow. If it is right that men should be able to help one another, it must be right, because it is a part of the same arrangement that they should be able to hurt one another.

Sometimes we intentionally influence people, as when we argue with a man to bring him to our views, but perhaps the mightiest influence is exerted unconsciously. As the iceberg chills the air for miles around it, or as the honeysuckle makes the air about it heavy with fragrance, so men radiate helpful or hurtful influences. Our character, whatever it may be, is contagious.

It was said by a man who was dying: "Oh, that my influence might be gathered up and buried with me." That cannot be, however much we wish it. Our influence goes on blessing or blasting people forever. Of another man it was said: "His presence always made men better." What a fine thing that is—to have such a character that when you meet people you make them wish to be nobler, purer, truer.

The Unconscious Tribute.

When his business had yielded such profits that he began to take life more easily and think of retiring, Mr. Holden endeavored to throw some good things in the way of a younger firm. "How about letting Hobbs & Rawson have your next consignment of canned novelties?" he suggested to one of the manufacturers. "They are hard-working, gentlemanly young fellows."

"That's just the trouble," said the manufacturer, with a decided shake of his head. "I'm no gentleman myself, and I don't propose to mix up nor have any business dealin's with gentlemen.

"I'll consign my goods to you, same as I've always done, and you can do as you like with 'em."

When You Visit New York, Put Up at the Hotel Empire.

In everything that constitutes a satisfactory hotel, the Empire, at Broadway and Sixty-third street, is abundantly endowed. The man of business, the woman on her shopping expedition, the family coming to town to attend social functions, the tourist on sight-seeing bent, if they make their headquarters at The Empire, will each be in the center of that which interests them, for the reason that The Empire, by Subway, Elevated Railroad and Surface cars, is in close touch with the center of social, business, amusement and shopping centers. The house itself is delightfully appointed. There is nothing in up-to-date hotel equipment lacking at The Empire. The rooms are large, well and comfortably furnished and all have an abundance of air and sunshine. The management keeps constantly in mind the greatest possible comfort for the traveler at the smallest cost, consistent with such service. The policy of the restaurant is such as to meet with the approval of all classes; for instance, a delightful breakfast is served in the pretty Ladies' Restaurant at any price from thirty to eighty cents each; a Matinee Luncheon is served for fifty cents and a table d'hote Dinner from 5:30 to 8:30, at one dollar. There is an orchestra which dispenses exquisite music during Luncheon, Dinner and After Theater Supper. Besides the above table d'hote meals, there is an a la carte restaurant which has become noted for its excellent cooking, efficient service and moderate charges. The Gentlemen's Cafe is one of the best appointed rooms of its kind on Broadway; a special bill of fare for business men is provided in this room between the hours of 11 and 3 o'clock daily. Here congregates every one of note in the Automobile world. The Empire being in the center of "Automobile Row." Central Park is only one block away. The principal restaurants, noted clubs, great theaters and famous shops are all within five or six minutes' walk, while the Subway and Elevated Stations are within one minute's walk of the hotel. The Empire continues, as it has since its opening, under the management of Mr. W. Johnson Quinn.

Another Notice

We wish to notify our debtors that it is time to settle their accounts with us. We will give you until July 15. Keesler Mg., Co.

The Indiana tax board has notified railways of the state of the assessed value of their properties for taxation. Beginning July 6, twelve days will be allowed for hearing appeals for a change or modification of the assessments. The board has assessed the electric railway property on a valuation of $21,663,001, as against $21,666,768 for 1908. The value of the improvements on electric railways for 1909 is estimated at $994,189, while that for 1908 was placed at $934,565, making a net gain in the value of improvements over 1908 of $59,624. And yet you hear people say that these lines are a damage to a community and a small town. The taxes derived from such corporations are immense and more than pays for the damages done. It is a benefit to a farm as the land is worth more with a traction line than without. Let us boost anything that is for the betterment of our condition.

Florence Buchanan and wife left Monday evening for Butler to visit with their daughter, Mrs. J. E. Sturgis, over night and on Tuesday they left on the Lake Shore for the west. Considerable of their time will be spent in the state of Washington where they have relatives. They will be gone the greater part of the summer if they like it.

St. Joe was certainly a lively town last Saturday evening, people coming in to trade, hear the concert and to celebrate. The hitching racks were tied full of horses and people had to hold their horses many places. We might say here that the concert was the best of the season and the large crowd shows that more interest is being taken and that the efforts of the band is more appreciated. Saturday night the concert will be given and a large crowd is desired. Come to St. Joe to trade.

D. J. Baker, who has been at Auburn for four weeks on the County board of equalization, returned home Saturday evening, having completed their work. In their work they had to equalize the assessments made by the various township assessors, fix the assessments on corporations and uncover any property not given in to the assessors. In doing this thousands of dollars have been put on the tax duplicate that otherwise would go unassessed and the holders pay no tax on such.

George Swineford and wife moved into a house recently built on their farm north of town for a summer outing. They found that their brooded chicken were too closely confined on their lot here in town so they moved them to their farm where they could have full sway. If they like their new home they will make it their home during the summer months. A few household goods were moved so as to keep house and when they want to come home they can. The house is built in the woods and plenty of good shade can be had.

Mr. and Mrs. Bert Patterson left Tuesday on train No. 5 for an extended trip through the West. They were joined at Auburn Junction by Mr. and Mrs. M. E. Olds of Bluffton, and Laura and Joy Shutt of Auburn. Their first stop after leaving Chicago will be Denver, Colo. They will visit the Garden of the Gods, then go to Salt Lake City from there to San Francisco Cal., and many other points of interest before going to Seattle, Washington, to attend the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition. They expect to be gone until about the 1st of September. After several weeks of sight seeing through the west they will return by the way of Canada. This will be a delightful as well as an educational trip.

Aaron Thomas has discontinued running the city dray and Stanley Monroe is the new driver. Aaron is assisting Dr. Bowman in harvesting.

A great decrease in the number of casualties resulting from the first day's celebration of Independence Day is shown in reports published Monday by the Chicago Tribune from special correspondents all over the United States. Up to an early hour this morning only 19 deaths and 247 injuries had been reported. Part of the decrease of the list of dead and injured, the dispatches show, was due to the fact that it fell on Sunday, and part of it was due to new legislation during the preceding year for a "safe and sane Fourth." Dead, 19—By fireworks and resulting fires, 3; by cannon, 1; by firearms, 3; by gunpowder, 2; by toy pistols, 10. Injured—427. By fireworks, 166; by cannon, 51; by firearms, 62; by gunpowder, 59; by torpedoes, 8; by toy pistols, 58; by bomb canes, 9; by runaways, 14. Fire loss, $69,200. In Chicago, none dead, 7 injured.

David Popers', Jim Malone and wife, Jennie White and Marie Ice, Henry Krabills', and Frank Benninghoff took in the Wawasee excursion.

The ice question has become a serious one here. The houses in which ice was put up last winter, have gone bad and the ice is melting bad. Kagey is using artificial ice, it being shipped from Auburn.

Fort Wayne can now lay claims to being a real city. A bank defaulter apprehended and an attempt to kidnap a boy frustrated all in one day are enough to make any citizen swell out his chest over the fame of his city.

Mrs. Henry Carnes is in receipt of a program of the Fourth of July celebration at Long Beach, California. The program for the day was as follows: Parade, three miles long; national salute, 21 guns; patriotic exercises in auditorium; races on the sand; band concert on the beach and in the sun parlor; baloon; aquatic sports; base ball; horse swimming thru the surf around roller coaster; pie eating contest in shell; salute; Japanese fire works in day light.

The June-fly

by S. Sylvester Knisely, of Sandusky, Ohio.

The following article is written by S. S. Knisely and will no doubt be of interest to many of our readers, as Mr. Knisely is a former St. Joe boy.

It is not my intention to give a scientific description of this little pest, and if the reader wishes such a treatise he must consult someone more thoroughly versed in the science of entomology than the writer. I wish, however, to give a brief description of the insect as it appears to the ordinary individual.

June flys, or "Canadian Soldiers," as they are sometimes called, belong, perhaps, to the same family as the mosquito. They are much larger, however, than the ordinary mosquito, having a body from one to one and a half inch long; varying in color from a light yellow to a dark brown.

The June fly is provided with a pair of bead like eyes about half the size of a pin head. The head proper is very small being no larger than one of the eyes. The body consists of a horny substance from which extend a pair of membranous double wings, about three-fourths of an inch long. The abdomen is similar to that of a wasp, only somewhat smaller; and, from the extremity of this, there extends a pair of hair-like projections from one and a half to two and a half inches long; which, when the insect is at rest, are extended upwards at an angle of about forty-five degrees. It is also provided with three pairs of slender legs; and when at rest, the forward pair is held together and upward in much the same manner as the rear projections, and at a passing glance, they resemble a horn extending from the head.

The natural life of the June fly is very short, being from twenty-four to seventy-two hours. It never eats and is very lazy in its habits. As it grows old it breaks open its back, between the wings, and a new one appears, leaving the old carcass standing just as it did in life. Thus by death it gives life to another of its kind; and how many times this process is repeated the writer is not able to say.

June flies are to be found near bodies of fresh water; perhaps most numerously on the islands and borders of the great lakes. They make their appearance in northern Ohio in the early part of June, and continue in more or less quantities throughout the summer months. Some seasons they begin to appear gradually and again they may come in large numbers in a single night. They increase in quantity from day to day until about the middle of July, when they begin to decrease; and by the time the early frosts come there is not one to be found.

It is one of the June fly's habits to settle on the sides of buildings, or on objects near a light. All night long they may be seen fluttering around a light, sometimes in such great numbers as to almost eclipse it. They finally settle to the ground beneath, one by one, where they crawl over each other and are crushed under the feet of pedestrians. Sometimes when they are numerous, they pile up from one to three inches deep; and the writer has seen street sweepers take up a good sized wheel-barrow load from under a single arc light where they have congregated during the night. That is saying nothing about the millions that have been crushed underfoot rendering the sidewalks so slippery that it is difficult to walk; and pedestrians may be seen going some distance out of their way to avoid walking over them. When they are crushed they transmit an odor similar to that of fish.

The June fly has never been known to bite or sting, and like the buzzing house fly and singing mosquito it is perfectly noisless in its flight. They are so tame that they may be picked up any time and children may be seen playing with hands full of them.

Aside from the odor or an occasional strain on the clothing where they have been crushed, they afford no objectional difficulties except perhaps to tickle the ears and nose of the timid excursionist.

It is often discussed by ordinary individuals as to the origination of these little creatures, but judging by their odor and the fact that they may be seen, as it were, taking life and rising from the water, it is the opinion of the writer that they originate in germs given forth by dead and decomposed fish. If that is the case, and they did not take life in the form of a June fly, these germs would no doubt develope into some dreadful disease. That being true they may be considered as a blessing rather than a curse.

Echoes of The 4th

The Fourth of July was pretty warm at Butler and the effects have not entirely died out. Marshall Lowe ordered that no fireworks of any kind should be used in the city. In the evening the boys got together with their fireworks and commenced a real celebration. The marshall made an attempt to stop it and the boys proceeded to shoot them at him until he was compelled to give it up. Two gangs were organized one in the north and one in the south end of town. As soon as Lowe would make his appearance at one end the work would open at the other thus keeping him in hot water, all evening. The next day the boys were brought up and an arrest caused and some of the citizens interfered and had Lowe arrested. The marshall demanded a jury trial and after two hours deliberation the jury announced that they were "hung". It is understood that the vote stood 10 to 2 for conviction.

Is Settled By Jury

The case between Lewis Blair and D. J. Baker, administrator of the Frank Draggoo estate, came to a close last Friday. It will be remembered that trouble was caused by Mr. Blair, he claiming that Frank had given him two colts that were on the farm at the time of his death. At the time the stock and goods were appraised no claim on the colts was made by Mr. Blair. Later he tried to tell Mr. Baker how that the colts were no longer property of the estate but that he had the ownership of the animals. Some trouble was the result and the case was brought before the jury and settled last Thursday and Friday, the jury deciding that Mr. Blair had no just claim on the colts whatever. Mr. Baker will have the colts, buggy and harness to dispose of.

Is Elected Four Times

For the fourth consecutivetime Fred L. Feick was elected July 4th., as the legislative representative of C. N. Bell lodge, No. 158, B. of R. T. The term of the office is two years and the election was unanimous. The lodge thereby showed its esteem for Mr. Feick and the work he has done before the state legislature. It means, too, that Mr. Feick will very likely be made the permanent chairman of the state legislative board. The proposition to make the chairmanship permanent is left to the legislative board and the election of a chairman will be put to a referendum vote of the members in the state. Mr. Feick's present term as chairman expires in September, 1910.—Clipper.

Disastrous Runaway.

A disastrous runaway occured on the farm of Roland Bearss, Monday morning, in which Mr. Bearss is looser to the extent of a mowing machine. His son, Fred, had been driving the team and left them a moment to get oil for the machine when the horses became frightened and ran out in the road and going a mile turned and came back to the starting point and on entering the gate the machine hung up on two shade trees completely demolishing the mower and both trees. Fortunately no one was injured, but Mr. Beasse does not know as yet whether the horses were injured or not.

An Arm Amputated

Carl M. Hart, Defiance county treasurer and former citizen of Hicksville, met with a serious accident in Toledo on Sunday evening, July 4th, which resulted in the loss of his right arm above the elbow. The accident was caused through missing his hold while attempting to board a Cherry street car at Jefferson avenue and St. Clair street. As it was, the rear wheel of the car ran over his right arm at the the elbow joint, causing a compound fracture which necessitated amputating the arm just above the point of injury. Dr. James Donnelly, of Toledo hospital, performed the operation soon after Hart's arrival there. Mr. Hart is well known to many of our readers.

Potato Bug Destroyer

Farmers in Elkhart county are elated over the discovery of what they believe to be the certain destroyer of the potatoe bug. A bug with variegated rings in size slightly smaller than the potatoe bug has made its appearance in the potatoe patches west of Goshen, and the new arrivals are waging war on the potato bug. Moving from one plant to another the new arrivals make short work of the potato bug, eating them quickly and not leaving a single one on the plant.

Mrs. Hadsell Very Ill

Word from Mrs. Marshall Hadsell of Aurora, Mo., states that her condition is serious and that she is suffering from cancer, the attending physicians giving her no hopes whatever. It will be remembered that Mr. and Mrs. Hadsell spent the summer two years ago in Auburn occupying rooms on West Seventh street, and her acquaintances and friends in the county will learn with deep regret of her condition. Mr. Hadsell was a former resident of St. Joe.—Dispatch.

Train Goes Into Flood.

Swollen by unprecedented rains and by melted snows from the mountains brought down through the Missouri Valley, the rivers at Kansas City left their banks and caused damaging floods in many parts of Missouri and Kansas. Train No. 5 of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe railway met with a wreck at Pomona, Kas. Of the ten coaches which made up the train four, a baggage car and three day coaches, left the track and rolled into eighteen feet of water. The coaches sank so gradually that the passengers and crew were able to get into the Pullman cars before the other coaches finally toppled over and sank from view. People from the surrounding country, attracted by the cries of the three hundred marooned passengers, immediately endeavored to start a rescue. Boat trips of from one to two miles were made to farm houses and the passengers were all finally taken to safety. The passengers probably will have to remain at the farm houses until the floods subside.

Three Hurt on the Vandalia.

A south-bound Vandalia freight train jumped the track a mile north of Brown's Valley, Ind., while running at a high rate of speed. The injured are: D. C. Briggs, engineer, leg and knee badly hurt; George Morel, fireman, shoulder dislocated; Jesse James, brakeman, hand badly lacerated. The cause of the wreck is unknown. The train was running at a high rate of speed when it left the track and the engine was turned completely over. Every car in the train left the track and the track itself was plowed up for several rods. Traffic was demoralized on the road for more than twenty-four hours.

Five Injured in Collision.

Forgetting his orders to stop at Morrison, Ind., Richard T. Hyland, motorman on an interurban car on the Louisville & Indianapolis Traction Company's line, ran on to Holman, six miles beyond Jeffersonville, Ind., where, on rounding a curve, a head-on collision occurred with the Dixie Flyer, south-bound from Indianapolis. The injured are: Samuel Ashby, Charlestown, Ind.; Edward Williams, Charlestown; Susan Nelson, Charlestown; Dr. E. W. Bruner, Jeffersonville, Ind.; S. H. Black, 1502 Lincoln Ave., Cincinnati, Ohio. Hyland jumped and escaped injury.

An Uprising in Colombia.

A revolution has broken out in the republic of Colombia, apparently against the government of Rafael Reyes, the president of the republic, who is now in London, according to the British steamer Median, just arrived from Savanilla. Barranquilla and its seaport Savamilla seven miles away are in the hands of the revolutionists.

Suicided After Seeing Wife's Body.

Responding to a notice that the body of his wife, who it is believed committed suicide two or three days ago, had been taken from the Ohio river at Louisville, Ky., Walter J. Honaker, member of a prominent firm of retail shoe dealers, met the body at an undertaking establishment and after identifying it, committed suicide.

Drouth Causes Big Loss.

Two million dollars will no more than cover the losses sustained by stock men as a result of the drouth in northern Mexico, according to conservative estimates. The drouth which has lasted nearly a year has been broken by heavy rains but cattle have died by the tens of thousands from starvation and thirst.

Mission Ship Lost in Pacific.

The schooner Monterey (Captain Anderson), arriving in San Francisco, Cal., from Alaska, reports the possible loss of the missionary schooner J. F. Abler and a score of lives. The Abler sailed from Seattle on June 3 with a crew of eight men and twelve or thirteen passengers.

Fatal Fight Over Horse Trade.

William James, a negro from Brooklyn, Ill., was shot to death and Frank Byrne and William Rice were wounded in a street fight over a horse trade in East St. Louis, Ill. S. T. Byrne, of Olney, Ill., was shot through the thigh.

Killed Son in Mistake for Burglar.

Mistaking his little son, Herbert, 6 years old, for a burglar, Fred Kloppe, of Galion, Ohio, shot and killed the boy who was walking in his sleep.

TRAMP MURDERS FOUR PERSONS

South Dakota Father Shot Dead—Wife, Daughter and Visitor Slain.

J. W. Christie, a farmer, living near Rudolph, S. D., his wife, his daughter, aged 18 years, and a neighbor were murdered Saturday by a tramp, whose name is not known. It is supposed that the murder was the result of an attempt to get a large sum of money supposed to have been in the Christie home. The murder was discovered when a neighbor went to the Christie home.

Mr. Christie was milking a cow in his barnyard Saturday morning when the unknown person approached him, and before he could make a sound shot him dead. The murderer hurried to the house and, finding Mrs. Christie and her daughter and a boy named Roy Maine, who was visiting at the house, prepared to fight him, he began firing. The first shots took effect, and the two women and the boy fell dead at the feet of the murderer.

It is supposed that the man who committed the crime was acquainted to a certain extent with the Christie family and their habits, for few people knew that Christie was in the habit of keeping large sums of money in his house. It is believed that he had coin to the extent of several thousands of dollars in his home at the time of the murder. Posses of farmers were immediately organized and a hasty pursuit of the murderer was begun.

FOURTH'S DEATH TOLL SMALLER

Saner Celebration Brings Twelve Less Fatalities than in 1908.

More rigid laws and the growth of public sentiment for a sane celebration of the Fourth have had their result all over the country in reducing the number of killed and wounded in the annual holiday.

Full returns of the two-day celebration this year show a falling off in the number of killed of twelve from the record of 1908. There were forty-four fatalities reported at 2 o'clock Tuesday morning, as against fifty-six at the same time last year.

A more careful enumeration of the accidents by the police of the larger cities and the extending of the count to the smaller towns caused an apparent increase in the list of injured. Figures showed 2,361 injured throughout the country, as against 1,899 in 1908.

There also was an increase in the fire losses caused by the celebration this year, the total reported being $734,575, as against $257,960 in 1908. The greater part of this increase in the loss is accounted for, however, by a single fire in Spokane, Wash., which destroyed property to the value of $350,000.

SHIPS BUILT 144 LESS THAN '08.

Year's Record Includes Shenango and E. B. Winslow.

The smallest output of the American shipbuilding industry since 1898 is shown in the figures gathered by the bureau during the fiscal year just ended. Shipbuilding contracts, however, indicate a material increase during the year ending June 30 next. There were 1,362 merchant vessels of 232,816 gross tons built in the United States the last year, compared with 1,506 or 588,627 gross tons during the fiscal year 1908, which was the record year of American shipbuilding. On the great lakes thirty-six steel steamers of 38,426 gross tons were built, including the Shenango of 3,047 tons, the largest vessel ever built on the lakes, and the Edward B. Winslow, of Bath, Me., the largest wooden schooner ever built. No vessels for foreign trade and no square rigged vessels were built. Of the year's output 60,952 tons were barges and canal boats.

$400,000 FIRE AT COBALT, ONT.

One Dead, Six Hurt, Several Missing and 2,000 Homeless.

Fire swept through Cobalt, Ont., causing a loss of $350,000 to $400,000, at least one death and the injury of six persons. It is estimated that 2,000 persons are homeless. They will be cared for by the municipal authorities. Stores, saloons and other business structures on both sides of Haileybury road for half a mile were burned clean. It was during the use of dynamite to check the flames that the one fatality occurred. A foreigner, unidentified, rushed into a building just as the charge went off. Of the $350,000 loss not more than one-tenth is covered by insurance. The Meyer shaft of the Nipissing property and No. 4 of the Ferland Chambers mine were destroyed. Several children are missing, but it is thought that they will turn up safely.

BRIDE AND GROOM DIE.

Identity of Couple Drowned at South Bend Is Revealed.

Death in a suicide compact in the river at South Bend, Ind., ended a two-day honeymoon and terminated the romance of Herman Lindemann and his bride, formerly Eleanor Zister, both of Chicago. The two were married Saturday at St. Joseph, Mich., by a justice. They rode to death in the St. Joseph river over the dam at South Bend. Those who saw the boat go over the rapids declare the two must have died in a suicide compact. As the boat shot over the dam Lindemann arose in the bow of the frail rowboat, smiling at the horror-stricken crowd which shouted a warning from the shore, puffed twice on a cigarette, and then, as the boat went over the dam, clasped his bride in his arms and sank from sight. Discovery of the young man's identity came when search was made at the Crescent Hotel, where Lindemann and his bride had registered Monday. Chicago addresses of the two were found in clothing left in their rooms.

VICTIM OF SOLDIER DEAD.

Captain John C. Raymond, Shot by Corporal Succumbs to Wounds.

Captain John C. Raymond of the Second Cavalry, Fort Des Moines, died Thursday after lingering between life and death since he was shot by Corporal Lisle Crabtree at the army post there three weeks ago. The shooting followed a reprimand given Crabtree for staying in the city longer than the time allowed him. Sergeant James Washburn and Corporal Such, who were shot at the same time, recovered. Crabtree is in the guardhouse at Fort Des Moines.

FROM FOREIGN LANDS.

Theodore Roosevelt has gone to Sotik to resume hunting.

Dr. Theodore Barth, the leader of one of the radical parties in the German reichstag, is dead.

King Alfonso of Spain, while playing polo, fell from his horse. His ankle was sprained severely.

The Venezuelan Government has purchased the American steamers Nantcoke and Dispatch for government service on Lake Maracaibo, where they will compete with the private company which was granted a monopoly by Castro when he was President.

In the old college town of Cambridge, England, scientists from all parts of the world gathered to take part in the three days' celebration of the 100th anniversary of the birth of Charles Darwin, the great evolutionist. There were 235 universities and learned bodies represented, thirty of which were American. The gift of all America was a bust of Darwin.

In the British parliament Sir John Barlow, a Liberal member of the House of Commons, and a well known merchant, startled the country with the sensational suggestion that the Germans have established a depot of arms containing 50,000 Mauser rifles, in the center of London, together with 7,500,000 rounds of ammunition for the use of 66,000 trained German soldiers now employed in various capacities in England.

SENATE VOTE ON TARIFF.

Vote to adopt corporation tax: Yeas, 60; nays, 11.

Vote to substitute corporation tax for income tax: Yeas, 45; nays, 31.

Vote to exempt educational, charitable and religious corporations from provisions of tax: Yeas, 32; nays, 42.

Vote exempting bonds from taxation: Yeas, 41; nays, 34.

Following is a synopsis of the chief provisions of the corporation tax:

Levies 2 per cent tax on net earnings of all corporations in the United States when the earnings are in excess of $5,000 a year, that amount being exempt.

Requires all corporations, no matter how large or small their earnings may be, to make reports to the government annually, fully setting forth character of business, capital employed and the full amount of net earnings.

All reports thus furnished the government will be regarded as confidential, unless there is reason to believe that deception is being practiced to escape taxation.

Federal investigation of books will be made whenever there is reason to believe false reports are being made. Penalties are provided for the furnishing of false reports.

All of the machinery relating to the collection, remission and refund of internal revenue taxes is made applicable to the corporation tax, and the responsibility for the enforcement of the proposed law rests with the commissioner of internal revenue in the same manner as other taxes.

Every latitude is given to concerns subject to the tax for the exemption of expenses, cost of maintenance, the depreciation of property, debts and the interest thereon.

Bonds of all corporations, when issued in amounts less than the total stock issue, are expressly exempted from taxation.

DISCOVER A PLOT AGAINST CZAR

Stockholm Officials Find Slayer of Major—Sought Ruler's Death.

Further evidence of an anarchist plot to assassinate the Emperor of Russia on his approaching European trip was unearthed in Stockholm, Sweden. Adolf Vang, the Swede who shot and killed Major General Beckman, chief of the coast artillery, and then committed suicide, belonged to a group of anarchists who have been plotting the death of the Russian ruler. Eight Russian anarchists were arrested before the killing of Gen. Beckman, but their capture was kept secret. Two of them were found hiding in the palace. Vang left a letter saying that inasmuch as his Russian comrades had been arrested it was impossible for him alone to kill the Emperor, and consequently he assassinated the first high official he met.

TO PAY GUNNESS DEATH DEBT.

Estate Must Settle Helgelein Claim, Is Verdict of Jury.

In the case of F. M. Pitner, administrator of the estate of Andrew Helgelein against Wesley Fogle, administrator of the estate of Belle Gunness, a jury in Laporte, Ind., found for the plaintiff in the sum of $3,145, an amount representative of that which Mrs. Gunness received from Andrew Helgelein on the 14th of January, 1908, directly before she killed him, plus 6 per cent interest. The possession of the Helgelein money was clinched by evidence introduced proving that in January, 1908, Mrs. Gunness made efforts to convert $1,500 in gold into currency. The only gold she ever received was that which had been paid to her by Helgelein.

SUFFRAGISTS PICK ANNA SHAW.

Minister Elected President of National Association at Seattle.

The national convention of the National Woman Suffrage Association in Seattle elected the following officers:

President—Rev. Anna H. Shaw, Moylan, Pa.

First Vice President—Mrs. Rachel Foster Avery, Swarthmore, Pa.

Second Vice President—Mrs. Florence Kelley, New York.

Corresponding Secretary—Miss Kate M. Gordon, New Orleans.

Recording Secretary—Mrs. Ella S. Stewart, Chicago.

Treasurer—Mrs. Harriet Taylor Upton, Warren, O.

First Auditor—Miss Laura Clay, Lexington, Ky.

Second Auditor—Miss Alice Stone Blackwell, Boston.

Secretary Gordon accepted re-election unwillingly, with the understanding that she might resign after a few months. The national leaders hope that Prof. Frances Squire Potter may be induced to leave the University of Minnesota and give all her time to the office of corresponding secretary at the New York headquarters to be established.

VALUABLE GOODS SEIZED.

Federal Officials at San Francisco Hunt a Big Smuggling Ring.

Following the seizure of thousands of dollars' worth of oriental art goods consigned to California importers by Collector of the Port F. S. Stratton at San Francisco, it has been learned there that the treasury officials at Washington have ordered Marion Devries, president of the general board of appraisers, to conduct an investigation. It is known that Local Appraiser Mattos has been working for months with secret agents of the treasury department in oriental ports with the object of uncovering what is generally believed to be a smuggling ring of gigantic proportions.

ODDS & ENDS OF SPORT

Daily racing for New York is now practically assured.

The St. Paul ball team is to have the finest park in the American league.

Arthur Reuber has been elected athletic director and coach of the North Dakota Agricultural College.

Belenti, the Carlisle Indian who was tried out by the Athletics and turned over to Kelly, has joined the St. Paul ball team.

Johnny Coulon, bantam champion, and the veteran trainer, George Siddela, have gone to Fox Lake, Wis., for the summer.

Jimmie Kelly, a familiar figure in boxing circles and widely known as a trainer and handler of pugilists, died suddenly in Chicago.

Johnny Hayes, winner of the Olympic Marathon, after running nine miles of a twenty-mile match race in Kansas City with John Svanberg of Sweden, was seized with a cramp and was forced to retire.

Alice D. Mermed of St. Louis, by breaking 100 straight targets, won the amateur championship in the thirty-second tournament and "registered" shoot of the Missouri State Sportsmen's Game and Fish Protective League.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

Midyear conditions reflect steady progress and an encouraging outlook in commerce. July payments of interest and dividends cause very high total clearings and credits show further strengthening in a lower record of failures. Anticipations for the future course of business now depend very largely upon good crops.

Wholesale dealings in the principal necessaries for fall deliveries exceed those recorded a year ago. Advancing prices stimulate more general demand for dry goods and collateral lines, buyers appearing in greater numbers than is customary at this time of year. Bookings show increase in clothing, woolens, silks, footwear and housewares. Furniture exhibits present an unusually attractive display and the July sales are likely to surpass former records. Sales of food furnish a favorable comparison and there is also an improved tone in jewelry, artwares and other luxuries. The disposition of vacation and sporting goods has been exceptionally good. Western demands for ordinary needs and for improvements on the farms assure increasing outlays. Consumption generally has attained a higher level and the purchasing power is distinctly favorable to sustained expansion in the principal branches of distribution.

Developments in the industrial situation include a greater volume of new demands, better prices and additions to the capacity and hands employed. Furnace outputs are now more promptly absorbed. Heavy contracts appear for track equipment, structural steel and steam and electric power. Woodworking lines run upon a steadier basis and there is more absorption of the hard woods and pine. Shipments of leather reflect a wider use.

Bank clearings, $279,109,156, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1908 by 17.2 per cent, and compare with $248,653,065 in 1907.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 23, against 19 last week, 35 in 1908 and 26 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 5, against 7 last week, 10 in 1908 and 9 in 1907—Dun's Weekly Review of Trade.

NEW YORK.

Retail trade has been helped by steady hot weather, holiday preparations and clearance sales, but there are still not lacking reports from many cities that the spring and early summer turn-over is below expectations. Jobbing trade is of a mid-summer small filling-in order character. Certainly the largest business visible is that being booked for next fall, winter and spring. In this respect the strength of demand for cotton goods at hardening quotations, partly due to the strength of raw cotton, and the satisfactory reports as to orders booked by woolen and worsted goods manufacturers for next spring delivery at very high prices are by far the notable features. All Western cities report fall bookings larger than last year by various percentages. In industrial lines the gains previously shown seem to be held.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with July 1 were 213, against 223 last week, 236 in the like week of 1908, 135 in 1907, 134 in 1906 and 127 in 1905.—Bradstreet's.

CHAPTER XIV.

The man who admitted Wheaton to the Porter house let him elect between the drawing room and the library, and he chose the latter instinctively, as less formal and more appropriate for an interview based on his dual social and business relations with the Porters. Wheaton heard the swish of Evelyn's skirts in the hall with a quickening heartbeat. Her black gown intensified her fairness; he had never seen her in black before, and it gave a new accent to her beauty as she came toward him.

"It was a great shock to us down town to hear of your father's illness. He seemed as well as usual yesterday."

"Did you think so? I thought he looked worn when he came home last evening. He has been working very hard lately."

Wheaton had never seen her so grave. He was sincerely sorry for her trouble, and he tried to say so. There was something appealing in her unusual calm; the low tones of her voice were not wasted on him.

"Father asked me to send for you this morning, but he had grown so ill in a few hours that I took the responsibility of not doing it. But something in particular was on his mind, some papers that Mr. Fenton should have. They are in his box at the bank, and I was to give you the key to it. It is something about the Traction Company. You can attend to this easily?"

"Yes, certainly. Mr. Fenton spoke to me about the matter this afternoon. It is very important and he wished me to report to him as soon as I found the papers. No doubt they are in your father's box," he said. "He is always very methodical." He smiled at her reassuringly and rose. She did not ask him to stay longer, but went to fetch the key. It was a small, thin bit of steel.

"I'll return the key to-morrow, after I've found the papers Mr. Fenton wants."

"Very well. I hope you will have no difficulty. Father evidently wished all the papers he has concerning the company to be given to Mr. Fenton. Now, this probably is of no importance whatever, but several years ago father gave me some stock in the street railway company. It came about through a little fun-making between us. We were talking of railway passes—you know he never accepts any"—Wheaton blinked—"and I told him I'd like to have a pass on something, even if it was only a street car line."

She was smiling in her eagerness that he should understand perfectly.

"And he said he guessed he could fix that by giving me some stock in the company. I remember that he made light of it when I thanked him, and said it wasn't so important as it looked. He probably forgot it long ago. I had forgotten it myself—I never got the pass, either! but I brought the stock down thinking that Mr. Fenton might have use for it." She went over to the mantel and picked up a paper, while he watched her; and when she put it into his hand he turned it over. It was a certificate for one hundred shares, issued in due form to Evelyn Porter, but was not assigned.

"It may be important," said Wheaton, regarding the paper thoughtfully. "Mr. Fenton will know. It couldn't be used without your name on the back," he said, indicating the place on the certificate.

"Oh, should I sign it?" she asked, in the curious fluttering way in which many women approach the minor details of business. Wheaton hesitated; he did not imagine that this block of stock could be of importance, and yet the tentative business association with Miss Porter was so pleasant that he yielded to a temptation to prolong it.

"Yes, you might sign it," he said.

Evelyn went to her father's table and wrote her name as Wheaton indicated.

"A witness is required and I will supply that." And Wheaton sat down at the table and signed his name beside hers, while she stood opposite him, the tips of her fingers resting on the table.

"Evelyn Porter" and "James Wheaton." He blotted the names with Porter's blotter, Evelyn still standing by him, slightly mystified as women often are by the fact that their signatures have a value. He felt that there was something intimate in the fact of their signing themselves together there. He was thrilled by her beauty.

On his way down the slope to the car, Wheaton felt in his pocket several times to be sure of the key. There was something the last bit uncanny in his possession of it. Yesterday William Porter would no more have intrusted the key of his private box to him than he would have burned down his house. He read into his errand a trust on Porter's part that included Porter's daughter, too; but he got little satisfaction from this. He was only the most convenient messenger available. His spirits rose and fell as he debated. He went to the side door of the bank and knocked for the watchman to admit him.

"Going to work to-night, Mr. Wheaton?" asked the watchman.

"There are some papers in Mr. Porter's box that I must give to Mr. Fenton to-night. They are in the old vault." This vault was often opened at night by the bookkeepers and there was no reason why the cashier should not enter it when he pleased. The watchman turned up the lights so that Wheaton could manipulate the combination, and then swung open the door. Wheaton thanked him and went in. Two keys were necessary to open all of the boxes; one was common to all and was kept by the bank. Wheaton easily found it, and then he took from his pocket Porter's key which supplemented the other. His pulses beat fast as he felt the lock yield to the thin strip of steel, and in a moment the box lay open before his eyes. He had flashed on the electric light bulb in the vault and recognized instantly Porter's inscription "Traction" on a brown bundle. He then opened his own box and took out his Traction certificate and carried it with Porter's packet into the directors' room.

He sat playing with the package, which was sealed in green wax with the plain oval insignium of the bank. The packet was larger than he had expected it to be; he had no idea of the amount of stock it contained; and he knew nothing of the bonds. He felt tempted to open it; but clearly that was not within his instructions. He must deliver it intact to Fendon, and he would do it instantly. He hesitated, though, and drew out the certificate which Evelyn had given him and turned the crisp paper over in his hand. Each of them owned one hundred shares of Traction stock; he was not thinking of this, but of Evelyn, whose signature held his eye. It was an angular hand, and she ran her two names together with a long sweep of the pen.

His thoughts were given a new direction by the noise of a colloquy between the watchman and some one at the door. He heard his own name mentioned, and thrusting the certificates into his pocket, he went out to learn what was the matter.

"Mr. Wheaton," called the watchman, who held the door partly closed on some one, "Mr. Margrave wishes to see you."

As Wheaton walked toward the watchman, Margrave strode in heavily on the tile floor of the bank.

CHAPTER XV.

"Hello, Wheaton," said Margrave, cheerfully, "I've had a hard time finding you. Let's go into the directors' room; I want to see you."

WROTE HER NAME AS WHEATON INDICATED.

The main bank room was only dimly lighted, but a cluster of electric lights burned brilliantly above the directors' mahogany table, around which were chairs of the Bank of England pattern.

"Have a seat, Mr. Margrave," said Wheaton formally. He had left the door open, but Margrave closed it carefully. Porter's bundle of papers in its manila wrapper lay on the table, and Wheaton sat down close to it.

"What you got there, greenbacks?" asked Margrave. "If you were just leaving for Canada, don't miss the train on my account."

"That isn't funny," said Wheaton, severely.

"Oh, I wouldn't be so sensitive," said Margrave, throwing open his overcoat and placing his hat on the table in front of him. "I guess you ain't any better than some of the rest of 'em."

"I suppose you didn't come to say that," said Wheaton. He ran his fingers over the wax seal on the packet. He wished that it were back in Porter's box.

"We were having a little talk this afternoon, Jim," began Margrave in a friendly and familiar tone, "about Traction matters. As I remember it, in our last talk, it was understood that if I needed your little bunch of Traction shares you'd let me have 'em when the time came. Now our friend Porter's sick," continued Margrave, watching Wheaton sharply with his small, keen eyes.

"I don't know that it's so serious. I was at the house this evening."

"Comforting the daughter, no doubt," with a sneer. "Now, Jim, I'm going to say something to you. The chances are that Porter's going to die. I guess he won't be able to vote his stock to-morrow. I suppose you've got it or know where it is." He eyed the bundle on which Wheaton's hand at that moment rested nervously. "I want that stock, Jim, and I want you to give it to me to-night."

"Margrave," said Wheaton, "you must be crazy, or a fool."

"Things are going pretty well with you, Jim," Margrave continued. "You have a good position here; when the old man's out of the way, you can marry the girl and be president of the bank. It's dead easy for a smart fellow like you. It would be too bad for you to spoil such prospects right now, when the game is all in your own hands, by failing to help a friend in trouble. I gave you your first job when you came here——"

"I appreciate all that, Mr. Margrave," Wheaton broke in. "You said the word that got me into the Clarkson National, and I have never forgotten it."

"Well, I don't want you to forget it. But see here: as long as I recommended you and stood by you when you were a ratty little train butcher, I think you owe something to me. One night last fall a drunken scamp came into my yard and made a row. I was about to turn him over to the police when he began whimpering and said he knew you. He wasn't doing any particular harm and I gave him a quarter and told him to get out; but he wanted to talk. He said—" Margrave dropped his voice and fastened his eyes on Wheaton—"he was a long-lost brother of yours. He was pretty drunk, but he seemed clear on your family history, Jim. He said he'd done time once back in Illinois, and got you out of a scrape. He told me his name was William Wheaton, but that he had lost it in the shuffle somewhere and was known as Snyder. I started him toward Porter's where I knew you were doing the society act. I heard afterward that he found you."

"And so you sent that scamp over there to make a row. I didn't think you would play me a trick like that."

"Now, Jim," Margrave continued magnanimously, "I don't care about your family connections. You're all right. You're good enough for me, you understand, and you're good enough for the Porters. My father was a butcher and I began life sweeping out the shop, and I guess everybody knows it; and if they don't like it, they know what they can do."

POE'S AMBIDEXTROUS HOAX.

Found Writing Poem with One Hand and a Story with the Other.

Many traditions and stories of Edgar Allan Poe are still current at the Univeristy of Virginia, at Charlottesville, where he was a student, says James Bernard Lyon in the Home Magazine.

Poe was very proud of his penmanship. One day, so the story goes, a friend entered the room to find Poe writing busily with both hands.

"What are you doing?" asked the friend.

"Writing with both hands," said Poe.

"Both hands!' exclaimed the friend. "But how on earth can you make any progress in that way?"

"Easy enough. It is a theory of mine that it is a waste of time not to be able to use both hands at the same time. Both hands and brain may be trained, with care and attention, so that each hand may do its full share of work—each hand being employed on a separate task. It is not really an affair of the hands at all, in the last analysis, but an affair of the intellect. I am training my hands and brain now so that I can do twice as much work as the ordinary person in a given period of time. At the present moment I am writing a poem with my right hand; one that I confidently believe will startle the world. And with my left hand I am blocking out a wonderful story; a story which should capture thousands of readers.

"It will only be a short time before I will be able to take my examinations in this manner and dispose of two subjects simultaneously. It will save time and will give hands and brain their full duty."

Fatherly Advice.

"Dad," said the country youth who had just graduated from the district school, "I have long cherished a desire to go on the stage, and have at last decided, with your permission, to——"

"My boy," interrupted the old granger, "all the world's a stage. You hitch the mules to the big red plow and transfer the outfit to the ten-acre lot behind the barn, where you can enact the star role in that beautiful drama entitled, 'Down on the Farm.'"

A Good Foundation.

Mrs. Youngwed—This is the first bread I ever made, darling.

Youngwed—Well, dear, you ought to build up an excellent reputation as a housekeeper on it.

Mrs. Youngwed—Why?

Youngwed—Because you have started with an almost indestructible foundation.

We learn not at school, but in life.—German.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

The first hunting accident of the season was reported near Evansville. Walter Loving while out squirrel hunting accidentally shot off his right arm.

Dr. Walsh, a veterinary surgeon of Brazil, was called to Posey Township where he found a valuable cow belonging to Henry Nussel, suffering with a bad case of hydrophobia. The animal had attacked everything in its path, and was attempting to bite and tear down the stable when the doctor arrived. The cow was promptly killed.

A representative of the British government, who is in Muncie gathering social, vital and industrial statistics, is appalled by the fact that in the present term of circuit court in Delaware County forty-one decrees of divorce have been allowed and nine others are still pending. Several divorces were also granted by the Superior Court. A large number of others were refused, or the suits were withdrawn and reconciliations effected.

Mrs. Elizabeth Bicknell mother of Rear Admiral George A. Bicknell, retired, of New Albany, and widow of Judge George A. Bicknell, died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Martha Mahon, in Washington, D. C., where she had lived since the death of her husband eighteen years ago. She was 93 years old. Her husband served a term in Congress and was Judge of the Circuit Court for twenty-five years, dying while on the bench.

Earl Metcalf, 16 years old, and Ray Thompson, 18, both of New Albany, were captured between Seymour and Scottsburg in Jackson County, with a horse and buggy which belonged to Brock Smith, a farmer. The boys ran away from home. Deciding to return home they took the horse and buggy. The boys are in jail at Columbus. They confessed that their reading of dime novels and wild west stories caused them to act as they did.

The trial of Alice Miles on the charge that she stole a rooster from John Beatty under promise to her minister to supply material for a chicken dinner caused a complicated argument at Charlestown. The question of the rooster's identity entered into the case, and frequent tilts between contending counsel ensued. In proof of his charge that the rooster had been stolen Beatty brought two other roosters to court to show that the one taken was "just exactly" like them. The Miles woman steadfastly asserted her innocence and was dismissed.

Chester Drake, a musician of Bowling Green, seven years ago contracted what physicians pronounced muscular rheumatism, near the left knee. At times he suffered a great deal. Last week a spot on his left thigh became irritated, necessitating a bandage. While dressing the wound, he noticed a dark object in it and, taking it out, found it to be a thorn one-half inch long. Mr. Drake is confident that the supposed rheumatic pains were nothing but the thorn tearing its way through his flesh from the knee to the thigh, where it again came to the surface.

Henry M. Williams, of Fort Wayne, a veteran of the Civil War, and a man of wealth, announces that he will build a statue of Anthony Wayne at the east end of Berry street overlooking the Maumee. It was at this spot, he says, that General Wayne announced his purpose to locate the fort from which the city derived its name. According to Mr. Williams, it was the failure of General St. Clair and General Harmer to hold the juncture of the St. Marys and the St. Joseph rivers against the Indians that determined President Washington to appoint General Wayne to perform the work.

It is a coincidence that the wife of Charles H. Porter, a drug clerk, who died at Indianapolis as a result of acid burns, was seriously burned just nine years ago. She was then Miss Lillian Donner, of Columbus, and was dressing to attend a concert. She overturned a lamp and her clothing caught fire. She was being burned to death when a passerby was attracted by her screams and saved her life. For weeks she was confined to her bed. After that she married Mr. Porter and they moved to Indianapolis. Just nine years to the day from the time she was burned her husband died of burns.

When Mrs. Hannah Abrams put out her hand to lift what she thought was an old black hen off the nest, at the home of her son-in-law, William Hancock, near Spencer, she grasped, instead of the hen, the folds of a huge blacksnake that was sleeping quietly in the barrel in which the hens had been laying. The snake was killed. It was six feet and eight inches long. Near the middle of its body was a large lump and an incision in the skin revealed a glass egg, which the snake had swallowed and failed to digest. The egg was identified by Mrs. Abrams as one she had been using as a nest egg, but she had missed it some time ago.

William N. Ellesperman filed suit at Evansville against his wife for divorce, alleging that she spent all the money he gave her to buy soda water and ice cream instead of buying beefsteak and something to eat for the house.

Laboring under the hallucination that his name and family had been disgraced because a roomer in his house had been robbed of some money and his watch, Ollie Hgorth, of Hammond, committed suicide. He strangled himself with a four-in-hand tie.

Sion Cavness, one of the oldest men in Daviess County, died last week on a farm in Van Buren Township, where he had lived for the last fifty years. Mr. Cavness was 90 years old and was prominently identified with the early agricultural activities of the county. He is survived by a widow and several children.

A new-born babe in a basket was found in the yard of W. D. Eaton's residence on Main street in Terre Haute. A few days ago a three-weeks-old baby was left on the porch of a Fifth street house and a week ago another babe was left on a porch in the South End. The Board of Guardians will make an investigation.

Mrs. Hannah Peterson, of New Rose, has an old wooden works clock made by Eli Terry & Sons, Plymouth, Conn., and purchased by Mrs. Peterson's father, George Dorsey, in Baltimore, Md., July 4, 1826. The clock had been made two years before. For more than sixty years this old clock did faithful service, and was set aside for a more modern timepiece. This clock was in the old Wayside Inn for many years. Although it is eighty-five years old the cabinet is yet in good condition.

A large snake took possession of the home of James Bartrim, of Spencer County, and Mrs. Bartrim and several women who were spending the day with her were run out of the house. George Weigel, a salesman of Rockport, happened to pass the place and found the excited women in the front yard screaming. They asked him in to kill the reptile. With a club he entered the house and found the snake behind the door. The reptile showed fight, but, after a battle, it was slain. The snake was a large water moccasin, measuring eight feet long and as large around as the forearm of the average man.

Vivian McClurg, 12 years old, of New Castle, is suffering with severe injuries as the result of being a somnambulist. The injuries consist of bruises and severed muscles in the thigh. The child arose from her bed while asleep and began walking about her room. She stumbled and fell and a sharp object was run into her body, cutting a large gash two inches long and an inch deep and severing several of the thigh muscles. The child has been for some time in the habit of walking in her sleep and a close watch was kept on her. However, those sleeping in the same room were not awakened until she fell.

William, the 4-year-old son of Mr and Mrs. Henry Henschey, of Peru, was viciously attacked by a rooster and it took several stitches to close the gashes in the boy's arms and face. The boy went into the henhouse to gather eggs and it was as he was reaching in a nest that the rooster attacked him. The boy fell and instantly the rooster pounced on him and began using its bill and spurs on the boy. The lad's screams attracted his mother to the scene. The rooster had attacked others, but this assault cost it its life. The boy called for the rooster's heart at supper and devoured it with a relish and satisfaction.

While Claude Veach, a young man employed in Muncie, was dining in an uptown restaurant, he was fairly taken off his feet by a beautiful, black-eyed girl who came into the place and, throwing her arms about him in the presence of all the diners, kissed him. His embarrassment was soon relieved, however, when the girl explained that she was his sister whom he had not seen for ten years. When Veach left his home in Bridgeport, Conn., more than ten years ago, his sister was a little girl in short dresses. Her appearance had so changed that he did not recognize her. Miss Veach was expected to visit her brother, but the latter had gone to the train on which she was supposed to arrive without finding her.

After being lost for more than thirty years, a gold thimble, belonging to Mrs. Virginia Stein, librarian of the Lafayette public library, has been restored to her. The thimble was presented to Mrs. Stein by her husband, the late Colonel John A. Stein, more than forty years ago. Colonel Stein was noted as a lawyer and statesman, having represented his district several terms in Congress. The old Stein home was at 1011 Columbia street and is now owned by Mrs. Mary Mulcahy. A few days ago her son, Michael Mulcahy, was digging a flower bed in the back yard when his eye was attracted by something that glistened in the earth. He picked up the object and found it to be a gold thimble and on the inside was engraved "V. S., 1866." The inscription was as plain as when first put on the ring. Mr. Mulcahy learned later that the Stein family formerly owned the property, and he took the thimble to the library and presented it to Mrs. Stein, who could hardly believe her eyes when the thimble was presented to her.

Miles Cramer, of Avilla, is reported to have found a big chunk of gold in a well at the Old People's Home at Avilla, and now there is talk of a Klondike gold craze in the capital of Allen Township.

Fred Niederhaus was the first farmer in Vanderburg County to thrash wheat. It averaged twenty-five bushels to the acre and weighed sixty pounds to the bushel. Spencer County farmers are selling wheat at the thrasher for $1.10 a bushel.

STORY OF GINGLES' GIRL.

Irish Lacemaker Tells That She Was Beaten in a Chicago Hotel.

A queer story of an alleged plot by two women and a man violently to force her into white slavery was told on the witness stand by Ella Gingles, young Irish lacemaker, on trial in Chicago on a charge of having stolen valuable laces from Miss Agnes Barrette. The girl detailed the events she alleged preceded her discovery by the police, drugged, gagged and tied to a bathtub in the Wellington Hotel last January. The witness three times was overcome. The girl's testimony was given as proof of her earlier charge that she was a victim of a bold plot.

ELLA GINGLES.

in which Miss Agnes Barrette and Mrs. Cecilia Kenyon, the latter now dead, conspired to make it appear that she was a thief.

On the evening of Jan. 4 last, she testified, Miss Barrette asked her to come to the latter's room in the Wellington Hotel, with the understanding she would be paid money due her. Instead, the girl declared, the woman, assisted by Miss Kenyon, locked her in a room. The women, she said, removed her clothing. Then, she testified, they choked and beat her repeatedly. The girl recited her struggles to escape from the torture she alleged was inflicted upon her by the two women and a man, who later came, and how she finally was released at midnight half clad after her money had been taken from her.

SHIP BURNS; 149 JAPS DIE.

Victims of Disaster Near Aomori, Japan Include Many Women.

Unable because of a heavy fog to obtain relief from the shore which was nearby, 149 Japanese, including 133 fisherfolk, both men and women, were drowned or burned to death with the burning of the Japanese steamer, Nihonkai-Maru, near Aomori, Japan, June 14. Details of the disaster were received at Victoria, B. C., with the arrival of the Canadian Pacific steamship Empress.

The cause of the fire, which brought a panic among the fisherfolk and members of the crew, was not determined. There was a mad rush of all for the two boats carried, but through clumsiness in launching these were rendered useless. The flames made quick headway and the passengers and members of the crew either dropped into the sea or took refuge in the rigging. The fire soon reached those who had gone aloft and they were either burned as they tried to lash themselves to the masts and spars or fell into the flames beneath them.

Once the fog lifted and people on the shore saw the awful scenes on the blazing steamer. The steamship Benton-Maru put out from the village of Notech, but could make hardly any speed in the fog, and when it reached the Nihonkai-Maru only twenty-seven persons had managed to keep afloat in the sea. It was stated that there were no life buoys or rafts carried on the ruined steamer.

Abdul Disgorges $5,000,000.

A special dispatch from Saloniki says that former Sultan Abdul Hamid has handed the authorities there a check for $5,000,000 which will be devoted to the needs of the second and third army corps. Abdul Hamid wishes to stipulate that $300,000 of this amount should be devoted to the purchase of the villa where he resides, but the request was refused on the ground that as the nation's prisoner he cannot own property.

It will be the occasion of general satisfaction that the Secretary of State is keeping a watchful eye on the Russo-Chinese negotiations, affecting the conduct of the Chinese Eastern railway. This road, it will be recalled, extends from Dalney and Port Arthur through Manchuria to Cisco, where it makes connection with the Trans-Siberian Railway, while an eastern spur runs to Vladivostock. Under the terms of the treaty of Portsmouth, Russia was to retain control of that portion of the road running from Harbin north, and Japan was to control the southern portion. On the plea that to protect the railroad it was necessary to exercise police powers, Russia secured that right from China. It has been, however, the old story of permitting the Russian bear to rest a paw on the window ledge. Before you know it you find all but the tail on the inside. When, last fall, this country discovered that in addition to police powers, Russia was preceeding to levy taxes along the line of the road, Secretary Root filed a protest at Peking. The Russian Ambassador, all smiles and self-abnegation, immediately called at the State Department and assured Mr. Root that a new lease would be drawn up to the terms of which the United States could not possible object.

The new owner will assume charge immediately and will remove the office and sales rooms to the building formerly occupied by the Husselman saloon, and known as the Tomlinson building. The location of the warehouse has not been decided on. It is understood that the new owner will greatly enlarge the store adding materially to the stock of implements.

Five Years

of Heart Trouble Cured by Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy

"Before I began taking Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy I had been suffering from heart trouble for over five years. I had pains in my left side, and under my shoulder blade, could not sleep on the left side, and was so short of breath the least exertion would bring on the most distressing palpitation. I had scarcely taken a half bottle of the Heart Remedy before I could see a marked change in my condition. When I had taken six bottles I was cured."

MRS. C. C. GORKEY,
Northfield, Va.

If there is fluttering or palpitation it is an indication of a weakness of the nerves and muscles of the heart. It is not necessarily diseased—just weak from over-work. The heart may be weak just the same as the eyes, stomach or other organs. You can make a weak heart strong by taking Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy. Get a bottle from your druggist, take it according to directions, and if it does not benefit he will return your money.

How many officers and teachers of Sunday school, for instance, do you suppose there are in the United States? Only 1,495,535. But it's when it comes to the matter of pupils that the figures talk in a tone of voice to be heard across the continent—12,272,567. There is a figure to hold the statistician spell bound—and remember, it does not signify dollars and cents, it stands for human beings brought together by a purpose to teach and to study the Bible, to give serious thought to the principles of morality and to the Christian faith.

The Liquor License Case.

Thursday's Journal Gazette.

Owing to the fact that the county commissioners devoted the entire day to hearing the Johnson application for a license to sell liquors, the county commissioners postponed the consideration of the Martin Platt application until next Wednesday.

Taking up the case of John S. Johnson, who asked a license to conduct a saloon in the building formerly occupied by John Lourain, on Calhoun street, it was thoroughly dissected. Two brothers named Hendrickson, from Auburn, came to Fort Wayne in May and proposing to purchase the Louraine place, which was closed by the police, found that they were not residents of Allen county ninety days previous to applying for a license to sell liquors, as the law requires, and had to abandon the deal. John S. Johnson then filed application for a license to sell liquors in the Louraine place and Carl Herford filed a remonstrance alleging among other things that Johnson was not to be the real owner, that he was acting for others. It was shown by Herford's testimony that he was actuated by selfish motives for he advanced no moral objections to Johnson or even the Hendricksons. Herford was bartender for Louraine and that man owes him $195. It was failure to get his money from Louraine or the purchasers of the place that actuated him in remonstrating and he was discredited. Johnson, however, could not satisfy the commissioners that he was the real purchaser, leaving the impression that the Hendricksons were backing him and on this ground alone the board declined to grant a license to him. There was no objection to Johnson's character, nor is there any objection to the Hendricksons, save that they have not been residents of Allen county ninety days as the law requires.

'Tis Strange, But True

"Man comes into this world without his consent, and leaves it against his will. During his stay on earth his time is spent in one continuous round of contraries and misunderstandings by the balance of the species. In his fancy he is an angel; in his boyhood he is a devil; in his manhood he is everything from a lizard up; in his duties he is a darn fool; if he raises a family he is a chump; if he raises a small check he is a thief, and the law raises the devil with him; if he is a poor man he is a poor manager and has no sense; if he is rich he is dishonest but considered smart; if he is in politics you can't place him, as he is an undesirable citizen; if he goes to church he is a hypocrite; if he stays away from church he is a sinner and damned; if he donates to foreign missions he does it for a show; if he doesn't he is stingy and a tight wad. When he comes into the world every body wants to kiss him If he dies young there was a great future before him; if he lives to a ripe old age, he is simply in the way and living to save funeral expenses. This life is a funny road, but we all like to travel it just the same."

A WHOLE YEAR FOR $1.00

That's what you can do for some friend—send him THE ST. JOE NEWS fifty-two times for only a dollar.

Better than a letter, because it gives ALL the home news each week; there is positively no token you could offer which would make a home so happy in your remembrance as this newspaper mailed to some distant relative or friend.

We are making it just as good as it possibly can be done for $1.00. In fact, lots of publishers have raised to $1.50 on not so creditable a paper as this—and we tell you frankly that when you plank down your dollar on our table for a friend, you'll get your money's worth. This is a good copy to start with. We'll save an extra one until Monday. Yes?

Pleasant Picnic

At the home of Dr. and Mrs. Benj. Shook, last Sunday several of their friends came with well filled baskets and a picnic dinner was enjoyed by Mr. and Mrs. W. C. McNabb and daughter Ursel, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley VanFleit and daughter Marguerite, of Auburn, Mr. and Mrs. A. F. Heyman of Marion, and Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Beams Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Erick, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Murray, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Bowman and Dr. Shook and family. In the afternoon ice cream, fancy cakes, Frou-frou wafers and iced tea were served.

W. Sommers Improving

The reports Monday from Wm. Sommers were encouraging for his recovery. He is still at the Lutheran hospital at Wayne. For the benefit of those who have not been informed as to his real condition we will say that his first finger was removed at the first joint while the second and third fingers were taken off at the second joint. The most of his trouble seems to be caused by the thick part of his hand which was badly torn. The first finger will be stiff as the cord was removed.

Girls Club Enjoy Outing

The girls club enjoyed an outing at Robison park, last Saturday. Arrangements for the trip had been made sometime before going and extensive preparations had been made in the way of serving a basket dinner at the park. Rigs were secured and an early start was made getting there in good time. In the afternoon they were met by Miss Golden Murray, who is staying in Wayne, and she insisted that the crowd go to the city with her for entertainment. They were taken to the spacious home of her sister, Mrs. Cal Brown, who resides in Bloomingdale. Here they were royally entertained, were served to pineapple, ice cream, cake and lemonade. They returned to the park late in the afternoon and took in its pleasures. The trip was enjoyed by eight of the club and will be long remembered by them.

A Night Rider's Raid.

Apple Crop Short Here

The apple crop in DeKalb will be seriously affected this year. There are a number of orchards which have been totally destroyed by an insect working into the apple trees causing them to wither away and the leaves dry up. There are other trees which have a healthy foliage but not a sign of an apple on them. This is presumably due to the extreme dry fall last year. There are however a good many trees which are well filled with apples.

Nervous or Sick Headache will yield quickly to the influence of Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills. 25 doses 25 cents.

Dr. Casebeer Passed Away

Saturday afternoon at his home on North VanBuren street, occured the death of Dr. J. B Casebeer, one of the most prominent residents of DeKalb County, after a long illness of several weeks, from liver trouble. Dr. Casebeer with his wide medical practice, was one of the best known men in the county. Dr. Casebeer was born in Mount Hope, Homes County, April 19th and resided in that county for several years. He went to school there receiving his first education in that county and in Fredricksburg, Ohio, teaching school there, when at the age of sixteen years. From that place he went to Kentucky where he taught school until the out break of the Civil war when he enlisted in the army and served four years. After the war Dr. Casebeer entered a medical school in New York City where he was graduated and began the practice of medicine in the city hospitals.

He has been a resident of Auburn for forty-three years. He leaves to survive him his wife, one daughter, Mrs. Altenburg, one brother, H. N. Casebeer, and three sisters, Mrs. Susan C. Cole, of Columbus, Ohio; Mrs. E. M. Dananda, of Columbus, Ohio; and Mrs. F. M. Zimmeran, of Pasendena, Cal.

The funeral was held Monday at 10 o'clock from the home. Burial in Evergreen cemetery.

Prospective Juryman's Assertion That He Was Not Dead Comparatively Easy to Believe.

On a recent jury day in the First district court a stolid-looking German presented to Justice Joseph a certificate from the commissioner of jurors. After a rapid glance at the document the justice ordered the man to raise his right hand and administered the oath.

"Your name is Herman Kaufman?"

"Yes, your honor."

"This paper," continued the court, "requests me to excuse Herman Kaufman from jury duty on the ground that he is dead. Now, remember that you have sworn to tell the truth, and think well before you answer: Are you dead?"

"No-o, your honor," was the bewildered reply, "I don't think I am."

"You claim that you are alive?"

"Y-e-s, your honor."

"That will do. Now take this paper back to the commissioner of jurors."

The man did so. When the commissioner examined the certificate it bore the following indorsement in the justice's handwriting: "The deceased, appearing before me in open court, insists, under oath, that he is not dead. Please investigate, and, if his testimony be false, have him indicted for perjury."—New York Press.

Carrier Pigeons for Country Doctors.

Provincial medical men have made and are making considerable use of pigeons in connection with their practice. They will take with them a basket of pigeons in their motor cars.

After visiting the patients the necessary prescription is written out and forwarded home by pigeon post; the dispenser at once makes up the prescription and practically before the physician has finished his rounds and long before he has reached home again the boy in buttons starts off to deliver the bottles of medicine in his bicycle car. In many provincial districts it is of course useless to write out prescriptions to be sent to the local chemist, for the nearest is often some miles away.—London Tit-Bits.

Ordered to Muzzle Rooster.

In Mount Vernon, one of the suburbs north of New York a man was arrested the other day because his rooster had disturbed his neighbors by crowing at the break of day. Although there is no ordinance in the village which prohibits the keeping of chickens on a man's premises, the owner of the aforesaid rooster was found guilty of maintaining a nuisance and warned to keep his rooster from crowing early in the morning like other roosters in less sensitive neighborhoods. Now the amateur chicken raiser has the choice between muzzling his rooster or exchanging him for one of a "crowless" brand.

Just an Ordinary Kansas Man.

A Kansas woman, while in New York last summer with her husband, visited Lake Chautauqua. She wanted a veil, and held out her hand to her husband for money. He just laid his pocketbook in her hand and walked unconcernedly around the store.

"My," ejaculated the clerk, "and he never asked you how much you wanted nor what you were going to do with it. You ought to hear the arguments that they get into right here some times when a woman asks a man for money. My, but you ought to be thankful to have a husband like that."

"Oh, I don't know," she returned, nonchalantly, "he is just a Kansas man. That's the style out there."—Kansas City Journal.

THE POPULAR PULPIT

LOYALTY TO CHRIST.

Rev. J. R. Miller, D.D.

"And he that taketh not his cross, and followeth after Me, is not worthy of me."—Matt. x., 38.

Loyalty to Christ begins in the heart. We must have Him supremely. "He that loveth father or mother more than Me is not worthy of Me; and he that loveth son or daughter more than Me is not worthy of Me." Nothing makes worthy discipleship if love be lacking. In these days Christian activity is emphasized and required. Never was the Church of Christ as active as it is now. This is beautiful. But with all our activity we may fear lest we are not loving Christ as we should.

We are in danger of being so busy in the Lord's work that we cannot be enough with the Lord in love's fellowship. He may say to us: "I like your works, your toils, your service, but I miss the love you gave me at first." There is real danger that we get so busy in striving to be active Christians, so absorbed in our tasks and duties, our efforts to bring others into the fold, that Christ Himself shall be less loved and shall miss our communing with Him. Loyalty means first of all heart devotion. Has Christ really the highest place in your heart? It is not your work He wants most—it is you. It is beautiful to do things for Him—it is still more beautiful to make a home for Him in your heart. A young man, at great cost, has brought from many countries the most beautiful materials he could find and has built as a memorial to his dead wife an exquisite little chapel. Only a few men could do anything so rare, so lovely. But the poorest of us can enthrone our loved ones in our hearts, and the poorest of us can please Christ even more by making a little sanctuary in our hearts for Him.

Then there must be loyalty of life. If there be true, supreme love in the heart, there should be a shining character. Here again we need to guard against devotion to the work and service of Christ while the impression is not to the honor of Christ. He is very patient with our infirmities and our stumblings. If He were not, who of us ever could hope to please Him? We are inexperienced, mere learners, at first. We mis-spell our words. We blunder in our grammar. We sing out of tune. Some of us are just beginning our Christian life and are discouraged already because we have failed to be what we mean to be, and to live as beautifully as we were sure we would live.

Christ does not want us ever to give up. Though we stumble when we are learning to walk, He wants us to get up and try again. Though we are defeated in our battle to-morrow, He wants us to rise at once and keep on fighting. A true soldier may be wounded, may be beaten in many battles, but he never is a deserter, never is a traitor. He is always loyal. It is only when we desert Christ, turn away from Him, become false to Him, that we really fail. You never can fail if you are true, if you are faithful.

There must be loyalty also in character. Here is a man, for example, who bears the name of Christian. But he is not loving—he is hard to live with, suspicious, jealous, resentful. He has not joy, is morose, gloomy, a sad man. He has not peace—he is fretful, anxious, restless, full of fear and foreboding. He has not meekness—he is impatient, irascible, unmerciful. Lacking of qualities of love, joy, peace, meekness, can you call such a man a loyal follower of Christ? He may be a strenuous Christian so far as activities are concerned, a prominent member, a zealous officer, foremost in the organizations of the church. Yet he is not a man you would call a beautiful Christian. Loyalty must be Christ-like in character, in disposition, in spirit, in the shining of the face, in the lovingness of the heart.

A good woman deplored her lack of usefulness. Yet many knew that her daily life was a constant benediction. She sweetened a home, blessed a household of children and young people, and manifested the love of Christ among her neighbors. Was not that being an active Christian? There is an activity of being as well as of doing.

Loyalty to Christ demands of us the uttermost of sincerity and truth in all our living. God desires truth in the inward parts. Yet are there not men who claim to be Christians and are living a lie? There are lives that are honeycombed by all manner of unfaithfulness, dishonesties, injustices and injuries to others and by many secret sins. What does the lesson of loyalty to Christ have to teach us about these things? Are covered sins safely hidden? Are they out of sight forever? Oh, no; be sure your sin will find you out. The word is not "Be sure your sin will be found out." It may not be found out in this world, but it will "find you out." It will plague you, spoil your happiness, make your life wretched. What shall we do about these wrong things we have done? A life of loyalty to Christ means a life that is white, clean through and through. None can build a beautiful shining character on covered sins, joy is part of a complete Christian life, and no one can be joyous with sins concealed in his heart.

St. Paul has a word about bringing every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ. We should test every feeling, every imagination, every disposition, all conduct, by this test—loyalty to Christ. Someone does you a wrong and you feel like getting angry. Be loyal to God. Keep your whole life, every day, every hour, under the sway of His sword.

Loyalty to Christ! There really is nothing else in religion. It is all in these three words. I will be faithful to Christ. I will be true to Christ. I will please Christ. I will be obedient to Christ. I will do His will. I will submit to His discipline. I will bear the cross He lays upon me.

INDIVIDUAL CONSECRATION.

By Bishop Newman.

Text:—"The Master is come and calleth for thee."—John 11:38.

The text is suggestive of individuality. A beloved brother is dead. Christ proposed to raise the dead to life. The two surviving sisters were to take part in the resurrection. It is not too much to say that without the co-operation of these sisters the dead could not have been raised. Thus God suspends the grandest moral results not only upon the consecration of the individuality. One thing is true: Heaven has ordained that man shall be saved through man. That the Almighty employs individuals to accomplish the exalted purpose of His will. In the darkest hour of the world's history, when humanity seemed to be incompetent to meet the great emergencies in the history of the church, then some individual is brought forth, usually from obscurity.

The glory of the pulpit to-day is not in its splendid scholarship, is not in entrancing eloquence, but the glory of the pulpit is that moral power that finds response in the human heart. some of the mightiest workers in the history of the world are persons of obscurity. You have heard of Adam Clarke. As I stood by his grave alongside that of Wesley, I expressed my indebtedness to him more than to any other commentator. Yes, you have all heard of Adam Clarke, but have you heard of Thomas Barker? Who was he? Only an obscure Methodist preacher who was instrumental in bringing Clarke to the light. You have heard of Kitto, altogether the most prolific and at the same time the most accurate of Bible writers. But have you heard of Richard Bernard? Who is he? Only an obscure English layman, who on a Sunday afternoon went to an English poorhouse. There he saw a deaf pauper, in whose eyes gleamed genius. It touched the sympathies of his heart. The boy was taken to his home, was educated, and there came forth Kitto. You have heard of Morrison, and when it shall be your privilege to go to Hong Kong, fail not to go into the Victoria Library. In an elegant glass case you will find an autograph letter written by her majesty, the late Queen Victoria, expressing her debt of gratitude to Morrison for the translation of the Scriptures into Chinese and for his Chinese and English Lexicon, autograph copies of which are there. Yes, you have heard of Morrison, in China, and doubtless China will always remember Morrison; but who ever heard of that woman who, one Sabbath afternoon, found an urchin in the streets and gathered him into the Sabbath school? When the great day of reckoning comes, the Angel Gabriel shall be sent to find that Christian woman, as he was sent out to find Mary of Nazareth, and the judgment will not proceed, and the rewards will not be given, until she, unknown to earth, shall be crowned with the benedictions of the Master.

SERMONETTES.

Even an indolent man is seldom too lazy to run into debt.

Teach boys to love work, and the men will hate laziness and crime.

Many are willing to wear the Christian armor provided there is nothing but a parade in sight.

When you see a saint looking for the spot light you may be sure he is made up for the occasion.

Freedom means the right to a voluntary part in the good of all.

Many put a thousand lives in danger rather than hurt the feelings of one.

Where the life is consumed in love's sacrifice the halo takes care of itself.

Most men who start out to pay a flying visit to sin acquire the right to vote there.

If this seems to be a heartless age the only thing to do is to put your own heart into it.

There's a lot of difference between believing a thing and believing that you believe it.

DON'TS FOR CHURCHMEN.

Don't try to persuade others beyond your own convictions.

Don't forget that those who fear the desert can find no Canaan.

Don't forget, that life without restraint is not long without wreck.

Don't fail to observe that the most uplifting talk is an upright walk.

Don't forget that hoping for much in others is helping them to it.

Don't overlook the fact that faith always means forsaking some seeming good.

Don't try to measure your faith by your appreciation of other people's faults.

Don't fail to notice that the honesty that advertises itself is usually for sale.

Smiles of the Day

Tells the Telephone Girls the Truth.

Two telephone girls were talking over the wire one afternoon. The subject of the conversation was a lawn party, which was to take place the next day. Both were discussing what they should wear, and after five minutes had come to no decision.

In the midst of this important conversation a masculine voice interrupted, asking humbly what number he had. The lack of reply did not squelch the inquirer, for he asked again for the number.

One of the girls became indignant and scornfully asked:

"What line do you think you are on, anyhow?"

"Well," said the man, "I am not sure, but judging from what I have heard I should say I was on a clothes line."—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Couldn't Remember Dates.

"Don't you remember how when I had dat big bag of dates I gave you some, Jimmy?"

"I'm awfully sorry, Hank, but I never did have no memory for dates."

The Burning Question.

A Baltimore teacher was trying to explain the meaning of the word "recuperate."

"Charley," she said, "when night comes your father returns home tired and worn out, doesn't he?"

"Yes, ma'am," assented Charley.

"Then," continued the teacher, "it being night, and he being tired, what does he do?"

"That's what ma wants to know," said Charley.—Success Magazine.

The Devout Butcher.

A butcher of a certain village, being a devout Christian, whenever he sent a business note invariably accompanied it with a text.

A certain lady, wishing him to kill some of her pigs, sent him a letter to notify him of the fact, to which he sent the following reply:

"Dear Madam: I will call on Friday to kill your hogs, without fail. Yours, Mk. B. N. B.—Be ye also ready."—Detroit News-Tribune.

He Got the Job.

"Want to do a lion-taming act, eh? Any special training for the job?"

"In my flush years I managed a prima donna."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

In Chicago.

"Is June the favorite month for marriages out here, too?" asked the New York lady.

"I don't think so," replied the Chicago woman; "I've been married six times in other months, and only twice in June."—Yonkers Statesman.

Painless Shaving.

Customer—Is it true that you are the artist that shaved me last week?

Barber—Er—yes, sir!

Customer—Well, then, I think, if you don't mind, I should prefer gas this time.—Ally Sloper.

Money Talks.

In an Ohio town there is still maintained a stage coach system of transportation, the steeds whereof are of sad appearance.

One day a Cincinnati man visiting the town in question boarded a stage, having no other currency than a $5 bill. This he proffered to the driver. The latter took it, looked it over for a moment or so, and then asked:

"Which horse do you want, Bill?"—Harper's Weekly.

Summer Pirates.

"Yes," laughed the tall chap, "this is the picture of the country boarding house where they charged us $20 a week for two meals a day. It has a fine marine title."

"Marine title?" asked his friend in surprise. "What is there marine about it?"

"Why, I call it 'Boarded by Pirates.'"

Searching for It.

"Yes," said the young man at the piano, "there is a lot of music in this box."

"If there is," suggested the long-suffering friend, "you should hire some one to get it out."

Satisfied.

The professor steps into the barber's chair and assumes an attitude of deep meditation.

"Hair cut, sir?"

"Please!" The barber cuts the hair.

"Like a shampoo?"

"Um—please!" He gets the shampoo.

"Shave you, sir?"

"Um—yes!" One shave.

"Massage?" He nods assent and consequently is massaged. The barber removes the towel, the professor arises and mechanically takes the proffered check.

"What's this?"

"Your check, sir."

"My check?"

"Certainly, sir. Hair cut, shampoo, shave and massage."

The professor rubs his hand over face and head. "Did I get all that?"

"Surely, sir."

"It's queer, very queer—most extraordinarily queer! A most wonderful example of philosophical phenomena!"

"What's queer, sir?" asks the barber in dismay.

The professor draws a small oblong black box from inside his pocket.

"Why, the working of the human mind. What I came in for was to get my razor honed."

Woman's Gentle Art.

"I often wonder," said a gentleman to a young mechanic, "how you ever plucked up enough courage to propose to your wife—you were always such a bashful young fellow."

"Well," explained the husband, "she made it easy for me. You know I walked out with her frequently, and she must have known I meant business. But I was always afraid to speak right out till one night I said to her rather carelessly, 'Do you think you'll ever marry?' She said she thought she might; so I said 'When?' 'Whenever you do,' was her answer; and I said, 'All right.' So we settled the day there and then."—Tit-Bits.

How They Love School.

Johnny—Hooray!

Tommy—Wot yer so happy about?

Johnny—I don't hafter go to school to-day!

Tommy—Chee, y're lucky! Why dontcher?

Johnny—I gotta go to th' dentist's an' have three teeth pulled!—Cleveland Leader.

Comforting.

Husband—You must marry again, dearest, when I am gone, and that will be very soon.

Wife—No, Edward. No one will marry an old woman like me. You ought to have died ten years ago for that.

Disposing of It Cheaply.

Client—This copy of my will is all right, but I want the original written on a slate.

Lawyer—Beg pardon, but what is your object?

Client—So my heirs won't have any difficulty in breaking it.

"What is the secret of your success?" we asked of the great physician.

"I acquired the art of concealing my ignorance," answered the wise M. D.

Natural Deduction.

Blox—Dawkins is one of those chaps who pay as they go, isn't he?

Knox—I guess so. At least, he never goes far.

Why He Lost Out.

Jack—I called on Miss Gotrex a few times last winter and tried to make love to her, but failed.

Tom—Wouldn't she stand for it?

Jack—Oh, she seemed to be willing enough, but no man can make love to a woman successfully when there is a cuckoo clock in the parlor.

SHE TOLD HIM.

You know blamed well that when you want any money all you have to do is to ask me for it," said the married man with some heat.

"My dear!" said his wife.

"You can say 'my dear' as much as you like, but you can't deny it. Will you tell me of any time I have refused you?"

I think I could tell you of a number of times that you have," said his wife. "Don't you remember——"

"I suppose you are going to say that in 1868 on June 17 at 7:32 p. m. I wouldn't let you have 10 cents that you needed. You're great on ringing up dates on a man. No, I don't remember and you don't remember, either. If you didn't get what you wanted it was because I didn't have it."

"That's just like a man. In the first place we weren't married in June, 1868. I wasn't born then, so it isn't very likely that I would be asking you for money. In the second place, that's what you always say—that you haven't got it."

"I always say that, do I?"

"Well, nearly always."

"If I kept on at you you'd say 'frequently' and then you'd get to 'occasionally' and by the time I'd insisted for an hour or two I'd get you pinned down to something that approached the actual fact. But I'm not going to insist on anything. I'm the original tightwad, if you're bound to have it that way."

"You know that I never accused you of being stingy."

"Oh, no, I'm not stingy. I'm just naturaly opposed to giving up a cent."

"I never said that."

"It seems to me you've intimated it pretty strongly. All the same, I go back to my original statement and stand by it. If you want any money all you have to do is to ask. I take it for granted, if you don't advise me to the contrary, that you have a balance on hand."

"Very well, then," said his wife. "Please give me $100 and when that's gone I'll ask you for some more."

The married man gasped. "A hundred dollars!" he exclaimed. "What on earth do you want with $100? You're joking."

"There you are," said his wife. "What did I tell you?"

"Well, great Scott!" said the man. "I suppose I might be excused if I ask what you want a sum like that for. You can have it, of course. It doesn't matter whether I meet my business obligations or not. Only, I should like to know where the money is going."

"Very well, then," said his wife. "I'll tell you I've got to pay the seamstress for two weeks' sewing. That will take $24. Then we've got to have some new sheets and pillow cases. If I buy the stuff and have them made it will cost me a little less than if I buy them ready made, but they can't be much less than 75 cents apiece the way cotton goods have gone up. A dozen at 75 cents each would be—let me see—well, the sheets would cost $9 and the pillow cases about $5 more. How much does that make? Thirty-eight dollars. I've got to have two or three pairs of gloves. You were remarking how shabby my gloves were looking the last time you took me out. I can get along with two pairs for the present, perhaps, but the gloves will cost $5 or $6. Then the girls need shoes. If you'd rather take them downtown and buy the shoes yourself I'll cut that out, but they've got to have them. The matting in the south bedroom is all in holes. I've figured that it would take about fourteen yards and I saw some at 25 cents a yard that might do. That would be $3.50 and the gloves $6 would be $9.50 and the——"

"For goodness' sake!" interrupted the man. "What do you suppose I want to hear all those peddling little details for? I said you could have the money, didn't I?"—Chicago Daily News.

No Typewriter Girl?

The blonde-haired gazelles who pound out words on their machines will have to hunt new occupations. The day of the stenographer is about done. A new invention has made them unnecessary. Typists will still be needed, but they may be any kind of a looking old maid, for their employers will never see them. The machine which is responsible for the passing of the fair young women of the curves and curlycues is now on exhibition in New York. It looks like a phonograph, but is a combination of telephone and phonograph. The office man, wishing to dictate a letter, now takes his telephone in hand, talks into it what he wants, and a few minutes later the letter is on his desk ready for his signature. He never sees the nimble fingers that pound it off on a typewriter. The promoters expect to equip many of the large buildings with the machine, the tenant who does not wish to employ a stenographer simply furnishing the central office with letterheads. When you want a letter written you telephone it to the central office. The machine records it on the steel disc. Then one of the typists in the office pounds the letter off at her convenience and it is sent up to you.

It doesn't take the sweet girl graduate long to discover that it is far easier to win admirers than a husband.

A Crowded Universe.

In New Haven the committee of a graduating class once went to a local jeweler with a commission for a class badge. They had in view a design representing a youthful graduate surveying the universe.

"About how large would you like the figure?" the jeweler asked.

"Well," said the spokesman, "we thought the graduate ought to cover about three-quarters of the badge, and the universe the rest."—Success Magazine.

The Difference.

"There's Binks, who is always making his friends say his own witty things when he repeats them, and yet nearly every one seems to prefer his stupid, rich cousin, who can only give good dinners."

"Yes. I'm afraid the majority prefer the good things which the cousin puts in their mouths."—Baltimore American.

Making Uncle Sam's Word Good.

General Tom Edgar, the first white child born on Galveston Island (his birthday was in June, 1837), was returning to Galveston from Houston, where he had been an honored guest at the dedication of a tablet placed on the site of the first capitol of Texas, at Houston. We were seatmates in the smoking car. He told many amusing stories of the early days. Among others, he narrated his experience as a juror in the case of a negro on trial for stealing a mule. It was in 1865, while United States soldiers were still in charge at Galveston. The negro pleaded not guilty, but the testimony was pretty clear against him. His lawyer, ignoring the testimony, based his defense upon the assertion that the negro could not possibly be guilty.

"Is it not a fact," he said, "that the federal government promised to every freedman two mules and sixty acres of land? No man can deny it, because it is a fact. My client has not received his promised sixty acres of land. He has not received his promised span of mules. He has, indeed, got but one mule, as these witnesses have testified, and the United States still owes him another mule and sixty acres of land. I leave it to you, gentlemen," he said, turning to the jury, "if the facts do not prove conclusively that my client is not guilty of stealing this mule and cannot, under the circumstances, have been guilty."

"That argument," said General Edgar, "tickled us so that we actually returned a verdict of 'not guilty.' I don't believe the darky ever did get the other mule and the sixty acres, but we did all we could to make Uncle Sam's word good."—Success Magazine.

ORIGIN

Of a Famous Human Food.

The story of great discoveries or inventions is always of interest.

An active brain worker who found himself hampered by lack of bodily strength and vigor and could not carry out the plans and enterprises he knew how to conduct, was led to study various foods and their effects upon the human system. In other words, before he could carry out his plans he had to find a food that would carry him along and renew his physical and mental strength.

He knew that a food which was a brain and nerve builder (rather than a mere fat maker) was universally needed. He knew that meat with the average man does not accomplish the desired results. He knew that the soft gray substance in brain and nerve centers is made from Albumen and Phosphate of Potash obtained from food. Then he started to solve the problem.

Careful and extensive experiments evolved Grape-Nuts, the now famous food. It contains the brain and nerve building food elements in condition for easy digestion.

The result of eating Grape-Nuts daily is easily seen in a marked sturdiness and activity of the brain and nervous system, making it a pleasure for one to carry on the daily duties without fatigue or exhaustion.

Grape-Nuts food is in no sense a stimulant but is simply food which renews and replaces the daily waste of brain and nerves.

Its flavour is charming and being fully and thoroughly cooked at the factory it is served instantly with cream.

The signature of the brain worker spoken of, C. W. Post, is to be seen on each genuine package of Grape-Nuts.

MORE PINKHAM CURES

Added to the Long List due to This Famous Remedy.

Camden, N.J.— "It is with pleasure that I add my testimonial to your already long list—hoping that it may induce others to avail themselves of this valuable medicine, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I suffered from terrible headaches, pain in my back and right side, was tired and nervous, and so weak I could hardly stand. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound restored me to health and made me feel like a new person, and it shall always have my praise." —Mrs. W. P. VALENTINE, 902 Lincoln Avenue, Camden, N. J.

Gardiner, Me. — "I was a great sufferer from a female disease. The doctor said I would have to go to the hospital for an operation, but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound completely cured me in three months."—MRS. S. A. WILLIAMS, R. F. D. No. 14, Box 39, Gardiner Me.

Because your case is a difficult one, doctors having done you no good, do not continue to suffer without giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. It surely has cured many cases of female ills, such as inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing-down feeling, indigestion, dizziness, and nervous prostration. It costs but a trifle to try it, and the result is worth millions to many suffering women.

Girl's Head Encrusted—Feared Loss of All Her Hair—Baby Had Milk Crust—Missionary's Wife Made Perfect Cures by Cuticura.

"For several years my husband was a missionary in the Southwest. Every one in that high and dry atmosphere has more or less trouble with dandruff and my daughter's scalp became so encrusted with it that I was alarmed for fear she would lose all her hair. After trying various remedies, in desperation I bought a cake of Cuticura Soap and a box of Cuticura Ointment. They left the scalp beautifully clean and free from dandruff and I am happy to say that the Cuticura Remedies were a complete success. I have also used successfully the Cuticura Remedies for so-called 'milk-crust' on baby's head. Cuticura is a blessing. Mrs. J. A. Darling, 310 Fifth St., Carthage, Ohio, Jan. 20, 1908."

Developing Thought-Forces.

There is nothing truer than that "we can make ourselves over by using and developing the right kind of thought forces." Not long since a young man whom I had not seen for several years called on me, and I was amazed at the tremendous change in him. When I had last seen him he was pessimistic, discouraged, almost despairing; he had soured on life, lost confidence in human nature and in himself. During the interval he had completely changed. The sullen, bitter expression that used to characterize his face was replaced by one of joy and gladness! He was radiant, cheerful, happy, hopeful.

The young man had married a cheerful, optimistic wife, who had the happy faculty of laughing him out of his "blues" and melancholy, changing the tenor of his thoughts, cheering him up, and making him put a higher estimate on himself. His removal from an unhappy environment, together with his wife's helpful influence and his own determination to make good, had all worked together to bring about a revolution in his mental make-up. The love-principle and the use of the right thought-force had verily made a new man of him.

He is a fortunate man who early learns the secret of scientific brain-building, and who acquires the inestimable art of holding the right suggestion in his mind, so that he can triumph over the dominant note in his environment when it is unfriendly to his highest good.—Orison Swett Marden, in Success Magazine.

A Rare Good Thing.

Pet Dog Carries Woman's Train.

Clipped and blanketed dogs, French poodles, pugs and such excite the contempt of the average person who likes dogs of a more vigorous sort. These folks also have a dislike for the small dog that is trained to carry packages or what not. Those who do not like this use of a really very fine animal should have seen an exhibition on a street one wet afternoon recently.

A woman was about to cross the street, followed by a small and mean looking pet dog. The pavement was wet.

She called to the dog and the dog trotted obediently up and took the hem of her skirt in his teeth. Then staying just far enough behind to keep all the skirt clear of the street, the dog followed her across.

Some other woman, going along said: "Isn't that cute?" A man, who saw the performance, remarked, "Poor beast."

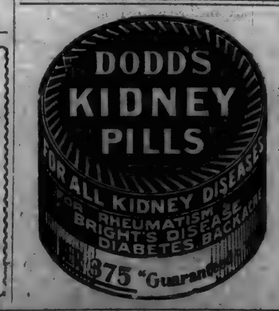
Jap Government Hard Up.

The Japanese government's financial policy, recently decided upon by the cabinet, involves the curtailment of expenditures of $100,000,000, of which 30 per cent will be taken from the army budget and 10 per cent from that of the navy.

The postponement of the international exposition, Premier Katsura says, is not purely due to financial reasons, but it is owing to the fact that the work of preparation has been insufficient. As the necessary appropriation will be inconsistent with the economical plans of the cabinet for the next five years it is wiser for the government to admit that fact than to fail in making a complete success of the exposition, which it has been decided will be held in 1917, the anniversary of the accession of the Emperor.



Work of Congress

Income tax was practically the only subject, and Senators Cummins of Iowa and Borah of Idaho the only speakers before the Senate Wednesday. Mr. Borah was not heard until toward the close of the day's session, when the Iowa Senator yielded the floor, which he had held since the previous day. He took for his text the declaration made by Senator Aldrich to the effect that he would vote for the corporation tax amendment only as a means of defeating the income tax, and, without resorting to personalities, he criticised the position of the chairman of the finance committee, who had presented the corporation tax amendment to the Senate. Mr. Cummins also paid his respects to Mr. Aldrich on account of his avowal. The House was not in session.

-:—:-

But for objection from Senator Bulkeley the Senate would probably have come to an agreement to vote the next Tuesday on the entire income tax amendment to the tariff bill. Senator Bulkeley is opposed to the amendment, and as he expects to be out of the city Tuesday he would not consent to have a vote taken at that time. There were several speeches for and against the measure, Mr. Borah concluding his argument begun Wednesday. Mr. Root advocated the corporation tax, Mr. Clapp and Mr. Owen the income tax and Senator Flint and several others made incidental remarks. The House met, approved the journal, listened to Chaplain Couden's prayer, received a routine message from the President, declined to consider a bridge bill brought up by Representative Hobson of Alabama, and adjourned within twelve minutes.

-:—:-

The corporation tax amendment was made an integral part of the pending tariff bill Friday by a vote of 59 to 11. The test vote came earlier on the substitution of the corporation tax for the income tax, and on this the vote stood 45 to 31. The debate was sharp at times, but with Mr. Aldrich back from his brief vacation and in full control the result was never in serious doubt. Among the speakers were Heyburn, Hughes, Cummins, Newlands, Rayner, Brandegee, Root and Aldrich. The House was not in session.

-:—:-

The maximum provisions of the tariff bill were adopted by the Senate Saturday by a vote of 36 to 18. The final action upon this amendment came at the close of a day devoted to a lively discussion of the proposed retaliatory measure that brought out a great variety of views as to the advisability of enacting such legislation. The provisions of this measure will go into effect March 31, 1910, and ninety days must elapse before a President's proclamation applying the maximum duty of 25 per cent ad valorem in addition to other duties provided in the bill will be operative. The duty on tea and coffee as provided in the amendment originally reported by the committee was stricken out with the assent of the finance committee. The House was not in session.

-:—:-

The Senate Monday adopted the Brown resolution providing for the submission of the income tax amendment to State legislatures. Senator Rayner made a fight against the customs court feature of the administrative amendment. He declared that the court would be found to be unconstitutional because, while dealing with questions at common law, it makes no provision for trial by jury, which every suitor under common law has a right to demand. The provision, after being defended by Republican lawyers, was accepted without division, but not until it had been amended in accordance with Rayner's suggestion to exclude criminal cases from its operation. There was only a small part of the membership present when the House met. Chaplain Couden offered a prayer expressing patriotism appropriate to the day. A message from the President recommending an appropriation to pay the claim of a subject of Montenegro, for the loss of certain property in Texas, in 1865, was read and referred to the committee on appropriations. At 12:10 the House adjourned until Thursday.

-:—:-

Consideration of the tariff bill in committee of the whole was completed Tuesday and that measure was reported to the Senate. A finance committee amendment fixing the tobacco duties was read, but was taken back by that committee on protest of Senator Daniel of Virginia that the minority members had not been given a fair chance to consider it. Among amendments adopted was one exempting labor organizations, fraternal beneficiary societies and organizations exclusively for charitable and educational purposes from the corporation tax. At 3:32 o'clock the Senate adjourned to allow the bill to be printed and the Senators time to look it over. The House was not in session.

Recipe for Political Campaign.

Take the roots of several ripe questions and cover them well with equal parts of fudge and dead beets. Add one modicum of sense and a number of great scoops of nonsense. Some of the more fastidious often add a pinch of progress, but this is not absolutely necessary. Stir in some carefully selected verbiage strained through a rhetorical colander. Beat vigorously until the enthusiasm rises to the top, and then drop in a handful of candy-dates.

It is then ready for the griddle, which is best made in the shape of a platform constructed from well-worn planks.

Now let the whole thing boil and bubble for several months. If it should not rise well, add newspapers. When it is at white heat, garnish liberally with long green. Now let the steam off and set aside to cool. Preserve in alcohol for future use.

A political campaign should be served in gum shoes, and should also be taken with a grain of salt.—Success Magazine.

TIRED ALL THE TIME.

Languor, listlessness and dullness of spirits are often due to kidney disorders. Pain and weakness in the back, sides and hips, headaches, dizziness, urinary disorders are sure signs that the kidneys need immediate attention. Delay is dangerous. Mrs. John F. The success of Dr. Alexander Graham Bell in aviation recalled to a reporter at the Pen and Pencil Club in Philadelphia an interview with the inventor.

"It was," said the reporter, "at the time when the first news of Dr. Bell's aeronautical achievements had begun to leak out.

Buys Musician's Birthplace.

The city of Vienna has purchased the house in which Franz Schubert was born, in 1797, for $22,000.

The house is of the old-fashioned, one-story type of building which is fast disappearing from modern Vienna. The front is devoid of any attractive features, but the little court behind, with wooden galleries and a garden on the steep hillside, have a certain picturesqueness, and few music-lovers go to Vienna without making a pilgrimage to Schubert's birth place.

Turning to Mental Healing.

Many of our best physicians, who only a few years ago ridiculed mental healing, are beginning to adopt the principle—so far as they know how—in their practice; especially the power of suggestion. They are finding that their patients are often more affected by mental medicine, by their "calls," their encouragement and good cheer, than by their pills. They are finding, too, that the mental attitude of the patient has everything to do with the effect of the disease, that it often proves the turning-point in a critical crisis. The result of all this mental influence is a very marked falling off in the use of drugs. Many of our leading physicians give but very little medicine, because they have very little faith in it. It is now well known that scores of eminent physicians employ metaphysical healing in their own family and often for themselves. Even the regular medical schools are taking up the subject of mental medicine in their lecture courses.

Hampered as this great movement still is by the errors and extravagances of over-zealous followers, and also by the fraud of charlatans, who take advantage of the opportunities it offers to impose on the credulous and ignorant, there is no doubt that the basic principle of this metaphysical movement has opened up many possibilities of mind building, character building, and body building, which are destined to bring untold blessings to the world. —Orison Swett Marden, in Success Magazine.

Scriptural Research.

The Rev. Paul L. Hickok was walking home from prayer-meeting, one Wednesday night, when he met a hopelessly intoxicated man trying to walk home. Thinking to play the good Samaritan, he asked the man's address and helped him along. When they had reached the front steps the man turned and asked him who he was. Not wishing to give his real name, the clergyman smiled and answered, "Paul." As he was going out of the gate the man called him.

"Shay," he called, "did you ever get an ansher (hic) to that letter (hic) you sent to the Ephesians?"—Success Magazine.

FASHION HINTS

Something practical for tennis and all outing wear is shown in this little model, carried out in viyella flannel, which washes like a linen but does not shrink. It would be very neat. A button hole finish is used.

More than 200 men in New York City are working to improve automobiles.

James J. Hill's opinion of the crops in the United States is:—"We are going to have a good, big average crop. Not bumper crops, but a good round yield comparing well with the average. The money value will be larger than usual for prices will be higher. Corn is now selling around 65 cents in Nebraska and wheat about $1.30 in Minneapolis. The time of low prices for grain has passed. A great deal of wealth will be added to the farmer's store by the sale of crops this year.

Life 100,000 Years Ago.

Scientists have found in caves in switzerland bones of men, who lived 100,000 years ago, when life was in constant danger from wild beats. To-day the danger, as shown by A. W. Brown of Alexander, Me., is largely from deadly disease. "If it had not been for Dr. King's New Discovery, which cured me, I could not have lived," he writes, "suffering as I did from a severe lung trouble and stubborn cough." To cure Sore Lungs, Colds, obstinate Coughs, and prevent Pneumonia, its the best medicine on earth. 50c and $1.00 Guaranteed by H. Milliman. Trial bottle free.

Barbara Simanton of Auburn, was a guest of friends here, last week.

Merritt Barney and wife and Mrs. Chas. Kagey were at Wayne, Monday.

The Bailey meat market has put in Claude Mason's gas engine, intending to run their sausage grinder with same.

Mr. Kisibeth from Mark Center and Miss Josephine Lett of Milford Center were Sunday guests of Mr. and Mrs. Aaron Thomas.

The Misses Marie Hofman and Marjory Beard of Springfield, Ohio, are the guests of Mrs. S. W. Tustison and Ralph Patterson for a few days.

The Missionary Society of the Lutheran church will serve supper from 5 to 7 o'clock Saturday evening July 24th, in the basement. Ten cents.

Rolland Bearss and family and Mrs. Alice Warner left Tuesday noon for Lake James, to spend the week with Henry Hathaway and family. Mrs. Laura Baker was also at James Lake.

The Misses Dora and Mary Williams of Huntington, were guests in the Rhodenbaugh home several days last week, while on their way home from Angola, where they were attending college.

Chas. Koch of Hamilton was in town, Tuesday. He has purchased the Forest house at the lake and expects to repair it and make it their summer home. We think Chas. was homesick to see St. Joe.

Glenn Miller is a new subscriber to THE NEWS. He and his family are spending the summer at Pullman, Michigan, at a resort. Some few weeks ago he finished his course at a law school and is resting up before locating. He intends to take a trip through the west and south to look for a good location.

Mr. H. M. Widney and Mr. E. E. Berry made a business trip to Brimfield, Ind., last Friday.

J. R. Leighty, wife and son returned to their home at Kansas City, Mo., Sunday evening on the Wabash.

All persons indebted to Dr. J. H. Lake are requested to settle their accounts in part or in full as soon as possible.

The Misses Neva and Vera Andress are spending a week with Miss Fae Miller of near Farmer and also at Bakers' of Hicksville.

J. Howard Wagoner, who has been manager of the Courier for the past three years, has resigned his position to accept a similar one in the south west.

Mack Leighty and wife were guests in the home of Beeks Erick and family at Wayne, Saturday and Sunday. Mr. Erick has been on the sick list for sometime and is not much improved at this time. Wm. Leighty and wife stayed on the farm during their two days absence.

Through the courtesy of W. H. Hannen of Spokane, Wash., we received a copy of the Spokesman Review which contained an article regarding their wheat crop, which is as follows:

"The total for the state of Oregon, approximately will be 14,000,000 bushels. The state of Washington reports are uniformly good and it is expected it will produce 35,000,000 bushels. Idaho will have a splendid crop. There is not very much increase in acreage and there is a big crop of barley and oats, so that the wheat yield may not quite reach that of 1907 Idaho wheat counties will yield from 5,000,000 to 6,000,000 bushels. While the crop of the three states will hardly reach the proportions of the record crop of 1907, the prices at which it will be marketed are so much higher than those which prevailed two years ago that it will bring into the country many millions more than was disbursed for the record crop of that year.

Osie Maxwell of Butler, was in town Monday.

Dr. J. H. Lake was at Ft. Wayne, Tuesday.

George Hamm and wife of Garrett, was in town, Wednesday.

Mr and Mrs. D. J. Baker were at Ft. Wayne Wednesday of last week.

Deliver your veal calves to Curie at St. Joe, Saturday. He pays 6½ cents per pound.

Mrs. Iona Woodcox and grandfather, Wm. Morr, left Tuesday for Montpelier, Ind., to visit relatives for a few days.

The Messrs Clay and Harland Coburn have severed their connection with The Keesler Milling Co., and it is now in the hands of Mr. Keesler.

Bills are out for the second excursion at Detroit, next Saturday and Sunday, July 24-25. Train leaves St. Joe at 6:34 each morning and a round trip ticket can be secured for $1.50, good returning on regular trains Monday.

Word was received this week by Mr. and Mrs. Hull from Prof. Colborn and wife, saying that they were getting along fine. They have purchased a farm near Morgantown, Ind., and moved there after Professor's school was out in June. He will have charge of the school at Morgantown this winter. They wish to be remembered to all their St. Joe friends.

Dr. L. N. Geisinger was appointed secretary of the County Board of health Monday morning to succeed Dr. J. B. Casebeer, deceased, by the board of county commissioners. Nusbaum and Swarts had filed applications but withdrew them before the time came for the appointment to be made. Dr. Geisinger is well qualified for the place. In addition to the professional requirements he has an automobile that can reach the farthermost parts of the county before disease has an opportunity to get much of a start.

Enjoying Themselves

Word received from the tourists Mr. and Mrs. Bert Patterson, Mr. and Mrs. M. E Olds and the Shutt girls, say they have enjoyed every minute of their trip so far. They spent their first Sunday at Colorado springs with Mr. and Mrs Bert Hull. They found them nicely situated and royal entertainers. They attended church with them at the First M. E. Church, and they also had the pleasure of reading the ST. JOE NEWS at their home. They arrived at Salt Lake City Thursday at 2:30 P. M. From there they will go to Los Angeles, Cal., to visit relatives for a short time and then continue en route.

Advice for Swimmers

If a bather in trouble would use common sense he would not drown. The belief is general that three times under water for the drowning person means crape and flowers. It's true, if you make the mistake of taking water for air. Hold your mouth shut when you are under water, and you'll keep going down and coming up all day. Don't exhaust yourself struggling. Relax every muscle and don't move a hand. You'll find that you'll never sink lower than your ears, and that in a few seconds you'll rise up until your shoulders are dry. You can keep on doing this indefinitely, but, of course, if you drink water you'll get weighted and down you go.

T. & C. I. Strike

The T. & C. I. are suffering as the results of twenty men striking Monday morning, cutting DeKalb County off entirely from communicating with Fort Wayne. New men took charge of the cars on Wednesday on a 1½ hour schedule. The difference between the company and the men amounts to three cents an hour, the present scale being 17c and 20c, and the one asked for in the articles of agreement submitted by the men being 20c to 23c. The strikers have no organization, merely going out independently, but the men at the head of the movement for higher wages state that the entire road will be tied up so far as their going back to work is concerned until some new wage scale is arrived at.

Letter From M. H. Hannen

The following letter was received from Mr and Mrs. M. H. Hannen of Spokane, Washington, in which he says enclosed find money order for $3 in payment of our subscription to the News. We hope you will not throw the money order in the waste basket.

Mrs. Hannen and I are enjoying good health and enjoying ourselves generally. We have built us a nice little house, 12x16, a pantry and two closets, have a basement and expect to complete it by a porch. We live about five rods from the depot and about half way between Spokane and Medical lake along Washington Water Power Company Electric railway. There is a junction here running to Cheeney, Washington. We live nine mile from Cheeney. A half hour ride on the electric line takes us to any of the above places.

Spokane has over 100,000 inhabitants, and there is not another town of its size that does the same amount of business. We went to Spokane July 10 to see the Lumbermen's parade, there were ninety-three teams loaded with lumber and all kinds of building material. The parade was two miles long and some of the finest teams we ever saw, also five professional bands in the parade.

Sunday, July 11, we went to a funeral of a man one of our neighbors, 21 years of age, who was blasting in a well, he went back into the well before the smoke settled and was suffocated before help could reach him.

Monday, July 12, we went to Nattatorium Park in Spokane, to hear Liberatti's Military Band, from N. Y., one of the finest organizations of its kind in this country, and we think we were well paid, it was simply grand.

We received a letter from Bro. E. M. Shutt and wife a few weeks ago, they were in New Orleans and from there were going to Texas and to Old Mexico and then to Seattle to attend the exposition. They will make us a visit before returning home.

We have had nice weather here this summer. Fruit is plentiful and the wheat crop is estimated at fifteen million bushels for the State of Washington.

We will close by sending our love and best wishes to all our old friends in Indiana.

Ate Pills For Candy

Josiah, the 14 months old baby of C. A. Woodcox and wife was seriously ill last Friday evening. Some time during the evening he had gotten hold of a bottle of pain pills, supposing it to be candy. He immediately began to chew the cork and in a short time he made his way into the pills and when discovered he had swallowed five of them. Medical aid was summoned and was given medicine to make him vomit and about dark they succeeded. Large pieces of the cork with the pills were found. He at once began to feel better and is now as well as ever.

Big Doings Sat. Evening

Last Saturday evening St. Joe was overflowing with people who had assembled here to hear the band concert and do their weekly trading at the stores. People began to come to town early and the streets were jammed with the merry makers. Hitching racks were at a premium, and many could find no place to hitch and had to remain in their buggies. The Concord drum corps was a special feature and a good drawing card. The crowd was estimated at 800 and we believe the figures to be low. The concert was the best of the season and under the leadership of C. A. Woodcox is making a name for itself as a first class musical organization, and its weekly concerts are a pleasing diversion to our people and is the means of drawing many visitors to our little city. Speaking in behalf of our merchants we wish to express our appreciation for your coming and assure you that we will do all in our power to entertain you in the future as in the past. The drum corps has the thanks of our people for so liberally giving their time in adding to the evening's entertainment. Harry Kees also comes in for his share of the honors in making the evening a success by furnish free round trip transportation for the Concord drum corps.

During the evening several baloons were sent up much to the delight of the younger visitors

We invite you to come back Saturday night and enjoy yourself.

Union Grove Meeting

The Christian Sunday School of this place will entertain the second annual reunion of the five schools located at Milford, Harlan, Newville, Coburns and St. Joe, at Railroad Park on August 1st., an all day session will be held and a good program has been arranged. Herbert Moniger, of national fame will deliver the afternoon address. All Sunday School workers are earnestly invited to meet with us and enjoy the day.

A Sunday School Picnic.

The Fairview M. P. Sunday School will give a picnic Saturday, August 7th., 1909, in Knight's grove, one-fourth mile east of the Fairview church. A good time is assured.

Good fishin

Harry Milliman, Newton Perry, Geo. Wade and Leon Sechler were at Hamilton lake, Sunday, enjoying a day's outing. A good catch of the finny tribe is reported.

Big Grain Elevator Burns.

Dixon, Ohio, again suffered heavily by fire when flames completely wiped out the Dixon grain elevators and the A. Dieterick hardware establishment, entailing a loss that will approximate $20,000, partially covered by insurance. The origin of the fire is unknown. It was discovered in a shed in the rear of the hardware store. Facilities for fighting the fire were meagre, and the flames licked up the hardware store and then swept across the street to the grain elevators. The burned buildings were all on the Indiana side of the line. Dixon has been singularly unfortunate in the matter of fires within the past five years. The elevator destroyed is the third to burn within that time, in addition to a church, a residence and two store buildings.

The Wind was Contrary.

Orville Wright made two unsuccessful attempts to maneuver his aeroplane in the air at Fort Myer. The failures were due largely to the small area of the field and the unfavorable direction of the light wind blowing. The machine rose on both occasions, but the aviator was obliged to make the turn at the end of the drill field before the "flying speed" had been attained and came to earth because of lack of speed when he attempted to turn. On the first trial the machine rose a little more than ten feet and on the second trial a height of about twenty feet was attained. In the latter trial Mr. Wright failed to stop his motor before making landing and the machine in scraping against a little knoll broke the cross-bar between the skids.

Kills Babe at Breast.

After preparing herself for bed, Mrs. Bump, wife of Ralph Bump, a farmer residing four miles southeast of Roanoke, Ind., deliberately fed the babe at her breast three morphine tablets and then, laying it in its crib to die, drank a half ounce of carbolic acid and called her husband to tell him what she had done in a fit of momentary insanity. The child, four months of age, died and the mother is hovering between death and recovery, more nearly dead than alive, and with the awful charge of infanticide hovering over her. Repeatedly she continues to vow her desire that her effort at willful self-destruction will yet be successful, although admitting that, if she had not killed her infant, she might wish to be well again.

Two Are Hurt in Runaway.

Frightened at a passing Wabash train, a horse hitched to a small wagon dashed down the steep Wabash street hill in the business section of Wabash, Ind., struck a buggy occupied by Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Wildoner and hurled the buggy on to the hillside, almost demolishing both rigs and injuring both Mr. and Mrs. Wildoner. Mrs. Wildoner, the more seriously injured, was rescued with difficulty.

Tornado Breaks Up a Funeral.

More than a score of persons were injured in a tornado that swept over the northeastern part of Butler County, Ohio. At Seven-Mile Station the funeral procession of Mrs. Sarah Lloyd was caught in the wind. Five carriages containing twenty persons were blown across the road and hurled against a fence, injuring all of the occupants, none fatally, however.

Auto Goes Down Embankment.

While attempting to pass a rig on a bridge across Cobbs Fork, about a mile west of Gransburg, Ind., Carl Turner, a chauffeur, lost control of the automobile he was driving. The machine plunged down a forty foot embankment and turned over a couple of times. Turner was seriously injured.

Shot at Paramour; Killed Erring Wife.

Frank E. McMillan, aged 31 years, killed his wife, aged 28, at their home in Greenwood, Pa., with one of a fusillade of shot directed at Wm. E. McDonnell, said to have been the woman's paramour. McDowell escaped uninjured.

Storm Kills One at Camp Meeting.

One person was killed, another severely injured and several sustained minor injuries when an electrical storm swept the camp meeting grounds of the Free Methodists in Steubenville, Ohio.

Weston Completes His Walk.

Edward Payson Weston completed his 3,975 mile walk from New York at 10:50 o'clock Wednesday night, when he arrived in San Francisco.

TARIFF BILL IS PASSED BY VOTE OF 45 TO 34

Ten Republicans, Firm for Downward Revision, Oppose Measure —One Democrat Supports It.

TRIUMPH OF SENATOR ALDRICH

Conferees from Senate Appointed at Once, Without Waiting for House Action.

By a vote of 45 to 34 the tariff bill was passed by the Senate a few minutes after 11 o'clock Thursday night under dramatic circumstances.

Ten Republican Senators defying a last attempt of Aldrich of Rhode Island to read them out of the party, cast their votes against the passage of the measure. Here are the ten:

Beveridge, Ind.	Crawford, S. D.
Bristow, Kansas.	Cummins, Iowa.
Brown, Nebraska.	Dolliver, Iowa.
Burkett, Nebraska.	La Follette, Wis.
Clapp, Minnesota.	Nelson, Minnesota.

Immediately after the passage of the bill, on motion of Senator Aldrich—contrary to precedents, but sustained by the Vice President, who was in the chair—the conferees on the part of the Senate who will deal with the measure in its next stage were appointed. The usual custom is to wait for the House in which a measure originates to reject amendments made by the other house and ask for a conference. The Senate conferees are:

Republicans.

Aldrich, R. I.	Penrose, Pa.
Hale, Maine.	Cullom, Illinois.
Burrows, Mich.

Democrats.

Daniel, Virginia. Bailey, Texas.
Money, Mississippi.

Senator Cullom, while named on the committee, may not serve during a great part of the deliberations. He leaves for Atlantic City with Mrs. Cullom and has set no specific time for his return to the capital. His consent at the last moment to have his name included in the committee membership, although inclined by the condition of his health to step aside, solves a problem that otherwise would have given New England, already more than adequately represented, another member on the committee in the person of Senator Lodge of Massachusetts, whose seniority would have demanded consideration and prevented under the circumstances, the appointment of Senator Smoot of Utah.

The vote in detail on the bill was as follows, Senator McEnery of Louisiana being the only Democrat to vote for its passage:

Yeas.

Aldrich	Guggenheim
Borah	Hale
Bourne	Heyburn
Bradley	Johnson
Brandegee	Jones
Briggs	Kean
Bulkeley	Lorimer
Burnham	McCumber
Burrows	McEnery
Burton	Nixon
Carter	Oliver
Clark (Wyo.)	Page
Crane	Penrose
Depew	Perkins
Dick	Piles
Dixon	Scott
Du Pont	Smith (Mich.)
Elkins	Smoot
Flint	Stephenson
Frye	Sutherland
Gallinger	Warter
Gamble	Wetmore

Nays.

Bacon	Gore
Bailey	Hughes
Bankhead	Johnston
Beveridge	La Follette
Bristow	McLaurin
Brown	Martin
Burkett	Money

TEACHERS SHUN BOOK FIGHT.

Refuse to Elect Man Committed to Contest for Price Reform.

The election of James Yadkin Joyner, superintendent of public instruction of North Carolina, as president of the National Educational Association in Denver, is regarded by his supporters as a victory in their fight against any regulation of the prices of school text-books. Mr. Joyner was elected over Ben Blewett, head of the St. Louis schools, and Dr. J. H. Phillips of Birmingham, Ala.

The association went on record against the existence of fraternities in high schools in a resolution which declares such organizations to be opposed to the spirit of democracy. It also decided to "investigate" the feasibility of simplified spelling, but took no decided stand either for or against it.

Irwin Shepherd of Winona, Minn., was re-elected secretary, A. H. Chamberlain of California was re-elected treasurer, and Lorenzo D. Harvey, the retiring president, was elected first vice president. San Francisco was selected as the next meeting place of the National Education Association. Milwaukee and Boston contended for it.

STEAMERS COLLIDE: 14 DROWN.

Ore Freighter Sinks in Three Minutes—Crashes with New Boat.

Three minutes after the steel steamers Isaac M. Scott and John B. Cowle had collided in Lake Superior early Monday morning, about a mile and a half off Whitefish point lighthouse, the Cowle had gone to the bottom in fifty fathoms of water, carrying with it fourteen members of its crew. The Scott, although badly damaged about the bows, put back to Sault Ste. Marie, where it arrived in the afternoon with part of the crew of the Cowle.

A heavy fog was responsible for the collision. The Scott, a new boat on its maiden trip to the head of the lakes, had just passed the light at Whitefish point and straightened out its course up the lake when suddenly the John B. Cowle loomed up through the fog broadside on to the Scott and only a few feet away. The Cowle was downbound with 8,000 tons of iron ore in the hold.

The ships were so close that it was said to be impossible to avoid a collision and the Scott crashed into the side of the heavily laden Cowle. For fifteen feet the bow of the Scott penetrated the side of the Cowle. Tons of water rushed into the great opening.

Immediately after the collision a line was thrown from the deck of the Scott to the forward deck of the Cowle and three members of the crew escaped to the deck of the upbound boat by this means. The rest of the crew who were saved jumped from the sinking steamer into the lake, some without life preservers, and were picked up by the Scott and the steamer Goodyear, which was a short distance astern of the Scott when the collision happened. Capt. Rogers, of the Cowle, was one of those who were rescued by the Goodyear.

ODDS & ENDS OF SPORT

The St. Paul Y. M. C. A. have opened an outdoor gymnasium.

The annual rowing races between Yale and Harvard on the Thames were won by the crews of Harvard. Cornell won on the Hudson.

The base ball team of the University of Wisconsin has about decided to abandon the project of visiting Japan as had been planned.

Minneapolis made it four straight over Indianapolis for the series by taking the last game on the home grounds in the twelfth inning, 4-3.

The spring meeting of the Montreal Jockey Club was a huge success this year. At the closing events a majority of the finishes were close and exciting.

The frequent rains have retarded training throughout the country, and as a result the trotters and pacers are at least three weeks late in their "preps" for the races.

Lou Dillon is creating quite a stir on the Berlin tracks. After being in retirement for nearly four years she proves that she has lost none of her old-time speed. The record she now makes is 2:02 3-5.

A novel experiment has been tried in Cincinnati. It has been demonstrated that base ball can be successfully played by electric light. President Hermann, of the National Base Ball Commission, pronounced the attempt a success.

The New Zealand rower, R. Arnst, defeated W. Webb, in a contest on the Wanganui River, N. Z., which victory allows him to retain the sculling championship of the world. His record is 3⅝ miles in 18 minutes, 14 2-5 seconds.

The Chicago Automobile Club have sustained losses amounting to $30,000 as a result of the Crown Point meet, and they have decided to drop auto races from the schedule for 1910. If the races are given they will be conducted on vastly different lines.

TAFT'S ITINERARY ANNOUNCED.

President Will Visit Many Western Cities, but Not Alaska.

President Taft has given an outline of the tentative plans for his trip through the West and South this fall. The President has abandoned all idea of visiting Alaska this year, largely owing to the fact that Mrs. Taft will not be able to go with him.

As son as the tariff bill has received the action of the President, Mr. Taft will leave Washington for Beverly. He will remain there until Sept. 15—his fifty-second birthday—when he hopes, if Mrs. Taft continues to improve, to begin his Western journey. The President will head direct from Beverly to Seattle, stopping for brief visits en route at Denver, Salt Lake and Spokane. After visiting the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition the President will swing down to the Southwest, stopping for a time at Portland, where he will be the guest of Senator Bourne, and proceeding thence to San Francisco and Los Angeles. San Diego will be the next stop and then will come a trip into Arizona and New Mexico. The President will stop for a time at El Paso, where he expects to meet President Diaz, of Mexico.

Other stopping places will be San Antonio, Fort Sam Houston, Austin, Dallas, Charles P. Taft's ranch near Brownsville, Houston, New Orleans for the deep water ways congress, Bayou Teche country of Louisiana, Jackson, Montgomery, Birmingham, Macon, Augusta, Savannah, Wilmington, N. C., Richmond, and Washington.

NEWCOMB, SCIENTIST, IS DEAD.

Military Funeral for Noted Astronomer in Washington, D. C.

Prof. Simon Newcomb, astronomer, mathematician, traveler, and rear admiral, retired, who died at his home in Washington, D. C., was buried with military honors in Arlington Cemetery Wednesday. High officials of the government attended and the honorary pallbearers included prominent men.

Prof. Newcomb is survived by his widow, a daughter of the late Dr. Hassler, surgeon, U. S. N., and three daughters, Dr. Anita Newcomb McGee of Washington, Mrs. Francis Wilson, and Mrs. Edward Whitney, both of New York. Simon Newcomb was the recipient of more degrees and similar honors abroad than any other American man of science. He was the first American associate of the French institute since Benjamin Franklin, and was decorated by Kaiser Wilhelm with the order "Pour le Merite fur Vissenschaften und Kunsten." He was a writer on political economy as well as in his own peculiar department of learning, that of astronomy.

Black Hand Terrorizes Richmond.

The Black Hand or some similar agency is operating in Richmond, Va. Wealthy men have received letters threatening the abduction of their children if the writers were not paid money. With such alarm did one of the recipients regard the letters that he forthwith sent his wife and children to a neighboring city.

A GORGEOUS SPECTACLE.

Epochmaking Events Recalled by Lake Champlain Tercentenary.

One of the most remarkable celebrations in the history of the country was that held in northern New York, where the tercentenary of the discovery of Lake Champlain by Samuel De Champlain, the French explorer, was fittingly observed. The Dominion of Canada was represented by several high officials; the United States by President Taft; New York by Gov. Hughes, Vermont by Gov. Prouty and France and Great Britain by their ambassadors, M. Jusserand and Hon. James Brice. The fete commenced at Burlington, Vt., with special religious observance.

The celebration proper began at Crown Point, Monday. There are located forts and redoubts which loomed large in the history of the French and Indian war and the American revolution. During the week at various points about Lake Champlain there were scheduled 23 pageants or tableaux, 9 representing the history of the Iroquois confederacy down to the arrival of the French in this section of the country and 15 illustrating the religious ceremonies and social customs of the Iroquois and the Algonquins in war and peace. The most interesting and gorgeous of the pageants were the two depicting the discovery of the lake by Champlain and the battle between the Huron-Algonquin allies and the fighting Iroquois in which the explorer had a hand. Canadian and American Indians, descendants of the warriors who fought with and against the great French explorer, took part in these tableaux.

Great interest attached to Fort Ticonderoga, which was captured during the revolution by Col. Ethan Allen and his Green Mountain boys. The fort is being reconstructed at a cost of $500,000 by Mrs. Stephen H. P. Pell, daughter of Colonel Robert M. Thompson, of New York, who is so deeply interested in the patriotic history of the section that he is giving the money for the reconstruction of the fort. The west barracks were completed in time for the celebration.

Plattsburg's day was celebrated Wednesday. Near this city Benedict Arnold fought and lost the first naval action of the revolution. His flagship, the Royal Savage, has been lying where she sank in that fight for 133 years. The barge Revenge, one of Arnold's fleet, had been raised and was in the pageant. On Thursday the center of attraction was at Burlington, Vt., where many delightful historical pageants were enacted.

NEBRASKA ELECTION LAW VOID

Superior Court at Lincoln Gives Decision in Test Case.

In Lincoln, Neb., the Superior Court handed down a decision declaring the Donohoe nonpartisan judiciary election law invalid. Te decree says: "The majority of the court holding that the act is void, the judgment of the District Court is affirmed." This means that the election of judges of the Supreme Court, District courts, regents of the State University, county judges, and county superintendents by use of a separate ballot, cannot take place. The old law will continue to hold. The chief objection of the court was to the provision requiring that for 1,000 names to be on a petition for judge, not more than 500 of which could come from one county. They declared that it was a hindrance to the free exercise of the franchise, and was repugnant to the constitution of the State. Four of the six members sitting believed this provision formed the chief reason for the passage, and thus invalidated the whole act. The entire court declared the provision denying the right of party conventions to indorse candidates for the offices affected by the act was without force and void.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES

Two hundred and seventeen girls were graduated from Vassar this year.

The Woman's College, at Jacksonville, Ill., founded sixty-one years ago, graduated a class of sixty-one this year. A new $70,000 building for this institution is in process of construction.

The Chicago school board has decided to abolish Latin and algebra in the lower grades and readjust the course of study, making it more practical. A training school of domestic science for girls is to be established.

In the recent examination of forestry in the University of Michigan, William W. Morris received the mark of 87.73, the highest mark won in the recent forestry examination in all the universities of the country. He has been almost wholly self-supporting while at the university.

The feature of the Macalester College commencement, aside from the formal announcement that the endowment fund of $450,000 had been raised, was the recital given by the department of music.

The Minnesota Indian School at Morris will not be taken over by the State for an agricultural station for a while. The government has appropriated $27,000 to maintain the Indian school until the State takes hold.

St. Joseph's Academy granted diplomas to thirty-one girls who finished the course at that institution in St. Paul last week. The commencement exercises were held outdoors. Archbishop Ireland delivered the address.

Work of Congress

The finance committee forces completed arrangements Wednesday for the final vote on the tariff bill in the Senate Thursday. The straight income taxers were afforded the opportunity they have so long been working for, a chance to vote directly in favor of the income instead of the corporation tax, and they were defeated 28 to 47. The corporation tax amendment was thus finally made a part of the tariff bill and Senator Clapp, of Minnesota succeeded in having it amended so as to include holding companies. After a hot debate on the customs court the finance committee's provision was accepted. Senator La Follette offered several amendments, but they were rejected. The House was not in session.

-:—:-

After a long speech by Senator La Follette and repeated attempts at amendment, almost all of which were failures, the Senate passed the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill shortly after 11 o'clock Thursday, and adjourned at 11:18 at night. Senator Bradley of Kentucky succeeded in amending the tobacco schedule so as to remove the free sale of tobacco "in the hand." This clause is said to have caused the forays of the night riders. Free hides and free boots and shoes were again defeated. The House held a session which was largely formal. The attendance was large.

-:—:-

During a session lasting nearly four hours the Philippine tariff bill and the bill automatically continuing the Porto Rican budget were passed by the Senate Friday. Only a nominal resistance was offered by the minority to these measures. An amendment by Senator Johnson (Ala.) declaring the intention of the United States eventually to grant independence to the Philippines was opposed as being out of place in this bill, and was rejected. Senator Culberson sought to limit the operation of the Porto Rican act to July 1, 1910, but his amendment for that purpose was defeated. The Senate entered upon an agreement to adjourn three days at a time until the conference report on the tariff bill is ready for consideration, and also not to enact any legislation when it does convene. After a debate of an hour and a half the House referred the tariff bill to the conferees, disagreeing to all of the 847 amendments of the Senate, by a vote of 178 to 151. Eighteen Republicans voted against this action and one Democrat voted for it. Chairman Payne's plea to have the conferees sent to the conference unhampered with instructions was granted. At 3:26 the House adjourned to Monday noon, when the joint resolution providing for the submission to the several States of the income tax amendment to the Constitution will be considered.

-:—:-

The House, after four hours' debate Monday, adopted by a vote of 317 to 14 the joint resolution submitting to the various legislatures for ratification the proposed amendment to the Constitution empowering Congress to levy an income tax, the Democrats voting to a man for the amendment. Adjournment was taken until Thursday.

-:—:-

The Senate was in session twenty minutes Tuesday, adjourning at 12:20 until Friday. The major portion of the time of the sitting was devoted to a discussion of the unanimous consent agreement not to transact any business while the tariff conference is in progress. Senator Carter tried to have passed a bill pertaining to the affairs of the District of Columbia on the ground that the bill was "such a little one" that no harm could result from its passage. But Senators Lodge and Culberson, standing guard over the interests of the two sides of the chamber, objected and thus prevented action. The House was not in session.

BRIEF NEWS ITEMS.

According to an official statement given out by President Frank M. Miller of the Louisiana Game Commission, 5,500 deer were killed in that State during the season just closed.

The longshoremen, who have been expected to go on a strike on the Great Lakes, disapproved of the measure when it was put to a vote, and the ballots gave a big majority against the strike.

The home of W. H. Whalen at Tucson, Ariz., was wrecked by a dynamite bomb. No one was hurt. Whalen formerly was superintendent for the Iowa division of the Northwestern Railroad and lived at Boone, Ia.

August A. Busch, vice president of the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association, is suffering from serious injuries as a result of a fall through a footbridge on his country estate in St. Louis County, Missouri.

The war department in Washington is preparing to notify the city of Chicago that the Indiana and Lake street center-pier bridges are a menace to navigation and must be removed before Dec. 31, 1912.

Adolph Deutsch, Sr., of New York, refused to obey an order of the children's court to whip his boy as an alternative to paying a fine of $2. He also refused at first to pay the fine, but paid it under protest.

CHAPTER XV.—(Continued.)

Wheaton's hand rested again on the packet before him; he had flushed to the temples, but the color slowly died out of his face. It was very still in the room, and the watchman could be heard walking across the tiled lobby outside. A patrol wagon rattled in the street with a great clang of its gong. Wheaton had moved the brown parcel a little nearer to the edge of the table; Margrave noticed this and for the first time took a serious interest in the packet. He was not built for quick evolutions, but he made a sudden movement around the table toward Wheaton, who was between him and the door.

"What you got in that paper, Jim?" he asked, puffing from his exertion.

Wheaton did not speak, but he picked up the parcel and took a step toward the door, Margrave advancing upon him. Wheaton reached the door, holding the package under his arm.

"Don't touch me; don't touch me," he said, hoarsely. Margrave still came toward him. Wheaton's unengaged hand went nervously to his throat, and he fumbled at his tie. The sweat came out on his forehead. It was a curious scene, the tall, dark man in his evening clothes, pitiful in his agitation, with his back against the door, hugging the bundle under one arm; and Margrave, in his rough business suit, walking toward Wheaton, who retreated before him.

"I want that package, Jim."

"Go away! go away!" The sweat shone on Wheaton's forehead in great drops. "I can't, I can't—you know I can't!"

"You coward!" said Margrave. "I want that bundle." He made a gesture and Wheaton dodged and shrank away. Margrave laughed again; a malicious mirth possessed him. But he grew suddenly fierce and his fat fingers closed about Wheaton's neck. Wheaton huddled against the door, holding the brown packet with both hands.

"Drop it! Drop it!" blurted Margrave. He was breathing hard.

A sharp knock at the door against which they struggled caused Margrave to spring away. He walked down the room several paces with an assumption of carelessness, and Wheaton, with the bundle still under his arm, turned the knob of the door.

"Hello, Wheaton!" called Fenton, blinking in the glare of the lights.

"Good evening," said Wheaton.

"How're you, Fenton," said Margrave, carelessly, but mopping his forehead with his handkerchief.

"Here are your papers," said Wheaton, almost thrusting his parcel into the lawyer's hands.

"All right," said Fenton, looking curiously from one to the other. And then he glanced at the package, as if absentmindedly, and saw that the seal was unbroken.

"Good night, gentlemen," he said. "Sorry to have disturbed you."

"How much Traction was in that package?" asked Margrave, closing the door.

"I don't know," said Wheaton, smoothing his tie. The watchman could be heard closing the outside door on Fenton.

"No. I don't think you do," returned Margrave. "You'd fixed it pretty well with Fenton. If he'd only been a minute later I'd have got that bundle. I didn't realize at first what you had there, Jim, until you kept fingering it so desperately. Now there are those share you own, Jim. I hope we won't be interrupted while you're getting them for me."

Wheaton hesitated.

"I'm going from here to the Gazette office. You know they do what I tell 'em over there. They'd like a little story about the aristocratic Wheaton family of Ohio. Porter's girl would like that for breakfast to-morrow morning."

Wheaton hung between two inclinations, one to make terms with Margrave and assure his friendship at any hazard, the other to break with him, let the consequences be what they might.

"Hurry up," said Margrave impatiently; "this is my busy night and I can't wait on you. Dig it up."

Wheaton's hand went slowly to his pocket. As he drew out his own certificate with nervous fingers, the certificate which Evelyn Porter had given him an hour before fell upon the table.

"That's the right color," said Margrave, snatching the paper as Wheaton sprang forward to regain it.

"Not that! not that! That isn't mine!"

Margrave stepped back and swept the face of the certificate with his eyes.

"Well! I knew you stood next, Jim," he said, insolently, "but I didn't know that you were on such confidential terms as all this. And you witnessed the signature. How sweet and pretty it all is!" The paper exhaled the faint odor of sachet, and Margrave lifted it to his nostrils with a mockery of delight.

"I must have that, Margrave. I will do anything, but I must have that—You wouldn't——"

Margrave watched him maliciously, thoroughly enjoying his terror.

"How do you know I wouldn't? Give me the other one, Jim."

Still Wheaton held his own certificate; he believed for a moment that he could trade the one for the other.

"I'm not going to fool with you much longer, Jim; you either give me that certificate or I go to the Gazette office as straight as I can walk. Just sign it in blank, the way the other one is. I'll witness it all right."

Wheaton wrote while Margrave stood over him, holding ready a blotter which he applied to Wheaton's signature with unnecessary care.

"I hope this won't cause you any inconvenience with the lady, but you're undoubtedly a fair liar and you can fix that all right, particularly"—with a chuckle—"if the old man cashes in."

Wheaton followed Margrave's movements as if under a spell that he could not shake off. Margrave walked toward the door with an air of nonchalence, pulling on his gloves.

"I haven't my check-book with me, Jim, but I'll settle for your stock and Miss Evelyn's, too, after I get things reorganized. It'll be worth more money then. Please give the young lady my compliments," with irritating suavity. He stopped, smoothing the backs of his gloves placidly. "That's all right, Jim, ain't it?" he asked, mockingly.

"I hope you're satisfied," said Wheaton, weakly.

"I'm never satisfied," said Margrave, picking up his hat.

Wheaton wished to make a bargain with him, to secure his own immunity; but he did not know how to accomplish it. Margrave had threatened him, and he wished to dull the point of the threat, but he was afraid to ask a promise of him. Wheaton did not follow him to the door, but Margrave seemed in no hurry to leave. The watchman went forward to let him out at the side entrance.

"If he'd only been sure the oold man would have died to-night," he reflected as he walked up the street, "he'd have given me Porter's shares, easy." He went to his office, entertaining himself with this pleasant speculation. "If I'd got out of the bank with that package he'd never dared squeal," he presently concluded.

CHAPTER XVI.

John Saxton was a good deal the worse for wear as he swung himself from a sleeper in the Clarkson station and bolted for a down-town car. Coal mining is a dirty business, and there are limits to the things that can be crowded into a suit-case. He had been crawling through four-foot veins of Kansas coal in the interest of the Neponset Trust Company, and had been delayed a day longer than he had expected. He continued to be in a good deal of a hurry after he reached his office, and he kicked aside the mail which rustled under the door as he opened it, and knelt hastily before the safe and began rattling the tumblers of the combination. He pulled out a long envelope and then with more composure consulted his watch.

It was half-past eight. He took from his memorandum calendar the leaf for the day; on it he had posted a cutting from a local newspaper announcing the annual meeting of the stockholders of the Clarkson Traction Company. The meeting was to be held, so the notice recited, between the hours of 9 a. m. and 5 p. m. of the second Tuesday of November, at the general offices of the company in the city of Clarkson. The Exchange Building was specified, though the administrative offices of the company were on the other side of town. Before setting forth Saxton examined his papers, which were certificates of stock in the Clarkson Traction Company. They had been sent to him by a personal friend in Boston, the trustee of an estate, with instruction to investigate and report. Having received them just as he was leaving for Kansas, there had been no opportunity for consulting Porter or Wheaton, his usual advisers in perplexing matters. Traction stock had advanced lately, despite newspaper attacks on the company, and he hoped to sell his friend's shares to advantage.

Saxton had never been in the Exchange Building before and he poked about in the dark upper floors, uncertainly looking for the rooms described in the advertisement. Another man, also peering about in the hall, ran against him.

"Beg pardon, but can you tell me——"

"Good morning, Mr. Saxton, are you acquainted in this rookery?" It was Fenton, who carried a brown parcel under his arm and appeared annoyed.

"No; but I'm learning," John answered. "I'm looking for the offices of the Traction Company. Its light seems to be hid under a bushel."

"I'm looking for it, too," said Fenton. "Some humorist seems to have changed the numbers on this floor."

They traversed the halls of several floors in an effort to find the numbers specified in the notice. Fenton occasionally kicked at a door in his rage. Saxton called to him presently from a dark corner where he held up a lighted match to read the number on the transom.

"Here's our number, but there's no name on the door."

Fenton advanced upon the door with long strides, but it did not open as he grasped the knob. He kicked it sharply, but there was still no response from within.

"What time is it, Saxton?" he asked over his shoulder, without abating his pounding or knocking.

"Five minutes of nine." Saxton was aware now that something important was in progress. He did not know Fenton well, but he knew that he was the attorney for Porter and the Clarkson National, and that he was a serious character who did not beat on doors unless he had business on the inside. Fenton now called out loudly, demanding admission. There was a low sound of voices and a sharp noise of chairs being pushed over an uncarpeted floor; but the knob which Fenton still held and shook did not turn.

On the inside of the door Timothy Margrave and Horton, the president, Barnes, the secretary, and Percival, the treasurer of the Clarkson Traction Company, were holding the annual meeting of that corporation, in conformity with its articles of association, and according to the duly advertised notice as required by the statutes in such case made and provided. They had, however, anticipated the hour slightly; but this was not, Margrave said, an important matter. His notions of the proper way of holding business meetings were based on his long experience in managing ward primaries.

Horton, the president, called the meeting to order.

"Well, boys," said Margrave, "there ain't any use waiting on the other fellows. Business is business and we might as well get through with it. I vote twenty-five hundred and ninety-seven shares of the common stock of this company; you gentlemen haven't more than that, have you?" The fact was that the three officers present owned only one share each.

"I move," said Barnes, "that we proceed to the election of officers for the ensuing year."

"And I move," said Percival, "that the secretary be instructed to cast the ballot of the stockholders for Timothy Margrave for president."

"Consent," exclaimed Barnes, hurriedly.

Steps could be heard in the outer hall, and Margrave looked at his watch.

"I move that we adjourn to meet at my office at two o'clock, to conclude the election of officers." He gathered up his certificates and prepared to leave.

Too Wise to Be Hasty.

He was an unruly youngster. A writer in the New York Sun says that he had not been in the car five minutes before all the women present and most of the men were explaining to anybody who would listen what they would do with the boy if he belonged to them.

To the general babel there was one woman who contributed nothing. She was a gentle, gray-haired body, who remained unruffled by the small tempest raging.

"If that child belonged to me," said the woman beside her, "I'd make him mind if I had to half kill him, wouldn't you?"

"I don't know," said the quiet woman. "I don't know what I should do."

"You don't?" exclaimed the positive woman. "Well, I know. But then, maybe you are not used to children? Maybe you never had any of your own?"

"Oh, yes," said the little woman, "I brought up thirteen. That's why I don't know what I should do."

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

Sustained heavy shipments through the banks, an absence of large failures, gratifying crop reports and strengthening demands for factory outputs and general merchandise reflect the heavy position which trade now occupies. High cost is responsible for a smaller outgo of breadstuffs, but forwardings of iron and steel, mine and forest products, raw materials for early conversion and staple wares exhibit considerable gain. There is also very heavy passenger travel and continued recovery in the earnings of Chicapo steam roads.

While vessel capacity is not yet wholly employed, lake traffic is much better than at this time last year and rates obtained average higher. Prompt marketings during the harvests are foreshadowed by the advance inquiry for cars and this causes orders to be issued for additional equipment, much old rolling stock being found useless. Further developments in the prominent industries testify to confidence in the outlook. New plans announced include extensive additions to capacity at Gary and Indiana Harbor. Other enterprises assure large outlays for terminals, bridges and track elevation. Building construction progresses with the fine weather and there is remarkable consumption of structural materials of all kinds and increasing requests for lumber, brick, stone and cement.

Bank clearings, $252,163,481, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1908 by 17.6 per cent, and compare with $268,404,391 in 1907. Failures reported in the Chicago district number twenty, against twenty-three last week, twenty-five in 1908 and twenty-five in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number three, against five last week, six in 1908 and five in 1907.—Dun's Weekly Review of Trade.

NEW YORK.

Future trade continues good; confidence is unimpaired. Buyers are arriving in the larger markets. Cereal crop reports, despite rains in some winter wheat and corn growing sections, are encouraging. Country trade promises to be heavy on supplies in market. Industrial lines are becoming more active, calls for harvest hands absorb a large part of the floating supply of labor and the long-drawn out discussion regarding tariff matters promises to be soon ended. On the other hand, the general situation is not without its drawbacks. Thus cool or rainy weather has retarded retail trade over a goodly part of the country, particularly in the central West, South and Southwest, where floods have also deterred railway traffic and injured crops and country trade. At the same time, clearance sales are pretty general and these tend to stimulate business where normal weather conditions prevail. In wholesale and jobbing lines current trade is a midsummer character and re-orders are comparatively light. Moreover, the high prices that have prevailed for raw material suggest small profits on many manufactured articles. Collections range from poor to fair, though there are special lines which report prompt settlement.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with July 8 were 182, against 213 last week, 246 the same week of 1908, 185 in 1907, 143 in 1906 and 166 in 1905. The week's failures in Canada number 27, which compares with 22 last week and 39 in the like week of 1908.—Bradstreet's.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Miss Oakley Brown, the 14-year-old daughter of Mrs. Margaret Brown, a widow of Evansville, committed suicide because she was disappointed in not getting a new dress.

John Preble, a Fort Wayne & Wabash Valley Traction Company lineman, sustained a shock of 2,200 volts in a fall off a forty-foot trolley pole, yet was not severely injured.

The annual session of the Northern Indiana Teachers' Association will be held at Fort Wayne April 7 to 9, 1910. Professor L. N. Hines, of Crawfordsville, chairman of the executive committee, announced the selection after a trip to Ft. Wayne, investigating the hotel accommodations.

The Anti-Tuberculosis League obtained a location for its tuberculosis colony, and the cottages will be erected at once. The site will be the old fair ground, midway between South Bend and Mishawaka, on the north side of the St. Josepr river. The camp will be modeled after the one in Indianapolis.

William F. Edwards, a well-known attorney of Anderson, who mysteriously disappeared about four months ago, has returned. Last month a divorce was granted Mrs. Edwards on the grounds of abandonment. Edwards says he has been in the South traveling part of the time, and part of the time in a sanatorium at Hot Springs, Ark.

Prof. G. I. Christie, of Purdue University, was in Greenburg recently and selected that city as the place for holding a district corn school and farmers' short course in February, 1910. Only four of such meetings will be held in the State. The meeting will last five days. The expense is to be met by a sale of membership tickets throughout the district.

After William Thornburg, of Richmond, had been thrown to the ground and was being gored and stamped by an enraged bull and just as he gave up all hope of rescue the faithful family dog leaped the fence and fought the frenzied animal. While the dog and the bovine fought Thornburg managed to regain his feet and made his way from the inclosure. He was seriously injured.

Mrs. Delores Partlow German, a pretty girl of 23 years, who was married to Charles German, an Elwood tinplate worker, May 17, found that her new matrimonial alliance was a disappointing one, and after a brief wedded life left a note saying that she was going to the home of a sister in Arkansas, and that it would be useless to follow her. It is said, however, that she was seen in Tipton a few days ago. She left her wedding ring and a fond farewell, with thanks for kind treatment at her husband's home.

Charles Richardson, proprietor of the Putnam House in Mitchell, regards 25 cents a pound as too high for lead, even if it is molded into bullets, and hereafter he will try to buy his spring chickens full dressed instead of taking them from hucksters "in feathers and on the hoof." Mr. Richardson has been feeding his guests with "spring broilers." Finding a surprising difference between the weight of the chickens when alive and when dressed he made an investigation and found their craws filled with home molded bullets. There was enough lead to start a small arsonal.

Conrad Rose, driver of a water sprinkler at Howell, was overcome by the heat a few days ago. He fell from the wagon and was seriously injured. Rose says this is the first time he ever fell from the "water wagon."

Typhoid fever is prevalent at Gary. Dr. T. W. Templin, the health officer, traced the source of the disease to milk shipped from Miller Station and McCool dairies, where farmers were found to have children sick with the fever.

Dogs entered the yard and house of Bert Ward, living one mile east of Covington, and killed forty-two spring chickens, just ready for the market.

Lightning struck a large pond, three miles east of Nappanee and every fish in it was killed. The farmers were afraid to eat the fish and buried them.

While out fishing in the waters of Sugar creek, near Clark's dam, Chas. Steinhauser, of Crawfordsville, caught a soft-shel turtle upon the bottom of which were carved the initials "A. B." and the date '1907."

Homer Carr, who is running a mussel camp at Mitchell, found a pearl that weighs forty grains. It is round and a light, rich color, and is prized highly. This is the largest pearl found this season. One was found last year that weighed fifty-six grains. Mr. Carr has sold about $400 worth of pearls and slugs this season, and now has a large stock of shells on hand.

A bird's nest caused a fire at the Columbus barns of the Indianapolis, Columbus & Southern Traction Company. A robin had built a nest between the interior trolley wires and the ceiling, and it is supposed a spark from a passing trolley wheel fired the nest. The blaze spread to the ceiling and the fire department was called to extinguish the blaze. The loss was trivial.

Noan Cassaday, of Mitchell, owned a cat that he did not wish, and neither did his neighbors, so he gave it to the "boys" at the freight office. They put the cat into a car, which was not opened until it reached Peerless, sixteen miles north. This was three months ago, and a few days ago when Mr. Cassaday opened the back door there was tabby. Around the world in the famous cruise of the battleship squadron went Harry D. Meyers, 22 years old, of Muncie, only to die at home from the effects of the voyage. While aboard the battleship Tennessee he contracted a lung affection that became so serious he was confined to a Government hospital in Colorado for a while, but subsequently rallied considerably and came home to Muncie, where he died. He was the son of Michael Meyers.

A county evangelitsic campaign, under the leadership of Charles Reign Scoville, has just been concluded at Angola, with four hundred additions to the Christian churches of Steuben County. Last Sunday afternoon the Christian church in Angola made contributions to the amount of $15,350 for a modern church edifice, to be erected immediately at a cost of $30,000. The evangelistic campaign which Mr. Scoville conducted attracted large audiences, which assembled in a tabernacle seating 1,500.

Mrs. William J. Moore, of Bedford, was nearly frightened out of her wits when she moved a seat on the veranda at her home away from a window, and discovered a large snake which was killed by a neighbor. The reptile measured 5 feet 5 inches and was large in proportion to its length. It was of a copper color, and so far no one has been able to tell to what species it belongs. In color it resembled a copperhead, but the body was not the shape of that species. It is believed to have escaped from its cage at a carnival show that had been exhibiting on the grounds near by.

The Taft method of getting along with Congress by means of a sort of jovial diplomacy is now on trial and the country is awaiting the result with more than usual interest, for in those results the country, that is the consumers, are vitally interested. President Taft has laid aside the big stick and appears to be seeking to influence Congress to adopt lower tariff rates by means of diplomacy. He is entertaining the Senate and House conferees at breakfast, luncheon and dinner, is taking them out in his auto and is smiling his blandest smile while he points out to them the danger to the party it they insist on imposing the high duties provided in the Senate bill. It is easy to imagine the situation were Mr. Roosevelt in the White House. There would be daily newspapers pronouncements and threats of a veto. Mr. Taft is not talking to the conferees through the newspapers but is taking them aside one by one and talking to them direct. It is certainly to be hoped that his method will gain for him the utmost success. If it does the entire country will be the gainer.

There is a disquieting rumor in Washington to the effect that Speaker Cannon is determined that the extremely high duties imposed on women's gloves by the House shall be retained, that he has, in fact, promised those duties to Lucious N. Littauer, a former member of the House who came to Washington and saved the day for the Speaker at the beginning of the session, when the vigorous attack was made on the House rules It is further reported that the Speaker is insisting on a duty on crude petroleum because of the insistent demand of the independent oil producers in his district. It is to be hoped that these rumors will prove unfounded. Nothing would make the tariff bill more unpopular than the House duties on women's gloves which would make that necessary article of dress materially dearer to every woman who aspires to be the owner of a pair of kid gloves, and a duty on petroleum, which almost every voter would interpret as special protection to the Standard Oil Company.

It is practically assured that the tax on the net income of corporations will be reduced from two to one per cent. The President has no objection whatever to the reduction as long as the lower rate will yield sufficient revenue to meet the expenses of the government --- that is, taken together with the revenue raised by the tariff and the internal revenue tax Probably no one will object to the decrease. The important feature of the tax, as the President has clearly pointed out, is that it makes the corporations, including all the great trusts, file at Washington a sworn statement of their receipts and expenses and of their net profits. As Senator Root has well put it, such statements of fact will avert a situation such as at present confronts the members of Congress who are assured that all the protected corporations in the country are on the verge of bankruptcy and only increased duties will save them from immediate failure.

According to reports in the hands of local railroad men there are now one third less idle cars on the railroad in the United States than there were a few months ago. This is due to the fact that freight business on the railroads is gradually picking up and there is a constant demand for cars. For a long time the American Railway association wrestled with the idle car problem, but it is claimed that they have matters so arranged that the cars will all soon be in use as they were a year of two ago.

Headache
For Years

God bless the man who first invented screens and God pity the man who is too indolent or indifferent to place them between his family and the spreaders of deadly disease. There is absolutely no excuse for the man or woman whose place of habitation swarms with flies and mosquitos to whine. They can be kept out, and 25 cents spent in keeping them out is equilvent to keeping out a doctor who would cost $25 or possibly to keeping out a much less welcome visitor.

Teething children have more or less diarrhoea, which can be controlled by giving Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. All that is necessary is to give the prescribed dose after each operation of the bowels more than natural and then castor oil to cleanse the system. It is safe and sure. Sold by H. M. Milliman, St. Joe, and F. R. Bowman, Spencerville.

There never was a paper published in any locality that gave all the local news. It is often the case that some persons come and go that the reporters do not see or even know of. It may happen that the same family is missed several times, and they get the impression that the paper dosen't care to mention them. It is a mistake. The best home paper has no ill feelings, no enmity, no spite against any one, so don't be afraid to tell the editor what you think will be interesting for the public to know.

A historical and geographical treatise on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad has just been issued telling the reasons why their road is the best for travel and also for educational advantages. It is said that the railroad is foremost in education and America leads the world in railroad advancements The B. & O. was the first in America and can therefore relate a most interesting tale of an educational character. The folder commences with the founders of the road, going on down through the many years and beautifully illustrates the advancement up to the present time.

The share of DeKalb county of the state school fund just apportioned by State Superintendent Aley, on a basis of $2 08 for each person of school age, is $16,277.44. Our county is credited with 7,001 children of school age The apportionment of the other counties is as follows: Allen county, with 25,906 children, gets $53,884 48; Adams county, with 7,335 children, gets $12,452 77; Wells county, with 6,692 children, gets $14,473.52; Huntington county, with 8,573 children, gets $17,962 63; Whitley county, with 4,849 children, $12 954.92; Noble county, with 6,318 school children, $20,593.19; Lagrange county, 4,245 school children $12,298.97; Kosciusko county, with 7,906 school children, $20, 881.57; Steuben county, with 3,609 school children, $8 356.13; Wabash county, with 7,914 school children, $18,201.89.

To date the Board of Censorship, composed of Civic Bodies and instituted by the Motion Picture Patents Company, which controls over five thousand motion Picture theatres in the United States and 90 per cent of the film product of the World, has examined 200,000 feet of film. After the film has been approved it is released to the hundred licensed film exchanges throughout the country who distribute it to the theatres. A reel of film averages about one thousand feet and includes one, two and sometimes three subjects. Eighteen new reels are released each week. At the average speed of operation. 14 seperate pictures pass the eye every second that the machine is in motion. Thus the censors have seen about 464 miles of film and at the rate of twenty minutes running time for each thousand feet, have looked upon 3,360,000,000 separate pictures. Scenes depicting crime, brutality, depravity, sensuality or drunkardness are condemned and cut out. At the last meeting only 24 feet out of 18,000 feet examined were discarded. The manufacturers study the discarded sections and do not repeat similar errors. They have been quick to realize the real demand and are eager to supply it. It will be a matter of but a few weeks when they will know exactly what is regarded as good and what bad according to the high moral standard of the Censorship Board and will produce only such films, thus leaving no further work for the Board to do.

How to Fight Jiggers

Last year, threshermen, harvest hands, workers in potteries and apparently all classes of laborers who were obliged to handle straw in anyway, suffered intensely from the attacks of harvest mites or "jiggers."

Horses, stabled under mows in which infested straw has been stored were in many cases rendered frantic by the irritation caused by these minute insects. Weather conditions lately have been exceedingly favorable for the development of a similar or worse plague this season.

The young mites are of microscopic size, blood red in color and belong in the order of spiders. The immature larvae are provided with only six legs while the adults have eight. It is the larval forms which cause annoyance. "Jiggers" are abundant in bramble thickets and on low growth in woods and along streams. They often occur in immense numbers in grain straw, sometimes causing sickness, and even death has sometimes resulted directly or indirectly from their attacks.

The eggs are laid on the ground. The young, upon hatching, in the species which have been studied, attach themselves to insect hosts and draw their sustenance from these for a time, dropping off when full fed. It is probably a misjudged attempt to follow their usual habit of parasitism that induces them to burrow into the flesh of human beings and warm blooded animals, a proceeding which invariably results in their death.

Preventives and remedies: The Ohio Experiment Station recommends that so far as possible one should avoid sitting or lying in locations that are apt to be infested. Where exposure is unavoidable, dust flowers of sulphur into all the underclothes, especially into the stockings and inside the shoes. Threshers should sift it into all their clothing and rub it over their bodies. Where infested straw must be stored in mows, dust the floor with sulphur and thoroughly sift it over the first layers of straw placed on the floor. Napthaline powder may be used instead of sulphur and is said to be equally effective, but the odor makes it more objectionable. As soon as possible after quitting work, exposed persons should take a bath in strong soapsuds. The carbolic and tar soaps are very useful for this purpose. If the mites have already penetrated beneath the skin, bathe in a very strong suds of carbolic soap. A very effective wash for this this purpose is to make a solution of one of the coal tar sheep dips, such as Zenoleum or Chloronaphtholeum, one part of the dip to about 100 to 150 parts of water. Other solutions that may be used on the welts are of ammonia, coal oil (kerosene) or dinary cooking soda. A dilute tincture of sodine or collodion, if lightly applied to the swelling will protect from the air and allay the smarting sensation. A complete change of clothing should be made after bathing.

Scientists have found in caves in switzerland bones of men, who lived 100,000 years ago, when life was in constant danger from wild beats. To-day the danger, as shown by A. W. Brown of Alexander, Me., is largely from deadly disease. "If it had not been for Dr. King's New Discovery, which cured me, I could not have lived," he writes, "suffering as I did from a severe lung trouble and stubborn cough." GROWS ASPARAGUS IN TUBES

Frenchman's Manner of Forcing Vegetable Means Work, But It Produces Results.

For some time a French agriculturist, M. Bouyer-Fonteneau, has been trying a new method of cultivating asparagus, which they grow and cook so well in France.

Starting from the principle that all cultivated vegetables, in order to obtain the best results, ought to be grown under the same conditions that they choose for themselves when growing wild, M. Bouyer-Fonteneau does not allow the banking that is usually done, which he considers harmful.

It is easy to understand that a root of asparagus buried a foot or more in the ground will push stalks towards the surface for air and light, without which it would become anaemic, or rot. It is better then, to bury it only about a quarter or a third as deep without banking, and as soon as the head appears to place over it a tube of pottery, two or two and one-half inches in diameter and about eight inches long, filled with earth.

The asparagus pushes up through this tube sheltered from the light, which is necessary, if it is to be white. When it comes out at the top it is a simple matter to take away the tube and cut the stalk with the greatest easy and without any risk of hurting the root or the other shoots.

M. Bouyer-Fonteneau states that asparagus thus treated comes to maturity nearly a month in advance of that banked in the old way. This is easily explained by the fact that the heat of the sun acts more quickly on a root near the surface of the ground than on one buried deeply. Besides, the stalk once in the tube grows faster than in the ground.

FIND RELICS IN RIVER BED.

Finely Tempered Weapons Recovered from a Channel on the Canadian Border.

While workmen were removing rock and debris from the old channel of the river between the second and third chutes to make way for the big power dam on the American side they unearthed in one of the pot holes in the rock a remarkable collection of Indian weapons and other articles, comprising tomahawks, spearheads, arrowheads, sturgeon fishhooks, etc., all made out of pure copper and hardened to the consistency of steel.

The articles are bright in appearance and are of superior workmanship, being evidently the work of the prehistoric race which fashioned the mounds, ornaments and utensils of the early days. That these people possessed the knowledge of tempering copper is evident from the specimens. How they came there is a mystery, but the general belief is that a party of Indians while endeavoring to land or make a portage lost control of their canoe and were swept over the falls, the canoe being overturned, causing the contents to go to the bottom of the river or be carried down stream.

That these articles were together is proof that they must have been tied in a leather sack or some other such receptacle. They were found packed together in the hole, which had doubtless been caused by centuries of swirling waters and gravel.—Fort Frances Correspondence Minneapolis Journal.

The Wily Giraffe.

Perhaps the most difficult of all wild animals to capture is the giraffe. In addition to being very rare, giraffes are exceedingly timid and are very swift-footed.

There is no special way to capture a giraffe, as almost every way has been tried, and all have been almost equally unsuccessful. The method which has occasionally resulted in a capture is by using a long cord at each end of which is a round weight. This cord is thrown by the hunter in such a manner as to wind around the animal's legs, either bringing it to the ground or rendering it incapable of escaping before it is made prisoner. Most of the giraffes in captivity have been caught by chance when young.

French Compromise.

An amusing story of compromise is mentioned in a Paris contemporary. It seems that the law of France requires parents to name their children either after the saints in the calendar or from a personage in history. A citizen of Troyes went to the registrar to inscribe the name of his little daughter, whom he wished to be known as Marianne. The registrar adjusted his spectacles, scratched his head, and then declared it was impossible. Marianne did not comply with either of the requirements. Finally the matter was arranged to the satisfaction of both the parents and the registrar. To the child was given the name of Marie Anne. To the parents it was almost what they wanted, and the law was satisfied.

The Table Manners (?) of the Turk.

Should you dine with a Turk, you will observe many peculiarities, to some of which you will find it hard to accustom yourself. The host and his guests, squatted upon little mats, await the servants who, bringing a tray, place it before the company upon a low stool. On this tray, in several shallow bowls with round covers, are the viands. Forks and spoons being dispensed with, each man, stretching out his right hand, deeply scoops up, with thumb, first finger, and middle finger held together, one or two mouthfuls from each bowl. At the conclusion of the dinner the guests file out one by one, to make their ablutions at the fountain.—Nicholas Adossides, in Colliers.

American Simplicity.

An American bishop who was visiting in England was greatly amused, not to say annoyed, by the way the Englishmen addressed him. Indeed, he became heartily tired of "Your Grace."

"When I returned to America," the bishop would say afterward, "you can imagine my surprise and delight, too, when one of my friends, standing on the pier, caught a glimpse of me as I waited to descend the gangplank, and called forth to me, 'Hello, Bish!'"

WHY PEOPLE SUFFER.

Too-often the kidneys are the cause and the sufferer is not aware of it. Sick kidneys bring backache and side pains, lameness and stiffness, dizziness, headaches, tired-feeling, urinary troubles. Doan's Kidney Pills cure the cause.

Nathan R. Hill, Stryker, Ohio, says: "Kidney troubles pulled me down until I was skin and bone. I could not work and finally took to bed. Doctors said I had gravel and advised an operation. The secretions were painful and sometimes almost stopped. Doan's Kidney Pills brought relief and finally a cure."

QUEER VISAGED OWL.

Great Gray Bird with Flat Face Like a Baboon, Killed in West.

The third great gray owl that has been killed in the state of Washington, so far as known, was bagged by Frank Keppa, of Wilkeson, while hunting in the woods near that place. Fred Edwards, a taxidermist, says it is the second one of the birds he knows of having been shot, the other being killed about fifteen years ago.

J. H. Bowles, an ornithologist, who for the last seven years has been making a study of the birds of the northwest, and especially of the Puget sound region, knows of only three that have been killed. One of these was shot by a hunter near Bellingham, and the other two are the present one and the one killed fifteen years ago, instanced by Edwards.

The owls have their habitat north of the arctic line. They are very scarce even in that region. In addition to being one of the rarest of the owl family, they are also the most peculiar. Notwithstanding that they measure from beak to tail from 2 feet to 30 inches, the body of the bird is not larger than that of a pigeon, so small, in fact, as to occasion wonder when its enormous spread of feathers is considered. These give an impression of a bird as large as an eagle.

Instead of large eyes as other owls the great gray has small eyes and also small, dainty feet, in contradiction to the muscular talons of other varieties of owls. The bird has a flat face, which, with an enormous wheel-like radiation of feathers from its eyes, gives it a comic, baboon look. Both Bowles and Edwards say the bird killed by Keppa was driven south by the hard winter in the northland.

"Not that the bird ever feels the cold," said Bowles, "for its coat of feathers is so deep and perfect that it probably would not feel the frost at 100 degrees below zero, if such a temperature can be imagined. But at the approach of a cold winter the game that this bird lives on moves south and the owl follows. After once headed this way the bird keeps feeding and flying on simply by habit, even after it has reached a land where game is plentiful. It is a very rare bird."

TOLD TO USE CUTICURA

After Specialist Failed to Cure Her Intense Itching Eczema — Had Been Tortured and Disfigured but Soon Cured of Dreadful Humor.

"I contracted eczema and suffered intensely for about ten months. At times I thought I would scratch myself to pieces. My face and arms were covered with large red patches, so that I was ashamed to go out. I was advised to go to a doctor who was a specialist in skin diseases, but I received very little relief. I tried every known remedy, with the same results. I thought I would never get better until a friend of mine told me to try the Cuticura Remedies. So I tried them, and after four or five applications of Cuticura Ointment I was relieved of my unbearable itching. I used two sets of the Cuticura Remedies, and I am completely cured. HOUSEBOATING IN CHINA.

Coolies Walked on the Banks of Grand Canal and Pulled Boat.

It was a delightful and healthy fortnight I spent on the Grand canal—one of China's wonders—says Frits V. Holm, M. R. A. S., in Putnam's. The spring air was perfect, and my daily walks on shore were full of new things to learn and wonder at.

We had made a contract with our "captain" to take us, with the greatest possible speed, to the city of Taokow, in Honan province—the former "Middle Flowery Kingdom"—and his six or seven coolies (camelmen, I termed them) certainly lost no time, for they pulled the boat, they themselves walking on the banks of the canal, some sixteen hours a day—a task I by no means envied them. At the city of Lintsingchow, in Shantung province, we turned into the Wei river, which has its sources in the mountains of the province of Shansi. The water now became clearer.

Leaving our boat at Taokow, we were able to make use of the Pekin syndicate's little mining railroad, which runs west for some ninety miles or so. I stopped over at Chiaotzo, where the not very prosperous coal shafts lie, and was very hospitably treated by the few foreigners there. From the terminal of the railroad and to the city of Honanfu I chartered two huge carts for my baggage, and we had quite an exciting time when crossing the enormous Yellow river. The mules (there were six of them) were very unwilling to jump aboard the large scow, and the carts were so heavy that some of the cases and boxes had to be unloaded. Meanwhile it appeared that the Viceroy Yuan Shih Kai (since fallen from his high estate) had telegraphed ahead to the officials en route to treat me with due consideration; and consequently the magistrate had seen to it that a scow was waiting for us when we arrived. It very often takes a couple of days for the poor Chinese traveler to get across, and I therefore took great pleasure in filling the boat with a lot of haggard human beings, who all seemed to be very grateful for the lift. The difficulty is that, while the government is supposed to run the ferry service on all rivers and canals free of charge, the boatman always expects a fee; when the poor traveler has no copper cash to spend in tips, the gallant sailors refuse to take him across, as long as there is any chance to work for travelers who are in a position to pay.

COSTLY PRIZE OFFERED FOR THE BEST GROWER OF CORN

W. K. Kellogg of Battle Creek, Mich., Gives a $1,000 Trophy to Be Competed for by the Farmers.

Battle Creek, Mich.—For the purpose of stimulating the interest of the farmers of the country in the improvement of the grade of corn and in securing a greater yield, W. K. Kellogg of this city has offered a gold and silver trophy to be competed for at the third annual national corn exposition to be held at Omaha, Neb., Dec. 6 to 18 of this year. The trophy will be known as the W. K. Kellogg National Corn Exposition trophy, will cost $1,000, and will become the personal property of any exhibitor winning it twice. The trophy will be in the shape of a massive vase, and will probably be designed and built by either Gorham or Tiffany.

Mr. Kellogg has just returned from Chicago where he held a conference with Professor P. G. Holden of the Iowa State Agricultural College at Ames, and Stanley Clague, head of a large Chicago advertising agency. Professor Holden is known as the foremost authority of the country on corn growing, and Mr. Kellogg, who is a large manufacturer of food products made from corn, is keenly interested in all movements tending to improve the quality of the cereal. This year he has donated $1,000 to be divided in several prizes among the corn growers of Iowa, and at Professor Holden's suggestion, he decided to offer the Kellogg trophy to be competed for by the corn growers of the nation.

"Corn is the greatest crop of the country," said Mr. Kellogg to-day, "and the bigger the yield of corn the greater the country's prosperity. Seed selection and improved methods of cultivation will not only greatly increase the yield per acre, but will also increase the protein in the corn and thus enhance its nutritious qualities. If the yield per acre, for instance, can be increased five bushels in the State of Nebraska alone, it will add $25,000,000 to the wealth of the farmers of the State. The National Corn Exposition is doing a great work in educating the farmers, and I am glad to help the work along."

One Thing Beyond Any Power.

Tip knows other places where traveling is of the agony brand. After waiting for nearly four hours in Shannonville, Canada, between Toronto and Montreal, for a "mixed"—17 freight cars and one coach—I asked an impatient clergyman if he had been able to learn when the train would arrive. He eyed me up and down with pity. "Sir," he said, "that is the only thing that the Almighty does not know."—New York Press.

Dressed as Scholars.

A Studied Explanation.

"Will you be able to explain your attitude on the tariff?"

"Yes," answered Senator Sorghum. "I'll have my explanation ready when the time comes. But I'll wait till my constituents are interested in other things and will carefully make it a little hard to understand."—Washington Star.

They can not set the world afire.

Reminiscent.

"How long will eggs keep, anyhow?" said the casual customer at the lunch counter.

Getting Back.

Due to Score Next Time.

"You refuse me, do you, proud girl?" he howled. "Well, you're not doing anything original! This is the third time I've been turned down!"

"So I'm the third sacker, am I?" merrily responded the girl, thrusting her tongue in her cheek in a well meant but only partially successful effort to look like Mr. Steinfeldt.

Her Strong Point.

The near-sighted dame was attending a play in which the part of the buxom domestic was taken by a stout young man.

"Well," she said, "that girl isn't much to look at in the face, but she's got magnificent arms."

Momentarily Puzzled.

"Where do you scratch your matches?" asked the visitor, looking around.

"Why," stammered the hostess, "my husband always—O, I understand. On the under side of the mantelpiece."—Chicago Tribune.

SOLID GOLD & SILVER AWARD
For the Best Ear of Corn
To be Known as the W. K. Kellogg National Corn Trophy
To be Awarded at the
National Corn Exposition, Omaha, December 6 to 18, 1909.

Over one hundred thousand million (100,000,000,000) ears of corn were grown in the United States last year. Over a billion dollars were paid for them. More than a million and a quarter extra dollars went into the pockets of the farmers for corn this year than they received for the previous year's crop.

The reason for this may be found in the fact that the people of the United States are beginning to learn how delicious corn is and to realize its full food value.

Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes has placed corn among the indispensable items of daily fare.

The makers, therefore, are interested in the development of the King of Cereals, and have decided to award a beautiful trophy for the man, woman or child who can produce the best ear of corn in two different seasons.

Professor Holden, of the Iowa State College, the greatest authority on corn in the world, will award the prize at the National Corn Exposition, to be held at Omaha, Neb., December 6th to 18th, 1909. Two simple rules will govern the plan, and they are:—that you send your best ear of corn to the National Corn Exposition, Omaha, Neb., before November 27, 1909; and that you are a member of the National Corn Association. Full particulars regarding which can be had by writing to National Corn Exposition, Omaha, Neb. Tie a tag securely to your specimen and word it, "For the Kellogg Trophy Contest," and write your name and address plainly. If yours is judged the best, you will get the trophy for 1910. If you succeed again next year or the year following, the trophy will become your property for all time. In other words, you must produce the best ear of corn two different years.

There will be no restrictions. Any man, woman or child belonging to the Association can enter. It will be open to every state in the Union. Professor Holden will judge the corn particularly on the basis of quality. The growing of more corn per acre is one object of the award, but the main purpose of the founder of the trophy is for

AFTER FOUR YEARS OF MISERY

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Baltimore, Md.—"For four years my life was a misery to me. I suffered from irregularities, terrible dragging sensations, extreme nervousness, and that all gone feeling in my stomach. I had given up hope of ever being well when I began to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Then I felt as though new life had been given me, and I am recommending it to all my friends."—Mrs. W. S. Ford, 1038 Lansdowne St., Baltimore, Md.

The most successful remedy in this country for the cure of all forms of female complaints is Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It has stood the test of years and to-day is more widely and successfully used than any other female remedy. It has cured thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, and nervous prostration, after all other means had failed.

If you are suffering from any of these ailments, don't give up hope until you have given Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial.

If you would like special advice write to Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., for it. She has guided thousands to health, free of charge.

CAN DETERMINE SEX.

Curious English Device Which Has Mystified the Scientists.

Recently in London there was submitted to public test a curious scientific instrument called a sexaphone—the invention of a working engineer named Williams—the object of which is to determine the sex of all animate and some inanimate objects, including human beings and eggs. The apparatus is of a most simple character and consists of a copper wire and a piece of magnetized steel, at the lower end of which is suspended a pith ball, says the Technical World. At the opposite end is a wooden handle inlet with copper, which is held in the center of the palm. The pith ball, when the instrument is held over the object to be operated on, will either gyrate or swing like a pendulum. If it gyrates the object is a male; if it swings, a la pendulum, the sex is feminine.

Some amusement was caused when the apparatus was held over the heads of several well known people in the audience, but it never once failed in revealing the sex—now swinging in circles when "covering" a gentleman and anon acting like a pendulum in the case of a lady. Several animals were successfully operated on. Once the instrument was held above a dog (concealed in a basket), the sex of which was known only to the owner. The pith ball swung in circle, at first slowly and afterward with some violence, thus showing that the animal belonged to the masculine gender. Still more interesting were the tests made with eggs, the fertility or non-fertility of which the inventor claimed he could determine. Five eggs were produced, and after covering them with the sexaphone the inventor declared that three were males and the other two "doubtful," the instrument, in the later cases, at first gyrating and then swinging in pendulum fashion.

This is another of those curious devices which have mystified the scientists. Various explanations have been given, but none of them seems quite satisfactory.

Great Engineering Work.

In the construction of the new Catskill aqueduct it has been planned to cross the water courses and rivers which intercept the route of the aqueduct by siphons rather than by bridges, or pipe lines laid in the bed of the rivers. One of these siphons will be carried beneath the Hudson river at Storm King, and the present indications are that it will have to lie at least 700 or 800 feet below the surface of the river. Another important siphon, not so deep, but of much greater length, will be constructed below Rondout creek. Because of the disturbed condition of the strata underlying the Rondout valley, the siphon will have to be carried down to depths of between 400 and 500 feet before a sufficiently solid rock is found for the construction of the tunnel. The total length of the siphon between the end shafts will be approximately four and a half miles, and it will have a diameter throughout of fourteen and one-half feet.

Early Showed Greatness.

Andrew Jackson was a marvel of precocity. He carried a flintlock musket, as a soldier of the revolutionary army, at the age of 14. At 23 he was appointed by Washington district attorney of Tennessee. HOME TESTING.

A Sure and Easy Test on Coffee.

To decide the all important question of coffee, whether or not it is really the hidden cause of physical ails and approaching fixed disease, one should make a test of 10 days by leaving off coffee entirely and using well-made Postum.

If relief follows you may know to a certainty that coffee has been your vicious enemy. Of course you can take it back to your heart again, if you like to keep sick.

A lady says: "I had suffered with stomach trouble, nervousness and terrible sick headaches ever since I was a little child, for my people were always great coffee drinkers and let us children have all we wanted. I got so I thought I could not live without coffee but I would not acknowledge that it caused my suffering.

"Then I read so many articles about Postum that I decided to give it a fair trial. I had not used it two weeks in place of coffee until I began to feel like a different person. The headaches and nervousness disappeared and whereas I used to be sick two or three days out of a week while drinking coffee I am now well and strong and sturdy seven days a week, thanks to Postum.

"I had been using Postum three months and had never been sick a day when I thought I would experiment and see if it really was coffee that caused the trouble, so I began to drink coffee again and inside of a week I had a sick spell. I was so ill I was soon convinced that coffee was the cause of all my misery and I went back to Postum, with the result that I was soon well and strong again and determined to stick to Postum and leave coffee alone in the future."

Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

The division of dead letters is one of the show places of the national capital and is visited annually by thousands of sightseers, says a writer in the National Magazine. There is much that appeals to human interest and emotion in the immense stacks of letters and parcels received at the rate of 40,000 a day, and containing articles of every description, some of them bearing addresses which cannot be deciphered, even by experts. In the 13,000,000 pieces of mail matter received by the division last year there were 6,000 books, 1,000 pairs of eyeglasses, 900 fountain pens, 800 razors, false teeth, marriage certificates, rings, shoes, snakes—in fact, everything from valuable diamonds to penny souvenirs. There was also more than $65,000 in actual money, and commercial paper, including checks, drafts, money orders, etc., representing a face value of $2,203,992.

Possibly when "Capt." Jacob Coxey led his famous "army" in its advance on Washington early in the 90's, he did not expect that some day he would be asking special privileges of that branch of the government he affected to despise, but time brings changes and while many of the hoboes who were forced to keep off the White House grass along with their leader are in their grave, others in jail and the rest scattered only the Lord knows where, Coxey himself is living like a prince, has made his pile and has no intention of leading another "army." He has been in Washington some time, where he is spending a lot of money every day, and making a great effort to induce a congress to protect his arsenic mines in Virginia, from which he derives a great income. He wants more, hence the descent on the capital.

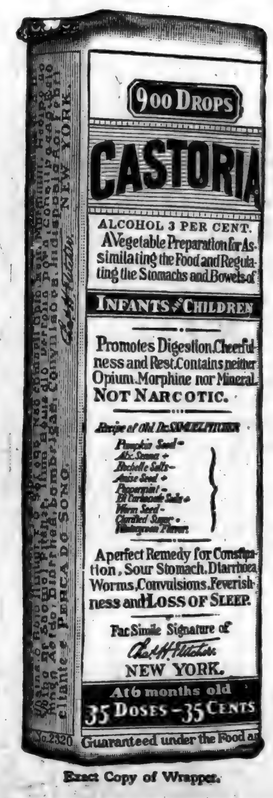
Save the Babies.

INFANT MORTALITY is something frightful. We can hardly realize that of all the children born in civilized countries, twentytwo per cent., or nearly one-quarter, die before they reach one year; thirtyseven per cent., or more than one-third, before they are five, and one-half before they are fifteen!

We do not hesitate to say that a timely use of Castoria would save a majority of these precious lives. Neither do we hesitate to say that many of these infantile deaths are occasioned by the use of narcotic preparations. Drops, tinctures and soothing syrups sold for children's complaints contain more or less opium, or morphine. They are, in considerable quantities, deadly poisons. In any quantity they stupefy, retard circulation and lead to congestions, sickness, death. Castoria operates exactly the reverse, but you must see that it bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher. Castoria causes the blood to circulate properly, opens the pores of the skin and allays fever.



Exact Copy of Wrapper.

Letters from Prominent Physicians addressed to Chas. H. Fletcher.

Dr. A. F. Peeler, of St. Louis, Mo., says: "I have prescribed your Castoria in many cases and have always found it an efficient and speedy remedy."

Dr. E. Down, of Philadelphia, Pa., says: "I have prescribed your Castoria in my practice for many years with great satisfaction to myself and benefit to my patients."

Dr. Edward Parrish, of Brooklyn, N. Y., says: "I have used your Castoria in my own household with good results, and have advised several patients to use it for its mild laxative effect and freedom from harm."

Dr. J. R. Elliott, of New York City, says: "Having during the past six years prescribed your Castoria for infantile stomach disorders, I most heartily commend its use. The formula contains nothing deleterious to the most delicate of children."

Dr. C. G. Sprague, of Omaha, Neb., says: "Your Castoria is an ideal medicine for children, and I frequently prescribe it. While I do not advocate the indiscriminate use of proprietary medicines, yet Castoria is an exception for conditions which arise in the care of children."

Dr. J. A. Parker, of Kansas City, Mo., says: "Your Castoria holds the esteem of the medical profession in a manner held by no other proprietary preparation. It is a sure and reliable medicine for infants and children. In fact, it is the universal household remedy for infantile ailments."

Dr. H. F. Merrill, of Augusta, Me., says: "Castoria is one of the very finest and most remarkable remedies for infants and children. In my opinion your Castoria has saved thousands from an early grave. I can furnish hundreds of testimonials from this locality as to its efficiency and merits."

Dr. Norman M. Geer, of Cleveland, Ohio, says: "During the last twelve years I have frequently recommended your Castoria as one of the best preparations of the kind, being safe in the hands of parents and very effective in relieving children's disorders, while the ease with which such a pleasant preparation can be administered is a great advantage."

Metal Has No Properties.

When 70 per cent of cerium is alloyed with 30 per cent of iron the metal thus produced possesses the remarkable property of giving off a shower of sparks when struck lightly by a steel wheel. This substance has been employed for making auto igniters for gas burners, miners' acetylene lamps and cigar lighters. Recently it has been proposed to utilize it for igniting motor headlights, and even as a substitute for electric ignition in the cylinders.

A fashion article on bridal veils relates that a recent bride wore her face covered on the way to the altar.

A Contagious Idea.

Imitation may be a nuisance rather than a form of flattery. A writer in the Outlook tells of an incident in a bank which is as amusing as it is probable. The teller was asked by a woman for a new envelope for her bank-book. It was passed out, and the lady behind, noting that her own envelope was a trifle dingy, also asked for a fresh one.

The third woman said, "Me, too," or words to that effect, and so it went down the line. When the teller's patience and his stock of envelopes threatened to give out, he determined to call a halt.

A fastidiously dressed lady appeared at the window, holding out a perfectly gloved hand.

"I should like one, too, please," said she.

"One what, madam?" asked the teller.

The lady flushed and began to look comical.

"Why," she stammered, "what the other ladies had."

Discordant Note.

"Mr. Meekun, don't you think a woman should receive a man's pay when she does a man's work?"

"Why—er—look at the other side of the question a moment, will you? Think how many men are doing women's work and not getting a cent for it!"

It is a mother's duty to keep constantly on hand some reliable remedy for use in case of sudden accident or mishap to the children. Hamlins Wizard Oil can be depended upon for just such emergencies.

The Point of View.

"This man is not insane," said the lawyer, "and never has been. To keep him in an asylum is a blow, sir, directed against human rights, an assault upon the sacred institution of liberty, an—"

"But did you not prove last week, when he was on trial for murder, that he had been from birth a raving maniac?" interposed the court.

The lawyer smiled in a superior way. "Surely," he said, "your honor would not have it believed that this court is on the intellectual plane of that jury."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Obituary

Lavina Ann Farrow was born October 13 1859, near Santa Fee, Miama County, Indiana and died at the home of her sister, Mrs. John Miller, at Newville, July 17 1909. Age 49 yrs. 9 mo. and 4 days. At 24 years of age she became a christian and united with the Decipie church and she continued to live and died in the christian faith. Her last rational words were, "He reaps a swath, he chasteneth us to make us pure and takes his loved ones home." She leaves an only sister to mourn the loss of one who was her companion and best friend through life, no sweeter sisterly ties ever existed. But now one has passed through the valley and the shadow of death and the other is left weeping at the tomb. Besides the sister she leaves one foster brother and family whose home is at Woodland, Ill., one niece, Mrs. E. E. McDonald, four nephews, two great nephews and a host of relatives and friends who will lovingly remember the kind deeds did by her loving hands. Of her it may be said, none knew her but to love her, but the reaper came. The funeral was held Monday from the house, at Newville, conducted by Rev. Hibbs. Burial at Newville cemetery. Elza Kinsey of St. Joe, funeral director.

Supplement to the

St. Joe News

St. Joe, Ind. | Thursday, July 22, 1909 | Fred B. Leighty, Pub.

From Washington

The following is a letter from Clarence O. Walter who is now located at Cosmopolis, Wash.

Cosmopolis, Wash., July 11, 1909.

I first want to tell you about the country out here and make an apology for this letter as it may seem untrue to you but it is just as it appears to me.

There is really no industry here except that of lumbering, but when you come to think about it and then really see it, it is rather a large and interesting subject. Around Grays Harbor, where I have been for the last eight weeks, there are eight miles of saw mills on the water front beside all the mills back in the woods, and one of the mills that I know of is very large and cuts about 500,000 feet every working day in the year. Now there is perhaps 30 of these mills here in this place and you can bet they are putting out a lot of lumber. If you could see the lumber that is loaded here in just one day you would say I can't see what ever becomes of so much lumber.

I will not attempt to tell you about these mills for I could not, considering the size and the way the lumber is handled in them, but will say that it is worth one's time to stop and see one of these mills if they ever get a chance.

The country out here is in a state so wild that even an artist could not paint it, nor could the novelist describe it and make it understood to all. The country is very rough and hilly covered with a growth undreamed of to those not having seen it, the tall trees fir, spruce and hemlock reach up to a height in a few instances of 300 feet with a diameter at the base of from 12 to 16 feet.

Then comes the smaller trees which are all sizes and having such a foliage that it seems to make a complete cloud over one's head so dense that scarcely does ever the sun shine through enough to be noticed. Then the bushes and ferns on the ground as thick as it is possible for them to survive. The bushes are principally roses which seems to bloom the year round and berry bushes, mostly salmon berries, which are similar to the black berry at home, but are so much larger, for I have seen them an inch through and an inch and one half long, and you can bet that a person does not have to eat all day to get all they want of berries that size. Interspersed between these hills are small valleys through the center of which flows little streams, laden with trout and other small fish, flowing from a spring or farther up from the mountain's snow, so cool, so clear and so fresh that a queen would not condescend in the least were she to stoop and quench her thirst with their waters. Bear and deer are the only large wild animals here, and they are rather few being hunted so much, but once in a while you can see a hunter bringing in a trophy.

Well I must close hoping to hear from you soon.

In this issue will be found the advertisement of Sol Barney's store. Special low prices are quoted on some articles but when you enter their store you will see what they mean. As good a work shoe as man ever bought is selling for less than $1.50, and ladies and childrens shoes are cut way down. It will pay our readers to look over the ads as they mean money to you. It will pay you to make Barney's store a visit.

The Fourth Quarterly Conference of the St. Joe Circuit M. P. church was held at Concord, last Saturday. A large number was present. Mr. S. L. Widney was elected delegate to the annual conference which meets in Indianapolis, August 18. Mr. S. Barney was elected Alternate. The delegate was instructed by a unanimous vote to ask for the return of Rev. J. C. McCain as pastor for another year. His work this year has been highly satisfactory to each of the churches. The salary was increased $100 for another year.

We notice that the town of Grabill is talking strongly of incorporating, as it is necessary for the township in which they live to build two new school houses. The town scholars are compelled to go one and one half miles to school and there are no prospects of Grabill getting a house of their own, so they are talking strongly of incorporating and having school in rooms in town until a building can be constructed.

The B. & O. machinists, strike remains dormant. Neither the men nor the company have done anything toward affecting a settlement since the strike began and each side seems as determined as ever. What is to the general public noted with satisfaction is the prevailing peace. The strikers realize that to maintain the respect and approbation of the public they must not use violence in their attempt to win the fight. Fortunately the strikers and strikebreakers have not been thrown together to any great extent and therefore there has been little room for any kind of an outbreak.

It is now certain that the Baltimore & Ohio, in the fiscal year ended on June 30 last will show approximately 6.90 per cent earned on its common stock, or sufficient to pay the full 6 per cent on the common with $1,353,000 to spare. This is almost sufficient to make good the deficit of $1,373,762 shown in the fiscal year 1908, caused by maintaining the full dividend rate on the common in a period when earnings were showing tremendous declines and when, in the face of considerable criticism, the directors were compelled to draw on surplus earnings for the above amount in order to maintain the full rate on the common stock.—Wall Street Journal.

Edward Payson Weston, aged 72 years who has just completed a walk across the continent from New Yorkto San Francisco, distance 4,600 miles, in the remarkably short time of 106 days, a feat that has never before been accomplished either by young or old says laughingly: "I am still a young old man and I have shown the pedestrian youngsters of 55 and 60 years that my heyday is not on the wane. There have been plenty of obstacles to overcome, but with a path to tread and a will behind me, nothing is insurmountable." The burning sun on the hot sands of the western desert had no terror for him. He has accomplished what he set out to do. So can we. Let us fix a certain goal and then make a tremendous effort to reach that goal in spite of all the obstacles that we may have to overcome. Like Weston we only need a path to follow and a will power to keep us on that path.

Wound up in Mill Belt

Guss Cupp of Spencerville was seriously injured Tuesday, while at work in the Steward saw mill. It was nearing the noon hour and Mr. Cupp was in the act of throwing a belt off the pulley, when his sleeve caught and pulled him into the belt, whirling him over the wheel, seven or eight times before he was loosened. His shirt, overalls and one sock was torn from his body thus letting him free. When he was picked up the men thought him to be dead but in a few minutes he gained consciousness and was removed to his home. Dr. Shook was called immediately and a thorough examination found one arm to be broken in three different places, besides many bad bruises on his face and body. It was hardly possible to determine whether internal injuries were received.

Thrown From Wheel

Mr. Alva Perry, rural carrier on Route No. 2 met with quite an accident Tuesday. He was making the trip on a bicycle and while going down the hill at Newville he ran into a little pile of sand throwing him in the solid road. When found he lay at one side of the road and his wheel at the other, and the mail scattered all over the road. He was brought home at once and Mr. B. F. Walter, who is his deputy took charge of the mail and made the balance of the trip.

Town Dads Meet

Monday night was the regular meeting of the town Council, and all members were present. After the reading of the minutes of the previous meeting the general order of business was taken up and disposed of as follows:

Bills allowed to Sol Barney for cement and tile, $9.95; to W. L. Hallabaugh, road tax receipt $1.97. Next was the presenting of a petition that street lamps be bought for the town, but the matter was laid over until another meeting. The question of more hitching racks was discussed and as a result the Marshall was given orders to put in a lot more hitching places to accomodate the increasing crowds that come to our town Saturday nights. The matter of bad sidewalks was also brought up and the Clerk was ordered to notify all property owners with bad walks that unless immediate repairs were made the town would no longer be liable for any damage that might come from said walks. Other matters for the best of the town was talked of after which adjournment was taken for two weeks.

THE POPULAR PULPIT

SONG-LIFE OF THE SOUL.

By Rev. F. T. Benson.

The Lord is my strength and my shield; my heart trusted in Him, and I am helped; therefore, my heart greatly rejoiceth; and with my song will I praise Him.—Psalms 28:7.

The song-life is the highest and best life of the soul. It is the joy-life, the peace-life.

The soul may live another life than the song-life. There may be righteousness and truth, and even love, where there is no song. Righteousness may be found in company with fear, and truth with prejudice, and love with anxious, fretting care. All these are fatal to the song-life, for the song-life must be care-free.

The song-life is the life-beautiful. A man may live in a hovel, beset with fear, and stained with the defilement of mother earth, with no comforts, and with nothing to feed his yearning for the lovely and the good. But he cannot live the life-beautiful in such an atmosphere.

Give such a man a pure heart, lead him into the halls of culture, let him drink from the fountains of wisdom, bring him into the association of the noble and the good. Put such a soul into the congenial surroundings of cleanliness and beauty, and, lo! the beautiful spirit, domiciled in the home of beauty, will begin to live the life-beautiful. There is a great difference between the life of ignorance and boorishness and that of culture and grace. While, however, the external surroundings have an unmistakable effect on the soul-life to destroy its beauty, it is possible to live the life-beautiful without the external environment which seems appropriate to the housing of a beautiful spirit. For after all, the beautiful life is the life of a beautiful spirit. Boors may be found in the luxurious refinements of palaces, and divine beauty is often found in the homes of the humble poor.

But wherever found there is an infinite difference between the beautiful life and the life devoid of beauty, a difference as wide as that between a clod of earth and a golden sunbeam. It is the song of life that makes it beautiful. And the life differs from other spiritual states as the sunset differs from the dull gray mist that slumbers upon the summer sea.

A practical question that presses at this point is, How can we come into this song life? It must first be said that it is a life that is born of perfect harmony of the soul with God. The song must first be in the heart before it can be formed upon the lips. Indeed, it may never reach the lips at all, and yet fill the soul with mysterious and exquisite music.

The birth of the song life is from above. It is the life that Jesus Christ came to earth to give to men. The organ of spiritual harmony, the soul of man, was out of harmony with God. When the instrument is out of harmony the divinest master can get no music out of it. The soul was put out of harmony in Eden by the introduction of sin into it. The discord is borne upon the same ether, and produces the same physical phenomena as the most perfect tone. The trouble, therefore, is not with the ether, but with the instrument. So with the soul. The same spiritual atmosphere has always surrounded it, and there was the possibility of the most refreshing harmony, but the soul was out of tune with God. In Jesus Christ the soul was born into a new life. It was set to the tune of Divine harmonies. Now as the Master directs the song in the realm of love's harmonies, no nightingale sings so sweetly and gloriously as does the new nature of redeemed manhood.

The song-life is beautiful and strong because it has cast its cares on God. Israel hung her harps on the willows of Babylon, and could not sing, because sin had separated between her and God. Since she would not have God's leadership, she must bear her own burdens. It must not be so with us. The song says of our cares, "I have left them all with Jesus, long ago." Such a soul is "stayed with the flagons, and comforted with the apples" of God's grace. In a condition like whichever way the wind blo God is on His throne and all is well. Joy is there because God has hold of us, and He will not let us go. We can trust God, and in that trust we steal into His bosom and find our rest.

If trouble comes to such a life, it is not disturbed. The notes may be a little subdued. They may lack the thrill of ecstasy, but in subdued and minor strain they will fit into life's song with a relieving and heightening harmony—coming as they do after the exhilaration of long continued major strains. The lullabies that calm the infant to sweet slumber are mostly soft and low. Not infrequently life's greatest need is the healing of subdued and quiet tones, under whose influences the torn spirit looks up and touches the founts of Gilead's balm.

The song-life is not attained without effort. The sweetest singer must keep in practice, or he will lose his tone. We must keep on living the song-life, or after a while we will lose our song. The discouragements are so constant and persistent to the living of such a life. It is so much easier to sing the mournful plaint of the broken-hearted. We must resolutely refuse to yield to this. Keep on singing in the night as in the day. The joy-tides must not go out to sea. There are never so many sorrows in life, but there are still abounding joys. As we count our many blessings, we can well afford to cast our cares away, and to sing the song of hope in the shadows of the darkest night. The bounding waves of time are driving our barks to the golden strand of the "land of joy and song." In a little while we shall stand in the heavenly choir, and join the symphonies of perfect peace.

The song-life of the soul is very attractive to the old world through which we are passing. There is here so much grief, so much sin, so much heart-ache, so much agony, that we need the voice of the singer to keep our courage up. Give God your sorrows, and let the world have your song.

THE COMPASSION OF JESUS.

By Rev. Jason Noble Pierce.

Text.—"And when the Lord saw her He had compassion on her and said unto her, Weep not."—Luke 7:13.

I have taken as my subject this morning one of the most beautiful and comforting themes in the Bible. Briefly but clearly the author of our Gospel presents the scene: "Behold, there was a dead man carried out, the only son of his mother, and she was a widow; and much people of the city was with her."

Of all the helpless ones in Isreal, she was most helpless. And that was the very hour the mightiest one in all Israel drew nigh to the city. Weakness and strength; human need and Divine help; these are never far separated. But will the Divine grace become operative? Will the Saviour act? "When the Lord saw her He had compassion on her and said unto her, Weep not." And He came and touched the bier; and they that bear him stood still. And he said, Young man, I say to thee, arise. And he that was dead sat up and began to speak. And He delivered him unto his mother." Hallelujah! What a Saviour!

Oh, the mighty love of Jesus! It met that dear mother at the gate of Nain and did for her what none in all the city could do, restore to her her son. Can any of you imagine the wonder and joy unspeakable that came to her when Jesus delivered him to her? One of the striking charateristics of the compassion of Jesus is its inclusiveness. It makes no bounds. It goes out to the multitude and to the individual, to the stranger as freely as to the friend, to the Jew and to the Gentile. His heart went out for the city and He wept over it and His heart went out to the lone woman in need of a Saviour. The one essential was that there exist a grief, a burden, a sorrow, and immediately His help was forthcoming. Where the sick were gathered by their friends, or among the porches by the pool where the impotent lay, there was Jesus to bless. No custom delayed Him, no fear for life nor weariness of the flesh restrained Him, but freely He ministered unto all who called upon Him.

Nor has He overlooked one. No one is beyond the reach of His love. It may have been long ago that you turned aside from Him and you may feel that you are indeed a stranger with no claim upon Him. But it is not so. His compassion is without bound.

SERMONETTES.

The noblest work often lies nearest.

Only a putty life is afraid of being worn out.

The battle without goes as goes the battle within.

Duty has a stern face only when viewed askance.

Gifts to God can never make up for thefts from men.

He who honestly seeks to save another finds himself.

He never has a message who does not know how to listen.

The wastes of love bring greater riches than the wisdom of greed.

Lying lips are none the better for working in a prayer meeting.

Where everyone has an ax to grind there will be little hewing to the line.

You cannot become one of the tools of the Infinite if you flee from His anvil.

DON'TS FOR CHURCHMEN.

Don't fail to learn that the lowliest duties have place for the loftiest virtues.

Don't imagine that you are a saint because it makes you sad to see a child happy.

Don't expect to be successful if you try to beat out the chaff by thrashing the saints.

Don't fail to learn that the only powers that know enjoyment are those that find employment.

Don't forget that the road on which you can do most good is the straightest one to heaven.

Don't stand still waiting for great things to do and then wonder why your life remains so small.

Don't forget that it is better to be wrecked through over-zeal than to rot from over-caution.

Don't cover your neighbor with lampblack and expect it to react with whitewash on yourself.

From Missouri.

The following amusing incident occurred some years ago in northwestern Missouri.

A gentleman went to a small primitive village for the purpose of inspecting some land which he had owned for a number of years but had never seen. Reaching the place one evening he secured lodging in a small house.

The next morning he went to the back of the house, where, on a bench, was a tin washbasin and near at hand a barrel of water and a dipper. After washing his hands and face he took from his pocket a toothbrush and, pouring some water on it from the dipper, proceeded to brush his teeth.

A small boy of the house watched him for a few moments in unfeigned astonishment, then yelled: "Oh, mom, come quick and see the fellow sharpening his teeth!"—Lippincott's.

Making the Trumps.

"Life," said the unsuspecting young man, "is what we make it."

"Then," rejoined the coy maid, "suppose you make it diamonds and I'll make it hearts."

Different Viewpoints.

Mabel—There goes that young doctor in his automobile. Isn't he just too killing for anything?

Helen—Oh, I don't know. They say he hasn't any practice to speak of.

Information Wanted.

Boody—I'd have you to know, sir, that I'm not the idiot you think I am.

Knox—Oh, I beg pardon. Which idiot are you?

Applied to the Motor.

Teacher—What do you mean by the "quick and the dead"?

Boy—Well, the quick get out of the way of the motor cars and the dead don't.—Lippincott's.

The Trouble.

Friend—Don't worry because your sweetheart has turned you down since you lost your money. There are as good fish in the sea as ever were caught.

Jilted One—Yes, but I lost my bait.—Harper's Bazaar.

"I see by this paper," said Mrs. Griggs, "that growing children require occasional change."

"Well, ours certainly get their share," replied Griggs. "They brace me three or four times a day for nickels and dimes."

Shut Her Off.

"Which would you rather see," began Mrs. Wiggins, "a woman——"

"As a matter of fact," interrupted Wiggins, without looking up from his paper, "I'd rather see a woman in the kitchen than on the lecture platform."

Told the Truth.

Knox—There goes young De Short in Jay Green's automobile.

Crox—Why, I thought De Short owned it? He told me not an hour ago that he had put all his money into it.

Knox—Well, he probably told the truth. He bought 50 cents' worth of gasoline before he started.

Keeps Busy.

Blox—Bixby claims that he always tells the truth.

Knox—Yes; he seems to have a mania for stirring up trouble.

One of the Symptoms.

"But," queried the sweet girl graduate, "how can I tell when I am in love?"

"Oh," replied the fair widow, "when you think you think as much of a young man as you think of yourself—that is love."

Before and After.

"When you were courting me," said his wife, "you declared there wasn't another woman in the world like me."

"Yes," replied her husband, "and I'm glad of it—for the sake of other men."

Happy Thought.

Miss Askitt—When one sends a parcel by express why do they always ask the name and address of the sender?

Percy Pinkleigh — Why — er — so they'll know where to weturn it in case it is—er—lost or stolen, doncher know.

The Girl at the Game.

George—Why don't you watch the game, Evelyn?

Evelyn—What's the use? You told me the umpire man was paid to watch it. Let him look after it. I'm sure I don't want the job.

Diplomacy.

"Am I the only girl you ever made love to?"

THE DULL ROUTINE.

Our Settled Indifference Refuses to Be Aroused for Long.

We live in a world that is practically a closed book; closed because we are careless and indifferent, and do not take the trouble to open it. All around us are the phenomena that have been inviting our attention from early childhood, anad we have been learning but slowly. We have accustomed ourselves to the dull routine of everyday life, and the questions of social enjoyment, and the taking thought of what we shall eat and wherewithal we shall be clothed, occupy practically all of our mental equipment.

The fact that the sun rises and sets, that the moon passes through varying changes and phases, that the stars "come nightly to the sky," that occasionally we have rain, or frost, or fine weather, that the winter's snows melt and are succeeded by the wondrous awakening of nature from her lethargy, that day and night succeed each other, and that we simply grow older year by year, until we pass away, are only incidents that come "all in a day's work." Such is the dull, commonplace routine of ordinary life. Had there never been any moon, and it was announced that at a certain time such a body would appear, the whole world would be intensely interested, and nobody would think of going to bed when such a wonderful thing was to appear in the night sky. And yet, after a few nights' observation, the novelty would wear off, the world would yawn and seek its bed.

A few years ago the wonderful discovery of the X-rays startled the world. The newspapers and magazines were full of it, everybody was talking about it, it was the one topic of interest throughout the civilized world, and then after a little while the world wearied of its new toy and sought excitement and satisfaction of its curiosity elsewhere. Nowadays we hear little of this wonderful discovery; the world regards the X-rays as something the scientists have accomplished in a spectacular way, but does not attempt to follow further history of this remarkable discovery. Of all the countless millions who ride in an electric car, or read by the use of electric light, how many have even the slightest conception of the means by which these things are made possible? For the most part, we live a hand-to-mouth existence, think we are eminently practical in our theories of life, and do not bother as to the causes, provided we get the results.

WHAT BANKS FEAR MOST.

Cunning and Daring Ways of Gaining Entrance to Strong Rooms.

What banks fear is not so much a burglar's gaining access to their premises by forcing doors, but by tunneling and other equally cunning and daring methods, the Strand says. A few years ago a cashier in one of the national banks of the United States, in New Mexico, was busy at work one evening in the office when his quick ear detected some curious sounds. They seemed to proceed from a subterranean region; and he was not long in concluding that robbers must be tunneling from an adjoining building to the vault in the bank.

Guards were immediately posted in and around the building. Soon they observedthe masonry of the bank to be giving way. Meantime the robbers appeared to be hard at work and quite unaware that they were being watched. At 1 in the morning a Mexican volunteered to descend into the bank cellar so as to discover the actual situation. Scarcely had he gone a few paces down the stairs than he met some one coming up. The Mexican fired without saying a word and shot the man dead. It was observed that he was one of the masons who had built the bank and therefore was acquainted with its vulnerable points. The report of firearms alarmed his accomplices, for they fled, and escaped. The tunnel gave evidence of long and patient work on the part of the would-be thieves. It was sixty feet in length, constructed on scientific principles, contained provisions, water and a full outfit of mining tools, and must have been three months in operation. The robbery appeared to be planned for the time of the month when the bank received large remittances of currency and coin.

The Laborer and His Hire.

At a recent conference in New York of foreign missions boards, reference was made to the increased cost of living of missionaries home on leave, which made it harder for them to get along than if they stayed in their foreign field of labor.

"Why," said the speaker, "a missionary must travel decently, and that reminds me of a story of Mr. Spurgeon and a fellow clergyman. The two were just starting off on a railway journey, and Mr. Spurgeon's friend showed him a second-class ticket.

"'See,' said he, 'what good care I take of the Lord's money.'

"'See,' said Mr. Spurgeon, bringing out a first-class ticket, 'what good care I take of the Lord's servant.'"

The Poor Widower.

A young woman in New York eloped with a gentleman and was greatly surprised to find that she had become the stepmother of nine children by that act. Therefore, she deserted her new husband. Is there no romance possible for a widower with children?

"Put That Right Back Where You Found It," is the slogan, or war cry, or whatever you may call it, on which boys are raised from two years to sixteen.

HERE'S A WAY TO SAVE DOCTOR BILLS.

Physicians Give Free Advice by Which Parents May Profit.

It's a matter of general interest just now how one's physical condition can be got into shape to best receive the benefits of the summer season. Especially is this true of the children. They have become run down by a winter of unnatural manner of living because of ill-considered food and much time spent indoors. Spring comes with its sunshine, its fresh vegetables and all else invigorating, but the children are in no condition to receive nature's remedies.

Many parents call in the family physician. Many other parents take advantage of what the physician told them when he was first called in consultation. All good family physicians say: "Give the children Castoria." Healthy parents know this remedy of old, for they took it themselves as children. It was more than thirty years ago that Castoria made a place for itself in the household. It bore the signature of Charles H. Fletcher then, as it does to-day. The signature is its guarantee, which is accepted in thousands of homes where there are children.

Much is printed nowaday's about big families. Dr. William J. McCrann, of Omaha, Neb., is the father of one of these much-read-about families. Here is what he says:

"As the father of thirteen children I certainly know something about your great medicine, and aside from my own family experience I have, in my years of practice, found Castoria a popular and efficient remedy in almost every home."

Charles H. Fletcher has received hundreds of letters from prominent physicians who have the same esteem for Castoria that Dr. McCrann has. Not only do these physicians say they use Castoria in their own families, but they prescribe it for their patients. First of all it is a vegetable preparation which assimilates the food and regulates the stomach and bowels. After eating comes sleeping, and Castoria looks out for that, too. It allays feverishness and prevents loss of sleep, and this absolutely without the use of opium, morphine or other baneful narcotic.

Medical journals are reluctant to discuss proprietary medicines. Hall's Journal of Health, however, says: "Our duty is to expose danger and record the means for advancing health. The day for poisoning innocent children through greed or ignorance ought to end. To our knowledge Castoria is a remedy which produces composure and health by regulating the system, not by stupefying it, and our readers are entitled to the information."

Exceptions.

"You don't have to be enthusiastic to succeed in some things," said the boarding house philosopher; "I once saw a man achieve a speed of a mile a minute sliding down a mountain side, without the slightest effort on his part and without having had any ambition to do it."

For Benefit of Women who Suffer from Female Ills

Minneapolis, Minn.—"I was a great sufferer from female troubles which caused a weakness and broken down condition of the system. I read so much of what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had done for other suffering women I felt sure it would help me, and I must say it did help me wonderfully. My pains all left me, I grew stronger, and within three months I was a perfectly well woman.

"I want this letter made public to show the benefit women may derive from Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. JOHN G. MOLDAN, 2115 Second St., North, Minneapolis, Minn.

Thousands of unsolicited and genuine testimonials like the above prove the efficiency of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which is made exclusively from roots and herbs.

Women who suffer from those distressing ills peculiar to their sex should not lose sight of these facts or doubt the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health.

If you want special advice write to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. She will treat your letter as strictly confidential. For 20 years she has been helping sick women in this way, free of charge. Don't hesitate—write at once.

In the Spring.

It was housecleaning time, and Mr. Stubb was removing the dusty pictures from the walls. The frames slipped, the stepladder creaked ominously, and the perspiration rolled from Mr. Stubb's brow. In the humor to bite a nail in half, he turned and discovered Mrs. Stubb laughing.

"That's it!" he roared, as the stepladder swayed. "Laugh and show your gold teeth."

And still she laughed.

"Do you think there is anything funny in my moving these pictures?" he spluttered, in fiery tones.

"No, indeed, John," said Mrs. Stubb, soothingly, "but you know you look so funny, it looks like a moving picture show."

Then Mr. Stubb swallowed a pint of dust and simply fumed.

It is estimated that the earthquake's speed is from 470 to 530 feet per second.

SKIN ERUPTION CURED.

Was So Sore, Irritating and Painful that Little Sufferer Could Not Sleep—Scratched Constantly—Cuticura's Efficacy Proven.

"When about two and a half years old my daughter broke out on her hips and the upper parts of her legs with a very irritating and painful eruption. It began in October; the first I noticed was a little red surface and a constant desire on her part to scratch her limbs. She could not sleep and the eruptions got sore, and yellow water came out of them. I had two doctors treat her, but she grew worse under their treatment. Then I bought the Cuticura Remedies and only used them two weeks when she was entirely well. This was in February. She has never had another rough place on her skin, and she is now fourteen years old. Mrs. R. R. Whitaker, Winchester, Tenn., Sept. 22, 1908."

Jacob Kissed Her Tears Away.

It's a pity a boy can't kiss away his sweetheart's tears without a big, unsympathetic policeman taking both to the children's court, the New York Evening Telegram says.

Any fellow would have acted just as Jacob Kinsler did, especially if he was as fond of his sweetheart as Jacob is of Susie Stahl. Jacob is a manly little chap of 15, and Susie, two years his junior, is one of the prettiest little girls on the East Side.

"We wasn't regular kissing," explained Jacob. "I'll tell you how it was. A boy nearly twice as big as I am came along and slapped Susie and she began to cry."

"Why didn't you tackle him?" asked the court.

"He was too big for me to lick, and I let him go. But I did the next best thing. Susie was crying somepin fierce, and I just grabbed her and was kissing away her tears when the cop came along and said I was violating the law. I didn't know what he meant, and as Susie kept on crying I kept on kissing. Then the cop stopped us."

"You and Susie may go now," said the court to Jacob. "The next time she cries give her your handkerchief—when you see a cop coming."

SURPRISED HIM.

Doctor's Test of Food.

A doctor in Kansas experimented with his boy in a test of food and gives the particulars. He says:

"I naturally watch the effect of different foods on patients. My own little son, a lad of four, had been ill with pneumonia and during his convalescence did not seem to care for any kind of food.

"I knew something of Grape-Nuts and its rather fascinating flavour and particularly of its nourishing and nerve-building powers, so I started the boy on Grape-Nuts and found from the first dish that he liked it.

"His mother gave it to him steadily and he began to improve at once. In less than a month he had gained about eight pounds and soon became so well and strong we had no further anxiety about him.

"An old patient of mine, 73 years old, came down with serious stomach trouble and before I was called had got so weak he could eat almost nothing, and was in a serious condition. He had tried almost every kind of food for the sick without avail.

"I immediately put him on Grape-Nuts with good, rich milk and just a little pinch of sugar. He exclaimed when I came next day, 'Why, doctor, I never ate anything so good or that made me feel so much stronger.'

"I am pleased to say that he got well on Grape-Nuts, but he had to stick to it for two or three weeks, then he began to branch out a little with rice or an egg or two. He got entirely well in spite of his almost hopeless condition. He gained 23 pounds in two months, which at his age is remarkable.

"I could quote a list of cases where Grape-Nuts has worked wonders."

"There's a Reason." Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

TRUMPET CALLS.

Ram's Horn Sounds a Warning Note to the Unredeemed.

Manhood deserving of the name can never be attained by the man who will not sign his own declaration of independence and fight his own revolutionary war.

The man who talks the loudest about a boy being lazy is the one who tries to make him do a man's work with a dull hoe.

As long as men have greed, gain by any means will be their creed.

If every man lived in the right way no boy could live in the wrong way.

In desiring his neighbor's possessions the covetous man loses his own.

When people once find out that it is blessed to give they never want to quit.

One reason why some men have so much bad luck is because they do so much falling down on the same banana skin.

EARLY DOUBLE WEDDING.

Double weddings are more common nowadays than they were in old times. Brothers and sisters find an added sentiment in sharing a wedding day; but in the days of our great-grandparents their nine, ten or a dozen children expected an undivided wedding apiece, with no other couple, no matter how fraternally related to share the honors of the occasion.

Century old tradition, however, preserves the story of the double wedding of the twin daughters of the Widow Lee of Old Norley—a sharp, bustling, calculating woman, with a decided "nigh streak."

She had consented readily to the betrothal of the elder twin, Patty, to a prosperous young farmer, but refused to allow the younger, Polly, to accept the suit of the less fortunate youth of her choice, who was then only the mate of a little trading schooner. Polly submissively accepted her mother's decision and devoted herself to helping forward the preparations for her sister's marriage.

Patty could not endure the sight of her sister's unhappiness and devised an ingenious plot, taking the two lovers into her confidence, but not her sister. She became discontented and exacting; she must have yet more fine linen, yet another gown of this or that new stuff. When her mother demurred, she urged the expectations of her lover's relatives. The widow groaned and grumbled, but complied with the increased demands.

Then, on the very eve of the wedding Patty divulged her scheme, pressed Polly to join her appeal, and urged upon the astonished mother to allow them both to be married upon the morrow. Both lovers, she represented, were eager to have it so; the trousseau should be divided—and there would be Polly married with due ceremony and provision, and not an extra cent of expense. It would be positively the last wedding in the family.

The combination of sentiment and economy carried the day; and the double wedding, the first in the history of the town, triumphantly took place.—Youth's Companion.

No Money to Burn.

"The meanest man we ever had in our town was Jake Bond," said Mr. Wilson, with an air of finality. "Yes, sir, he was the meanest. Ever hear what he used to do with the fire his last days, when he was so riddled with rheumatics he couldn't get out?"

"No," said the new carpenter, "I haven't heard that yet."

"Time you did," said Mr. Wilson, "an' I'll tell ye. He was so full o' rheumatics that the doctor allowed the only way he could get rid of any of his pain was to sit right in front o' the fire, close to, and see if the heat wouldn't try some o' the pain out o' his bones.

"Well, sir, he couldn't move round, so the woman that took care o' him would put his chair close to the fire, and there he'd sit. An' by his side he kep' a mop an' pail o' water. An' when he saw the fire getting a mite beyond the p'int where he felt 'twas needed, an' saw a real lively flame busting up, he'd out with that mop from the pail, and souse it right on to the stick o' wood that was too forthputting.

"I've sat there side o' him and seen him do it.

"Yes, sir, here in Cedarville we considered him the cap-sheaf for nigh-ness; we cert'nly did."

White House Gets Fillmore China.

Interesting pieces of china, once owned by President Fillmore, were placed in the White House cabinets the other day. They were obtained through the efforts of Mrs. Abby G. Baker, who has charge of the White House collection, under the direction of Mrs. Taft. She learned that much of the Fillmore china could be found in Buffalo, the former President's old home. There she found that two sisters, Mrs. B. Terry and Miss Cornelia Burtis, had bought the old Fillmore mansion with almost all the furniture and china. They were delighted to add something to the White House collection and gave an old Staffordshire platter, a willow pattern plate and other dishes. From other persons in Buffalo it is expected to get more interesting articles owned by Fillmore.

Amusing the Baby.

A simple device for keeping baby amused and happy is to fasten at intervals upon a broad bright ribbon the little toys of which he is most fond, suspending the ribbon above the bed upon which he lies, within reach of his little hands, by securing one end to the head of the bed and the other to the foot. He will then entertain himself by the hour pushing the toys back and forth and watching them swing above him.—Harper's Bazar.

Afterward.

Mr. Gayman was limping into the clubroom with one eye in deep mourning, patches of court plaster on his face, his nose skinned, a small part of his left ear gone, and his right arm in a sling.

"Great Peter!" exclaimed Oldboy. "What's the matter, Gayman? Have you been getting in the way of a bomb?"

"No," answered Mr. Gayman; "joy riding."

Testing the Idea.

"Johnny, you bad boy, what have you been doing with this thermometer?"

"It's been in the ice box, maw. You said I only imagined I was sufferin' with the heat 'cause the thermometer was standin' at 85. I wanted to see if it would make any difference when I run it down to 45. It don't."

Intellect Ruled by Superstition.

A man more absolutely governed by pure reason than Lord Macaulay could not well be found, but in his diary he refers to an after-dinner talk about the feeling which Johnson had—of thinking one's self bound to touch a particular rail or post and to tread in the middle of a paving stone, and he adds: "I certainly have this very strongly."

The tariff situation presents one of most interesting phraees of our national politics which has ever been witnessed. A republican president, with the backing of a republican House of Representatives, is making a desperate fight to induce a republican senate to give the country a revision of the tariff which he believes to be in conformity with the pledges of his party platform. A republican House, composed of many "stand-patters," to whom the very term "downward revision" is obnoxious and headed by a Speaker famous for his high tariff proclivities, is preparing to stand by the president to the last, not because he sympatizes with him in his aims but because he fears that he has accurately judged public opinion and that it will fare ill with any republican member of the House who opposes him. Meanwhile, the Republican Senate is breathing anethemas, swearing in the privacy of his cloak-room and committee-room that it has elected a "free-trader in disguise" and deploring the day that made Theodore Roosevelt head of the party and made possible his succession by William Howard Taft.

There is a good deal of curiosity and not a little misinformation regarding the aeroplane trials which the Wright brothers are conducting at Fort Meyer, Virginia, preparatory to selling their machine to the government. Congress gave the U. S. Army Signal Corps an appropriation with which to purchase an aeroplane for experimental purposes. Bids were called for and the Wrights and a man by the name of Herring submitted propositions. The Wright brothers are the only men who have brought a machine to Washington, although Herring promised to do so. Under the terms the Wrights must fly a measured distance of not less than 40 miles and at a speed of not less than forty miles an hour in order to effect a sale. They have suffered a number of mishaps but have finally, in their test trips, made a successful flight of an estimated distance of fifty miles at an estimated speed of forty miles an hour. They have also remained in the air for one hour, 22 minutes and forty-four seconds, making a perfectly satisfactory and graceful landing. The fact that for sometime they declined to make a fight when there was any wind has led some people to conclude that aeroplanes were useless in the wind. This is not strictly true. It is a fact that to start on a flight with a wind other than straight before or behind the aeroplane is dangerous. In actual practice where an aeroplaue was used for a serious purpose as in warfare, it would be necessary to have a starting apparatus which could be turned so that from whatever direction the wind was coming the start could be made in the opposite direction. It is also true that guiding an aeroplane is somewhat more difficult than riding a bicycle, and the Wrights have been experimenting with a new machine with the peculiarities of which they are not familiar. They have consistently refused to make any risk experiments but have proceeded with great caution. Now that a successful trial flight has been made they will undertake the tests for the government under somewhat harder conditions than have attended the tuning up trials.

Pain

Nearly all woman suffer some pain at times, due to the ailments peculiar to their sex. If your trouble is yet in a mild form, take Cardui to prevent it becoming more serious. If you have suffered long years, get Cardui at once. Use persistently and it will help you.

Take CARDUI

Mrs. L. Eells, of New Hartford, Ia., was afflicted for 24 years. She writes: "For the past 24 years I have been afflicted with womb trouble, causing extreme nervousness, pain in right side and back — altogether making life a burden. I tried doctors and various other remedies without relief. Finally I began using Wine of Cardui. Now I am entirely cured. I cheerfully advise all women similarly afflicted to try Cardui." Sold everywhere.

The Country Editor.

How does the small town editor make the newspaper he does, is a question that has been often asked and never answered in but one way, says the Geauga (O.) Record.

By hard work. He is his own editor, reporter, business manager, foreman, mailing clerk and frequently compositor. Alone, or with an assistant, he turns out every week a paper which, while perhaps not brilliant, still contains all the general news of the day, and all the news of the locality.

The paper has an influence far greater in proportion to its circulation than any of the great metropolitan dailies, and it has done more to educate and reform the people than the churches and public schools

The overworked country editor is not properly appreciated, for he does more for the community in which he lives than any other individual. He must have a firm belief in a reward hereafter, or his nerve would desert him early in his career.

Tortured on a Horse.

"For ten years I couldn't ride a horse without being in torture from piles," writes L. S. Napier, of Rugless, Ky. "when all doctors and other remedies failed. Bucklen's Arnica Salve cured me." Every indication that can be considered at this time of the year points to a good crop of cranberries in the Jersey bogs this year, according to a special from Philadelphia. At present the season is so very early that little can be said as to the size of the crop, but reports are that the "wise ones" are predicting a good yield, some saying an exceptionally good one, providing no unseen calamity visits that locality before picking time. Spraying has been done and the crop is said to be in the best of condition.

No Rest
Day or Night

"I would lay awake for hours without any apparent cause, or dream terrible dreams which would bring on extreme spells of nervousness. After taking Dr. Miles' Nervine and Tonic for awhile I could sleep well, and the nervous spells have left me." MISS ALMA HUG, R. R. No. 4, Canal Dover, Ohio.

Without sleep the nervous system soon becomes a wreck, and the healthful activity of all the organs obstructed. Restful, body-building sleep accompanies the use of Dr. Miles' Nervine because it soothes the irritable nerves, and restores nervous energy. When taken a few days according to directions, the most restless sufferer will find sleep natural and healthful. Get a bottle from your druggist. Take it all according to directions, and if it does not benefit he will return your money.

Some Banana Figures.

Of the $1,636,274 worth of bananas which came into New York city within the last year, 2, 862,000 bunches were from the British West Indies, 1,152,000 bunches from Costa Rica, 877,000 from Colombia and 355 from Cuba. They pay no duty.

Sees Mother Grow Young.

"It would be hard to overstate the wonderful change in my mother since she began to use Electric Bitters," writes Mrs. L. W. Gilpatrick of Danforth, Me. "Although past 70 she really seems to be growing young again. She suffered untold misery from dyspepsia for 90 years. At last she could neither eat, drink nor sleep. Doctors gave her up and all remedies failed till Electric Bitters worked such wonders for her health." They invigorate all vital organs, cure Liver and Kidney troubles, induce sleep, impart strength and appetite. Only 50c at H. Milliman's drug store.

A WHOLE YEAR FOR $1.00

That's what you can do for some friend—send him THE ST. JOE NEWS fifty-two times for only a dollar.

Better than a letter, because it gives ALL the home news each week; there is positively no token you could offer which would make a home so happy in your remembrance as this newspaper mailed to some distant relative or friend.

We are making it just as good as it possibly can be done for $1 00. In fact, lots of publishers have raised to $1.50 on not so creditable a paper as this—and we tell you frankly that when you plank down your dollar on our table for a friend, you'll get your money's worth. This is a good copy to start with. We'll save an extra one until Monday. Yes?

Hilgemann--Horn

The wedding of Mr. Harry H. Hilgemann, deputy prosecuting attorney, and Miss Minnie L. Horn took place Saturday morning at 8 o'clock at the home of the bride in Spencerville. Rev. Brown, of the M. E. church, officiated. The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John L. Horn and is a very bright and capable young woman who is quite well known here, having taught in the country schools and more recently acted as assistant court stenographer. She is a graduate of Valparaiso college. Mr. Hilgemann is a Fort Wayne young man, of bright mind, energy and ability. He has met with much success in his profession and is regarded as one of the most progressive and rising young lawyers of the city. After a tenday's trip Mr. and Mrs. Hilgemann will be at home at 1222 Ewing street. The guests from abroad were:—Mrs. Lizetta F. Hilgemann, Mr. Frank Hilgemann, Miss Pauline Hoerz, Mr. Victor H. Hilgemann. Miss Grace Horn played the wedding march. After partaking of a bountiful wedding breakfast the guests and Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Hilgemann departed for Fort Wayne.

Life 100,000 Years Ago.

Scientists have found in caves in switzerland bones of men, who lived 100,000 years ago, when life was in constant danger from wild beats. To-day the danger, as shown by A. W. Brown of Alexander, Me., is largely from deadly disease. "If it had not been for Dr. King's New Discovery, which cured me, I could not have lived," he writes, "suffering as I did from a severe lung trouble and stubborn cough." To cure Sore Lungs, Colds, obstinate Coughs, and prevent Pneumonia, its the best medicine on earth. 50c and $1.00. Guaranteed by H. Milliman. Trial bottle free.

A Good Time Had

The Methodist Sunday School enjoyed themselves on Friday evening when the Red side of the contest entertained the Blue. It was conceded by all present to be one of the happiest events the church has had for years. A bountiful supper was served at 9 o'clock to 163 guests. The evening entertainment began with All Hail the Power of Jesus name. Mrs. Cora Hart presiding at the organ and everyone singing. Bro. Geo. Gloyd gave the opening address, as Superintendant of the Sunday School and was followed by Rev. Brown with a few well chosen remarks and then prayer. Then supper was served and ice cream and cake, everything good to nt the appetite. We certainly owe much credit to our young men who helped to make a success in everyway. It was near 12 o'clock when the guests departed for home, saying it was an evening well spent, everybody was happy. We are looking for the return of such an evening in 3 months. Certainly our school has grown and every department feels the uplift.

The Fire Demon.

Fire of an unknown origin broke out in the old Samuel Shutt house, now owned by Nicholas Goldsmith, close to town, Thursday, damaging it badly. A bucket brigade saved it from total destruction. This was perhaps the largest farm residence in DeKalb county and worth about $4,000. It was built by Samuel Shutt a good many years ago. In an interview with Mr. Goldsmith he stated that the damage amounted to $475. The day before the fire occured, Jack Beams had received a shipment of tin buckets and he immediately sent them to the fire and had he not have did it the house would have burned to the ground. The buckets were badly damaged but Mr. Goldsmith made that square. The fire broke out while they were eating dinner, in the roof. No fire had been made in this section of the house since Mr. Goldsmith owned it and it remains a mystery how the fire started. The entire community who assisted in putting out the fire have the good will of Mr. Goldsmith and family. "A friend in need is a friend indeed." The repairs are being made.

REUNION

Of Baker Family at Newark, O., Next Month.

A big gathering of the members of the Baker family will be held in Idlewild Park at Newark, Ohio, next month, and what started as a local affair has grown and until now it promises to be a mammoth affair. A very few years ago the decendants of Israel Baker held their first reunion in Licking county, O. They are now taking in the decendants of Nathan Baker and over two hundred families who are the direct decendants of Nathan Baker are invited to attend this sear. Nathan Baker was born in 1557 in Chester county, Pa., he moved to Washington county, Pa., and purchased a large farm, which is still owned by the decendants. Nathan Baker was the father of 12 children which grew to man and womanhood. Last year the reunion was held at Croton, Ohio, and Mrs. Ella Hull wife of Joseph A. Hull, and D. J. Baker attended from here, both being decendants of Nathan Baker. They met many relatives from different parts of the country and report a fine time, this year members will be present from a number of States, Ohio, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Indiana, Michiwan, Illinois and other States. Idlewild Park is an ideal place for the gathering, and Newark is a beautiful city. A number of steam and electric lines pass through the city and it is noted for its fine hotels, and the country for its beautiful scenery. August 12th, 1909, will be a day long to be remembered by a host of the Baker family.

Sea Wall Saves Galveston.

A severe storm swept over the Gulf of Mexico and struck Galveston, Tex. The wind attained a velocity of sixty miles an hour and for a time heavy loss was feared. The sea wall, however, protected the city and aside from some damage on the beach front, where two bathhouses were destroyed, the city suffered little. Lower portions of the city that were not filled in after the disaster of 1900 were under water. While the storm was at its height no trains entered or left the city. All the telegraph wires went down and for several hours the city was cut off from the outside world except for one or two stray telegraph wires. The sea wall, which is seventeen feet high, held back the mass of water which was swept against it by the hurricane, but at several points the waves scaled the top. This caused the flooding of the lower portions of the city. The citizens at one time were greatly alarmed, but there was no panic. The property loss will probably not exceed $100,000.

Cloudburst in Wisconsin.

A cloudburst caused $500,000 loss of property in northern Wisconsin. The power plant at White River was washed out completely. The plant furnished power and light to the city of Ashland and the loss is estimated at $100,000. The State fish hatchery, near Bayfield was nearly washed away and millions of fish were carried into the lake. The loss to the State will be heavy, as the ponds appear to be destroyed. The Northwestern, Wisconsin Central, Northern Pacific and Omaha trains are all held up and no trains can get into Ashland from any direction. The river valley is a raging flood, over which the trains dare not attempt to pass. Railroad and wagon bridges for miles around are down.

Will Bar Negroes from Schools.

If a bill introduced into the Georgia Legislature by Representative Vinson, of Baldwin County, be passed the public schools maintained for the education of the negro in Georgia will be practically abolished. The measure provides that all appropriations for school purposes shall be divided between the white and negro schools in proportion to the taxes paid by each. Inasmuch as there is little revenue derived from negro tax payers, this would cut the negro school funds to little or nothing.

Act of Demented Sister.

Miss Eliza Warren, a well-known actress, and head of a school of elocution and acting in Cleveland, Ohio, was probably fatally stabbed by her sister, Mrs. Mary Sutton, who was temporarily demented. The encounter occurred in Miss Warren's downtown studio in the Republic building in Euclid avenue. Recently Mrs. Sutton lost a son and she has grieved over his death until it is thought her mind was turned. Both were taken to a hospital.

One Man Killed and Five Injured.

Theodore Gullow, of Monroeville, Ohio, was killed and five men were injured in the wreck of Wheeling & Lake Erie passenger train No. 5 at Trowbridge, sixteen miles east of Toledo, Ohio. The train jumped the track within forty rods of the station while making forty miles an hour on a straight track. The engine and combination coach went into the ditch and the three other cars left the track.

Wreck on Southern Road.

While rounding a curve near Glenwood, Ala., a Central of Georgia passenger train from Columbus to Andalusia, Ala., was wrecked, twenty-four persons being injured, six very seriously.

Big Fire at Long Branch.

Two hotels and seven business houses were destroyed by a fire at Long Branch, N. J., that swept a block of Brighton avenue between Second and Bairs avenue, causing $100,000 damage.

Seven Laborers Killed by Dynamite.

Seven laborers, all foreigners, employed on the construction of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western railroad cut off at Vail, N. J., were killed by an explosion of dynamite.

TARIFF MUST BE LOWER IS TAFT'S ULTIMATUM

President Tells Standpatters He Intends to See That Downward Revision Wins.

STATEMENT AS THREAT OF VETO

Executive Meets Arguments of Congressmen by Declaring Party Pledges Shall Be Kept.

President Taft clarified the tariff situation Friday by issuing his first formal statement on the subject. This statement, made after a conference with twenty-two Republican and one Democratic representative who demanded a high protective tariff, follows:

"Mr. Young of Michigan opposed free ore; Mr. Mondell opposed free coal or reciprocity with Canada and free hides; each on the ground that the policy would injure the interests in his State, and a discussion was participated in by other representatives, who urged that the doctrine of free raw materials was not a Republican doctrine.

"The President replied that he was not committed to the principle of free raw materials, but that he was committed to the principle of a downward revision of the tariff which he had promised, and that he was obliged to look at the matter not from the standpoint of any particular district, but from the standpoint of the whole country, and also from the standpoint of responsibility for the entire Republican party.

"He said the question in each case was a question of fact, to be determined by evidence, as to whether the present duty was needed for protection or whether the rates was excessive, so that a downward revision, or putting the article on the free list, would not injure the industry.

Taft Defines the Issues.

"He repeated the platform of the Republican party and said that he had always understood that it meant a downward revision in many instances, though perhaps in some few instances an increase might be needed; that he reached this construction of the platform on what he understood to be the principle of protection and its justification—namely, that after an industry was protected by a duty equal to the difference between the cost of production in this country, including a fair profit to the manufacturer, the energy and enterprise of American business men and capitalists, the effectiveness of American labor and the ingenuity of American inventors under the impulse of competition behind the tariff wall would reduce the cost of production, and that, with the reduction in the cost of production, the tariff rate would become unnecessarily high and ought to be reduced.

"This was the normal operation of the tariff as claimed by the defenders of the protective system—not in every case, but as a general rule—that of course a revision of the tariff could not be perfect, must have defects and inconsistencies, but in so far as his influence went when called upon to act in connection with legislation it would be thrown in the direction of performing the promises of the party as he understood them; and that if iron ore and oil and coal and hides did not need protection and the conditions were such as to enable the ore producers and the oil producers and the coal producers and the producers of hides to compete successfully, without reduction of wages, with the producers from abroad, then they did not need a duty and their articles should go on the free list.

"It was a question of fact which he hoped to make up his mind with respect to, on such evidence as was available to him in order to carry out what he understood to be the promises of the party to the whole people. He said he felt that his position as the titular head of the Republican party and as President, with the whole people as his constituency, gave him a somewhat broader point of view than that of a single member of Congress in respect to articles produced in his district. He felt strongly the call of the country for a downward revision within the limitations of the protective principle, and he hoped to be able to respond to that call as he heard it, as well in the interests of the party as of the country."

EXTENDS OKLAHOMA PIPE LINE.

Secretary Ballinger Grants Right of Way to Prairie Oil and Gas.

A right of way to the Prairie Oil and Gas Company for the immediate construction of an eight-inch pipe line for the purpose of conducting oil from a point in Tulsa County, Oklahoma, in the Glennpool field, through the Creek, Cherokee and Choctaw nations in a southeasterly direction to the Oklahoma-Arkansas state line, a distance of 151 miles, has been approved by Acting Secretary of the Interior Pierce. The new pipe line is the outgrowth of Secretary Ballinger's action in amending the oil and gas regulations by striking out the "common carriers," and "confiscatory" clauses, none of the companies being willing to extend their lines under the old regulations.

WILL ASK DEATH PENALTY.

Prosecutor Holds Four Responsible for Murder of Banker Saylor.

State's Attorney John D. Pallissard in Watseka, Ill., announced that he would ask the death penalty for all four defendants in the murder of Banker John Byron Sayler—Dr. W. R. Miller, Mrs. Lucy Sayler, John Grunden and Ira Grunden.

Mrs. Cora Miller, wife of the accused physician, who is in Watseka with an uncle, John Marshall of Blairsville, Pa., has $250,000 back of her in her fight to free her husband. She repudiated a report that she had visited Mrs. Sayler in the Watseka jail, and declared her undying hatred for her woman rival. Owing to Mrs. Miller's peculiar position in the case—that of a witness for her husband and against Mrs. Sayler—it became probable that there would be separate trials for Miller and the other defendants. Mrs. Sayler, her brother, Ira Grunden, and her father, John Grunden, will be tried on the charge of accessory to murder, and Miller will be tried separately, it is believed, on the direct charge of murder.

With the opening of the vault in Sayler's bank in which his private papers were stored, evidence was brought to light that not only startled Prosecuting Attorney Pallissard but caused Golda, the 17-year-old daughter of the slain man, to make a change of front and express the opinion that her father was foully murdered. Miss Sayler shocked the community shortly after the killing by stating that Dr. Miller was a good friend of her mother and she was sure her father had been killed by him in self-defense. Later she stated that if her father had left her any money every cent of it would be spent toward bringing Dr. Miller to the gallows and that she "would like to pull the rope herself."

Attorneys for Miller are said to be preparing to make a defense of insanity. State's Attorney Pallissard announced that the information found in Sayler's private box was of such nature that all who read the papers were put under an oath.

BOOKS FOR THE MILLIONS.

Bulletin of Bureau of Education Shows One Library to 15,416.

There were 15,416 persons to each library and an average of seventy-two bound volumes to every 100 persons in the United States in 1908, according to a bulletin issued by the United States Bureau of Education. There were 2,298 libraries reporting 5,000 volumes or over, 3,342 reporting 1,000 volumes or over, but less than 5,000, and about 2,700 reporting less than 1,000 volumes each in this country during the last year.

WIFE GETS STOLEN $20,000.

Court Believes "Robbery" in Seattle Was Ruse to Escape Judgment.

A sequel to the theft of $20,000 from Mrs. A. J. Shea of Eveleth, Minn., in Seattle, six weeks ago, and the subsequent recovery of the money came to light when Mr. Shea was arrested for contempt of court in his refusal to pay $6,000 on a $20,000 judgment secured against him by his former attorney, J. L. Washburn. Mr. Shea sold the timber on his claim for $20,000, gave the money to his wife, who went to the West with it. The story of the theft was doubted by the Seattle police, and their suspicions were more or less confirmed when $15,000 of the sum was reported to have been returned. Shea was examined on supplemental proceedings and ordered to pay Mr. Washburn $6,000 of the judgment secured on a note, and for attorney's fees and incidental expenses. He failed to do this, and was sent to jail for contempt of court.

SEVEN KILLED AND 24 HURT.

Hundreds of Pedestrians Have Narrow Escapes When Building Falls.

In one of the busiest sections of Philadelphia and at a time when thousands of pedestrians were passing, the five-story brick building at the northeast corner of 11th and Market streets, which was being reconstructed for the United Gas Improvement Company, collapsed with a terrific roar early Thursday afternoon, burying or pinning beneath the ruins thirty-two persons, seven of whom are dead, one missing, one fatally injured and twenty-four more or less seriously injured. Those killed were workmen employed by Sax & Abbott, contractors. The two lower floors of the building had been torn out and the three floors were shored up by heavy timbers. Steel girders were bracing the shoring. It is supposed that by moving one of the girders the entire structure was loosened.

SAFE-CRACKERS ROB POSTOFFICE

Huntley, Ill., Strong Box Looted of $500 in Cash and Stamps.

Safe-crackers blew open the safe of the postoffice at Huntley, Ill., on the Northwestern railroad, some time in the night and escaped with about $500 in money and stamps. The robbery was a daring one, the interior of the store being wrecked by the force of the explosion. Postmaster E. H. Cook, of Huntley, was the first to discover the theft when he went to his drug store in the morning. The postoffice was located in the back of the store and the robbers had been thorough in their work of looting. No one, apparently, heard the sound of the explosion and the men worked with little fear of discovery. The robbers stole a horse from the barn of John Kelly and drove about three miles east, where they tied the animal. No further trace of them was found.

Acquit Girl in Murder Case.

Myrtle Cress, 18 years old, was acquitted in Cripple Creek, Colo., of a charge of having murdered John Phillips, her sweetheart.

BREAK COL. SNELL'S WILL.

Jurors for Second Time Set Aside Last Testament of Millionaire.

The third contest over the will of Col. Thomas Snell, of Clinton, Ill., the eccentric old man who died leaving an estate of $2,000,000 and cutting his only son off with an annuity of $50, was ended Friday when a jury decided that Col. Snell was insane at the time he made the will. This decision sets aside the bequest of several thousand dollars to Mabelle Snell McNamara, the aged colonel's affinity. The jury was out a little more than an hour and took but one ballot, which resulted eleven to one for the contesting son, Richard Snell. The dissenting juror changed his vote without the formality of a second ballot.

The first trial of the contest resulted in a verdict that Col. Snell was insane, but a higher court set aside the verdict and remanded the case for another trial. If the will had stood the legal heirs would have received, all told, annuities aggregating $5,000, and not exceeding $1,000 in any single case, while the residue of the fortune would have been held in a weird trust agreement for heirs yet unborn. On the date set for a final distribution, in the terms of the will, the estate would have grown probably to $100,000,000.

The Snell will case will go down in American court annals as furnishing one of the most amazing instances of the depths to which women have descended to gain money. The most sensational feature of all three hearings of the case was the introduction of letters from nearly a score of women, young and old, all of whom professed to love the aged millionaire madly. To cater to a degenerate tendency which appeared to be one of Col. Snell's senile vagaries, the women interlarded their letters with unprintable obscenities. The more vulgar the tone of the letters the better pleased the old man appeared to be, and it was found when the letters were exposed that he had formed the habit of marking them with his impressions. Scarcely a letter was written to the doting old man by any of the women which did not demand gifts and money.

DON CARLOS, PRETENDER, DEAD.

Was Claimant for Throne of Spain—Followers to Recognize Alfonso.

Don Carlos of Bourbon, who waged a war for the throne of Spain, to which he claimed the right of succession, died Sunday at Varese, in Lombardy, Italy, following a long illness. Don Carlos of the house of Bourbon had a strong following in the north of Spain, where he took up arms in 1872 to enforce his claims. He then assumed the title of Charles VIII. and clung to his position until 1876, when he was conquered by the forces of Alfonso XII., who had been proclaimed king at Madrid. Following his defeat, the pretender withdrew to France, where, as the senior male heir of the Bourbon house, he had a right to the throne in the event of the restoration of the monarchy. His heir is his son, Don Jaime, now an officer in the Russian army.

Carlos' pretensions to the Spanish throne were based on the ground that Isabelle, daughter of Ferdinand VII., who was Don Carlos' granduncle, and Christina, mother of Alfonso XII., owing to the Salic law, were debarred from succession. A recent report in Spain, when it became known that Carlos was desperately ill, was to the effect that his followers would recognize King Alfonso upon Carlos' death. Senor Llorens, a Carlist deputy, said that when Carlos died his supporters would organize the religious element of the party into a Catholic party similar to the German Centrists in the Reichstag.

Cable advices from Lemberg, Austria, told of the outbreak of new anti-Hebrew aggressions, and 100 Jews and landlords were said to have been slain in Bessarabia, Southwestern Russia.

The christening of the infant Spanish princess took place with the customary ceremonies for such occasions. The dignitaries of the land were present and representatives from other countries.

The American liner, New York, reached Plymouth, England, four hours ahead of her nearest competitor in a race in which nine liners were participants. The Hamburg-American steamer, Amerika, was second.

The capital city of Persia was reported to have been completely invested by the armed forces of the revolutionary nationalists early in the week and the only thing that prevented their further occupation of Teheran was the joint ultimatum sent to their commander by the diplomatic representatives of Russia and Great Britain.

Lord Charles Beresford outlined his naval policy before the London Chamber of Commerce, saying that England's position was due purely to arrears in shipbuilding. He advocated a plan which would give the nation twenty-six Dreadnaughts by 1914, which, with improvement in stations and stores, would cost about $300,000,000. At the close of the Imperial Press Conference Beresford urged the creation of five distinct navies, one for each of the five national divisions of the empire.

Work of Congress

The Senate was not in session Thursday. After a lively debate the Democrats in the House failed in their efforts to have a provision brought in by Mr. Tawney appropriating $25,000 for President Taft's traveling expenses ruled out or stricken out of an urgent deficiency bill. The latter measure was under consideration throughout the session. Members on the Democratic side were unsparing in their charges of bad faith, because the House at the last session, as they alleged, pledged itself not to make any additional allowances to the President. Mr. Rainey of Illinois gave as the reason for its presentation at this time the desire of the President to "boost" the League of Republican Clubs throughout the country.

:—:

The Senate was in session only eighteen minutes Friday, adjourning at 12:18 p. m. until Tuesday. In addition to the swearing in of Senator Clay, of Georgia, the business consisted of the presentation of petitions and the introduction of bills of minor importance. Feverish excitement over the baseball game scheduled between teams representing the Democratic and Republican sides of the chamber was responsible for a short session of the House. Chairman Tawney's desire was to conclude consideration of the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, but strenuous pressure was brought to bear upon him, and the Speaker caused them to agree to let the bill go over until Monday. The only action of importance in connection with the deficiency bill was the striking out of the appropriation of $30,000 for participation by the United States in the Brussels exposition. At 2:44 p. m. the House adjourned until Monday.

:—:

The Senate was not in session Monday. Having gotten over its baseball "spree" of the previous Friday, the House transacted a general assortment of business. It began by passing an omnibus bridge bill, then listened to an apology by Mr. Hobson, of Alabama, for having last February made some uncomplimentary statements about Ambassador O'Brien at Tokio, and further considered the urgent deficiency bill. There were several lively tilts, one of which culminated in an announcement by Mr. Macon of Arkansas that he would resign his seat if it could be proved that he was a legislative obstructor. The most serious discussion centered about Francis J. Heney, special assistant to the Attorney General. Chairman Tawney, of the Appropriations Committee, made the statement that Mr. Heney had received during the last year $25,000 for services he did not render.

:—:

When the Senate met Tuesday Senator Brown of Nebraska sought to have adopted the joint resolution directing the Secretary of State to transmit to the Governors of the various States copies of the resolution providing for a constitutional amendment authorizing the levying of an income tax, but under objection from Senator Kean consideration was postponed a day under the agreement to transact no business while the tariff bill is in conference. Mr. Cummins, after some debate, obtained an order for reprinting a bill in which he was interested. Senator Smoot objected, but finally withdrew his objection. Without transacting other business the Senate adjourned until Friday. The urgent deficiency bill was passed by the House after four days of tempestuous debate. The amount carried by it is $454,809, or $20,403 more than the original sum, and includes the $25,000 traveling expenses for the President. After denying the usual extra month's pay to officers and employes of the capitol, the House threw out of the bill the allowance for extra work to committee stenographers and then refused to carry out a mandate of the United States Supreme Court for the payment of J. M. Ceballos & Co. of New York of $205,614. Finally the Democrats, led by Mr. Bowers of Mississippi, sought to defeat the proposition for the payment of the President's traveling expenses, but in that they were unsuccessful. Adjournment was taken until Friday noon.

NUBBINS OF NEWS.

Official orders have been issued at Winnipeg, Man., prohibiting any United States circus from parading the streets unless it flies a British instead of an American flag.

The Alabama Supreme Court decided that liquor when kept in lockers by individuals and is not for sale is personal property and that any municipal ordinance prohibiting such possession is void.

Melville Bull, former lieutenant-governor of Rhode Island and for eight years member of Congress from the first Rhode Island district, died at Newport, aged 55. He was a brother of the late Dr. William T. Bull, of New York.

Sherburne M. Becker, known as the "boy mayor of Milwaukee," arrived in San Francisco the other day on his return from a visit to the canal zone, where he went on the invitation of President Taft.

Two daughters of a Montana rancher named Mueller, living at Helena, slipped into the Missouri river from the bank and were drowned. They were 20 and 16 years old. A brother, aged 13, was drowned trying to save them.

CHAPTER XVI.—(Continued.)

Saxton, standing with Fenton in the dark hall, referred to his watch again.

"Shall we go in?" he asked.

The lawyer dropped the knob of the door and drew back out of the way.

"It's too bad it's glass," said Saxton, setting his shoulder against the wooden frame over the lock. The lock held, but the door bent away from it. He braced his feet and drove his shoulder harder into the corner, at the same time pressing his hip against the lock. It refused to yield, but the glass cracked, and finally half of it fell with a crash to the floor within.

"Don't hurry yourselves, gentlemen," said Fenton, coolly, speaking through the ragged edges of broken glass. Saxton thrust his hand in to the catch and opened the door.

"Why, it's only Fenton," called Margrave in a pleasant home to his associates, who had effected their exits safely into a rear room.

"It's only Fenton," continued the lawyer, stepping inside, "but I'll have to trouble you to wait a few minutes."

"Oh, the meeting's adjourned, if that's what you want," said Margrave.

"That won't go down," said Fenton, placing his package on the table. "You're old enough to know, Margrave, that one man can't hold a stockholders' meeting behind locked doors."

"The meeting was held regular, at the hour and place advertised," said Margrave, with dignity. "A majority of the stockholders were represented."

"By you, I suppose," said Fenton, who had walked into the room followed by Saxton.

"By me," said Margrave.

"How many shares have you?" asked the lawyer.

"I suppose you think I'm working a bluff, but I've really got the stuff this time. To be real decent with you I don't mind telling you that I've got exactly twenty-five hundred and ninety-seven shares of this stock. I guess that's a majority all right. Now one good turn deserves another; how much has Porter got? I don't care, but I'd just like to know." He stood by the table and ostentatiously played with his certificates to make Fenton's humiliation all the keener. Margrave's associates stood at the back of the room and watched him admiringly. Fenton's bundle still lay on the table, and Saxton stood with his hands in his pockets watching events. There had been no chance for him to explain to Fenton his reasons for seeking the offices of the Traction Company and it had pleased Margrave to ignore his presence; Fenton paid no further attention to him. He wondered at Fenton's forbearance, and expected the lawyer to demolish Margrave, but Fenton said:

"You are quite right, Margrave. I hold for Mr. Porter exactly twenty-three hundred and fifty shares."

Margrave nodded patronizingly.

"Just a little under the mark."

"You may make that twenty-four hundred even," said Saxton, "if it will do you good."

"I'm still shy," said Fenton. "Our friend clearly has the advantage."

"I suppose if you'd known how near you'd come, you'd have hustled pretty hard for the others," said Margrave, sybpathetically.

"Oh, I don't know!" said Fenton, with the taunting inflection which gives slang to the phrase. He did not seem greatly disturbed. Saxton expected him to try to make terms; but the lawyer yawned in a preoccupied way, before he said:

"So long as the margin's so small, you'd better be decent and hold your stockholders' meeting according to law and let us in. I'm sure Mr. Saxton and I would be of great assistance—wise counsel and all that."

"You're a pretty good fellow, Fenton, and I'm sorry we can't do business together."

"Oh, well, if you won't, you won't." Fenton took up his bundle and turned to the door.

"I suppose you've got large chunks of Traction bonds, too, Margrave. There's nothing like going in deep in these things."

"I've been hearing for four years that Traction bondholders were going to tear up the earth, but I guess those old frosts down in New England won't foreclose on me. I'll pay 'em their interest as soon as I get to going. And say!" he ejaculated, suddenly, "if Porter's got any of those bonds don't you get gay with 'em. It's a big thing for the town to have a practical railroad man like me running the street car lines; and if I can't make 'em pay nobody can."

"You're not conceited or anything, are you, Margrave?"

"By the way, young man," said Margrave, addressing Saxton for the first time, "we won't charge you anything for breakage to-day, but don't let it happen again."

Margrave lingered to reassure and instruct his associates as to the adjourned meeting, and Saxton went out with Fenton.

"That was rather tame," said John, as he and Fenton reached the street together. "I hoped there would be some fun. These shares belong to a Boston friend and they're for sale."

"I wonder how Porter came to miss them," said Fenton, grimly. "You'd better keep them as souvenirs of the occasion. The engraving isn't bad. I turn up this way." They paused at the corner. He still carried his bundle and he drew from his pocket now a number of documents in manila jackets.

"I have a little errand at the Federal Court. The fact is, that Mr. Porter owns all of the bonds of the Traction Company."

Saxton nodded. He understood now why the stockholders' meeting had not disturbed Fenton.

"This is an ugly mess," the lawyer continued. "It would have suited me better to control the company through the stock so long as we had so much, but we didn't quite make it. You're friendly to Mr. Porter, aren't you?"

"Yes; I don't know how he feels toward me——"

"We can't ask him just now, so we'll take it for granted. The court will unquestionably appoint a receiver; independent of this morning's proceedings, and if you don't mind, I'll ask to have you put in temporarily, or until we can learn Mr. Porter's wishes."

"But—there are other and better men ——"

"Very likely; but I particularly wish this."

"There's Mr. Wheaton—isn't he the natural man—in the bank and all that?" urged Saxton.

"Mr. Wheaton has a very exacting position and it would be unfair to add to his duties," said the lawyer. "Will you keep where I can find you the rest of the day?"

"Yes," said John; "I'll be at my office. But you can do better," he called after Fenton, who was walking rapidly toward the postoffice building.

Wheaton sat at his desk all the morning hoping that Fenton would drop in to give him the result of the Traction meeting; but the lawyer did not appear at the bank. A dumb terror possessed him as he reflected upon the events of the past day. It might be that the shares which Margrave had forced from him would carry the balance of power. He went to the telephone and called Evelyn to ask her how her father was and to report his delivery of the papers in her father's box to Mr. Fenton, as instructed. Evelyn spoke hopefully of her father's illness; there were no unfavorable symptoms, and everything pointed to his recovery. It was very sweet to hear her voice in this way; and he went to his desk comforted.

CHAPTER XVII.

A week had passed since Saxton's appointment to the receivership and Wheaton went to and from his work with many misgivings. Several of Wheaton's friends had confided to him their belief that he ought to have been appointed receiver instead of Saxton, and there was little that he could say to this, except that he had no time for it. He had become nervous and distraught, and was irritable under the jesting of his associates at The Bachelors'. There was a good deal of joking at their table for several days after Saxton's appointment over Margrave's discomfiture, to which Wheaton contributed little. He felt decidedly ill at ease under it. Thompson, the cashier, had come home, and Wheaton found his presence irksome.

He had seen Margrave several times at the club since their last interview at the bank and Margrave had nodded distantly, as if he hardly remembered Wheaton. Wheaton assumed that sooner or later Margrave would offer to pay him for his shares of Traction stock. But while the loss of his own certificate, under all the circumstances, did not trouble him, Margrave's appropriation of Evelyn Porter's shares was an unpleasant fact that haunted all his waking hours.

One evening, a week after the receivership incident, he resolved to go to Margrave and demand the return of Evelyn's certificate. The idea seized firm hold upon him, and he set out at once for Margrave's house. He inquired for Margrave at the door, and the maid asked him to go into the library. They were entertaining at dinner, she told him, and he said he would wait. He walked nervously up and down in the well-appointed library. He heard the hum of voices faintly from the dining-room. Margrave came in presently, fat and ugly in his evening clothes. He welcomed Wheaton noisily and introduced him to his guests, two directors of the Transcontinental and their wives, who were passing through town on their way to California.

Mrs. Margrave and Mabel greeted Wheaton cordially. Mabel was dressed to impress the ladies from New York, and was succeeding. Mrs. Margrave was oppressed by the presence in her home of so many millions and so much social distinction as her guests represented, and she contributed only murmurs of assent to the conversation which Mabel led with ease, discoursing of yacht races, horse shows and like matters of metropolitan interest. Wheaton was glad now that he had come; Margrave's guests were people worth meeting. As soon as Wheaton felt that he could go decently, he rosé and shook hands with the visiting gentlemen and bowed to the ladies. Margrave took him by the arm with an air of great intimacy and affection and walked with him to the hall, where he made much of helping Wheaton into his overcoat.

"I wanted to see you on a business matter," Wheaton began, in a low tone.

"Oh, yes," said Margrave loudly, "I forgot to mail you that check. I've been terribly rushed lately; but in time, my boy, in time!"

"Oh, not that! I mean that other certificate." Wheaton was trying to drop the conversation to a whispering basis as he drew on his gloves. Margrave had again taken his arm and was walking with him toward the front door, talking gustily all the while. He swung the door open and followed Wheaton out upon the front step.

"A glorious night! glorious!" he ejaculated, puffing from his walk. His hand wandered up Wheaton's arm until it reached his collar, and after he had allowed his fingers to grasp this lingeringly, he gave Wheaton a sudden push forward, still holding his collar, then raised his fat leg and kicked him from the step.

"Come again, Jim?" he called pleasantly, as he backed within the door and closed it to return to his guests.

Wheaton reached his room, filled with righteous indignation. He might have known that a coarse fellow like Margrave cared only for people whom he could control; and he decided after a night of reflection that he had acted handsomely in saving Porter's package of securities from Margrave the night of the encounter at the bank. The more he thought of it, the more certain he grew that he could, if it became necessary to protect himself in any way, turn the tables on Margrave. He called Margrave a scoundrel in his thoughts, and was half persuaded to go at once to Fenton and explain why Margrave had been at the bank on the night that Fenton had found him there.

Wheaton continued to call at the Porters' daily to make inquiry for the head of the house. On some of these occasions he saw Evelyn, but Mrs. Whipple was always there; and he had not seen Evelyn alone since she gave him her father's key. Other young men, friends of Evelyn, called, he found, just as he did, to make inquiry about Mr. Porter. Mrs. Whipple had a way of saying very artlessly, and with a little sigh that carried weight, that Mr. Raridan was so very kind. Wheaton wanted to be very kind himself, but he never happened to be about when the servants were busy and there were important prescriptions to be filled at the apothecary's.

On the whole he was very miserable and when, one morning, while Porter's condition was still precarious, he received a letter from Snyder, postmarked Spokane, declaring that money was immediately required to support him until he could find work, he closed that issue finally in a brief letter fhich was not couched in diplomatic language. The four days that were necessary for the delivery of this letter had hardly passed before Wheaton received a telegram sharply demanding a remittance by wire. This Wheaton did not answer; he had done all that he intended to do for William Snyder, who was well out of the way, and much more safely so if he had no money. The correspondence was not at an end, however, for a threatening letter in Snyder's eccentric orthography followed, and this, too, Wheaton dropped into his waste basket and dismissed from his mind.

DANCING AND FIGHTING.

In Montenegro They Have Their Own Way of Doing Each.

The national dance of Montenegro is the kolo, somewhat similar to the horo of Burgaria. Both sexes take part, crossing hands and forming an unjoined circle. The music they supply themselves, each end of the horn alternately singing a verse in honor of the prince and his warlike deeds.

The kolo is always danced at any great national festival and the effect of the sonorous voices and swaying ring is very fine. Then there is another dance performed by four or five, usually youths, to the accompaniment of a fiddle, the leader setting a lot of intricate quick steps which the rest imitate at once. It is really a sort of jig and makes the spectator's head swim if he watches it for long.

"I never saw any dances in Northern Albania," says a writer in the Wide World, "though certain Slav artists love to depict wonderful sword dances, with beauteous maidens swaying gracefully after the style of nautch girls. A casual observer who has seen the Albanians come into Montenegro markets or to their great weekly gathering in the bazaar at Scutari could never picture these stern men dancing or at play.

"They never smile and they look the life they lead, each clan ever ready for war with its neighbor and absolutely pitiless in the vendetta. When fighting the Turks the Montenegrins evince a heroism and utter fearlessness that is remarkable. The strongest men carry bombs, or rather hand grenades—things the Turkish soldier particularly abominates.

"I was once told how a certain man whom I knew well saved his band from destruction. They were fairly cornered and the Turks closing in, when the bomb thrower stood up amid the hail of bullets, lit the fuse with his cigarette, and rushed toward the soldiers, who, seeing his intention, promptly made tracks.

"It was, of course, lucky that the Mohammedan soldier, who does not much mind being sent to paradise with a bullet, thinks his chance of eternal bliss very doubtful if he is blown up with dynamite. The nerve required to be a bomb thrower is worthy of a little reflection. He must absolutely expose himself and as the fuse is very short the ignition must be coolly considered.

"If premature it means the destruction of himself and comrades, and when it is fairly alight the bomb must be thrown with mathematical exactitude. In other words, the man must leave his cover and charge an overwhelming force alone and not throw till he is close up to it."

Turning the Tables.

"Here," said Johnson, entering the dealer's shop in a rage, "I thought you guaranteed that parrot I bought two days ago to be quite free of objectionable habits. Why, it has done nothing but swear since I got it."

"Ah! sir! it's wonderful how soon them birds get corrupted in new quarters. I should ha' been more careful who I sold him to. I didn't think you were that sort o' a gent," and Johnson found himself outside, feeling like a culprit before he quite understood what happened.—Answers.

Helping Him Along.

"See here," said Blank to the alleged humorist of the village weekly, "what do you mean by using my name so often in connection with your jokes—Blank says this and Blank says that, etc.?"

"My dear boy," replied the party of the funny part, "I do that because it attracts attention. Nearly all our readers know you, and when they read those jokes they invariably say: 'Well, that's certainly a brilliant remark—for Blank.'"

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

The usual indices of trade activity continue to reflect accumulating strength and better disposition toward increasing active capacity in manufactures. Weather conditions favor the growing crops and marketings of farm products are well sustained, those of live stock showing considerable increase. The markets for breadstuffs remain quiet, but packing is more extended, and there is good absorption of provisions for both domestic and export consumption. High temperatures stimulated demand for seasonable needs in the leading retail lines and there is ample reduction of merchandise stocks here and at interior points.

Wholesale trade in the principal staples promises to show expansion. Buyers come forward in large numbers, and the demand is strong in textiles, clothing, footwear, fod products and furniture. Compared with this time last year, there is larger forwarding of goods to country stores, while current bookings indicate gain in deliveries to be made of fall and winter lines. High prices and reasonable assurance of great crops make a remarkably prosperous position in agriculture, and this encourages more effort in the distribution of finished products and farm needs.

Bank clearings, $269,236,328, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1908 by 14.7 per cent and compare with $243,483,589 in 1907.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 29, against 20 last week, 30 in 1908 and 21 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 12, against 3 last week, 10 in 1908 and 5 in 1907."—Dun's Weekly Review of Trade.

NEW YORK.

Despite irregularities in crop and weather conditions, midsummer influences in trade and industry and conservatism in placing orders ahead, business is of fairly good volume for the season of the year and shows a perceptibly steady advance toward normal proportions. In retail trade clearance sales are universal, but there are numerous reports that reduced purchasing power offsets the stimulus offered by this means of inducing buying. Wholesale trade for immediate delivery and jobbing business in summer goods is of a light volume. Fall trade reports are still relatively the best of any branch. Still, there are reports of quiet in the Southwest, and Chicago seems to be the most active market in the country, with the Northwest coming next as regards favorable reports.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with July 15 were 206, against 182 last week, 215 in the like week of 1908, 177 in 1907, 18 in 1906 and 165 in 1905. Canadian failures for the week number 36, as compared with 27 last week and 28 the corresponding week of 1908.—Bradstreet's.

JURY FREES ELLA GINGLES.

Acquitted of Theft, but Verdict Declares Stories of Attacks Untrue.

"We, the jury, find the defendant, Ella Gingles, not guilty. We further find the charges made against Miss Agnes Barrette to be unfounded and untrue." With the foregoing double-tipped verdict the jury in Judge Brentano's court in Chicago wound up the famous Gingles case—the case of common larceny which swelled into one of the greatest psychological puzzles in legal annals and made reputations tremble with weird charges of "white slavery" and amazing stories of psychopathic nature.

The verdict at once was a release for the girl from the charge of stealing lace and a vindication of the position taken by the State, which was that Ella Gingles lied in her terrible story of mistreatment at the hands of Miss Barrette, her accuser, and Miss Barrette's associate. The decision was reached after seven hours of deliberation, during which five ballots were taken, the first being eight to four for acquittal. From the time of entering the jury room the jurors were agreed that the story told by the girl against Miss Barrette was untrue.

The point upon which the four jurors who at first stood out for conviction turned in their voting was a doubt as to whether Ella Gingles really stole two pieces of lace valued at not more than $50 which Miss Agnes Barrette said the girl took from her Irish lace store in the Wellington Hotel. The decision resulted in attorneys for both sides rejoicing in the fruits of victory—a situation novel in any court.

CLERK IS $10,000 THIEF.

Clayton T. Zimmerman, Jr., 20 Years Old, Clears Up Mystery.

Clayton T. Zimmerman, Jr., a clerk on a salary of $55 a month in the "outmoney" office of the Adams Express Company, in Chicago, was arrested Monday for the theft of the package of $10,000 in currency which disappeared mysteriously the previous Tuesday, baffling a score of detectives. Zimmerman confessed taking the money. He is 20 years old.

Handling close to $1,000,000 a day in the office of the express company turned the young man's head, and when he saw an opportunity to "hold out" a small fortune, he admits, he secreted the $10,000 package and went on about his work. Zimmerman planned to keep the money hidden for six or seven years and then build himself a little home. He has a sweetheart and expected to get married in a few years. The young clerk also intended to "plant" a portion of his "fortune" in a small farm or in city real estate, but he did not figure on using any of the money until the company "had time to forget its loss." All the money but $10 was recovered.

BOY PRINCE IS MADE SHAH.

National Assembly Acts After Ruler Takes Refuge in Czar's Legation.

Mohamed Ali, Shah of Persia, was deposed Friday and the crown prince, Sultan Ahmed Mirza, was proclaimed shah by the national assembly, composed of the chief Mujtehids and the leaders of the nationalist forces, in the presence of an immense crowd in parliament square, Teheran. Mohamed Ali has taken refuge in the Russian summer legation at Zerzende, where he is under the protection of detachments of Cossacks and sepoys, despatched to Zerzende by the Russian and British diplomatic representatives. The new shah is yet in his minority, and Azad ul Mulk, head of the Kajar family, has been appointed regent Sipahdar, one of the most active leaders of the movement, has taken office as minister of war and governor of Teheran.

JEFF DAVIS' DAUGHTER DIES.

Mrs. Hayes Last of President of Confederacy's Family.

Mrs. J. Addison Hayes, 54 years old, daughter of the late Jefferson Davis, President of the Confederacy, died Sunday at her home in Colorado Springs after an illness of six months. Her husband was president of the First National Bank there. Mrs. Hayes, the last of the family of the President of the Confederacy, after the death of her sister, Miss Winnie Davis, made a trip south a few years ago, when she was made "the daughter of the Confederacy" in her sister's stead. Her mother, widow of the Southern President, died in New York about two years ago. Mrs. Hayes is survived by two sons, Jefferson Hayes Davis and William Hayes, and two daughters, Lucy and Mrs. Virginia Webb, wife of Dr. Gerald B. Webb. Jefferson Hayes Davis bears the name of his grandfather through a special act of the Legislature.

Rope Around Neck; Is Saved.

Albert Lawson, a negro, who shot Sheriff Compton, of Henry County, was taken from jail in Paris, Tenn., by a mob which placed a rope around his neck preparatory to lynching him. Cooler citizens persuaded the mob leaders to desist and to return the prisoner to his cell.

Falls 200 Feet, but Lives.

Falling 200 feet down Mount Timpanogas, in Provo Canyon, Utah, T. A. Davoud, an electrical engineer, employed at the Telluride Power plant, escaped with two scalp wounds and minor injuries, from which he will probably recover.

BEATEN; THRUST IN FURNACE.

Robbers' Victim Revives When Blazing Coals Scorch Flesh.

Two white men and a negro attacked August Wiseman, watchman of a steam shovel on the Chicago-New York electric line, southwest of Laporte, late at night, beat him into insensibility and shoved his body into the firebox of the boiler of the machine. The coals had been banked but Wiseman's clothing caught fire. Revived by the pain of burning he was able to open the door and reach out and pull the whistle cord. Workmen from a camp not far away ran to his assistance and dragged him out of the firebox. He was terribly burned, but has a chance of recovery. Wiseman was enveloped in flames when the rescuers appeared and pulled him out. He then became unconscious again and it was an hour later before it was possible to learn the story. Then the search for the three assailants was commenced. Rewards have been offered for their arrest. Wiseman said his assailants had demanded whisky or money from him, and when he said he had neither had struck him over the head.

LIGHTNING KILLS; WEDDING OFF

Laporte Girl Had Trousseau Ready When Fiance Meets Death.

The anxiety that has hung over the home of Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Fail of Laporte as the result of the failure to hear from Benjamin E. Thompson of Carpio, N. D., whose marriage to Miss Edna Fail, their daughter, was scheduled for this time, was turned into grief when a telegram from Canada conveyed the information that the bridegroom-to-be and his brother had been killed in an electrical storm. Another brother and a brother-in-law were injured. The four men had gone into Canada some weeks ago on a land inspection tour and were camped in the wilderness when the lightning brought death to two of them. Miss Fail had her trousseau ready and all arrangements had been made for the ceremony.

WRECK OF MONON TRAIN.

Spreading Rails Given as Cause of Accident Near Crawfordsville.

Two trainmen were killed and nineteen persons were injured in the wreck of train No. 3, southbound, on the Monon, three miles north of Crawfordsville, at 1 o'clock Sunday morning. The engineer was pinioned down in his engine and escaping steam scalded him to death, while the fireman was buried beneath the engine. The spreading of the rails caused the wreck and the engine bumped the ties for a distance of 500 feet before the cars leaped the track. The engine toppled over in the ditch at the left of the track. None of the injured will die. They were taken to the hospital, where their injuries were dressed. The wreck was cleared away at noon and the track relaid ready for the passing of trains

TEACHER CAUGHT STEALING.

Daughter of Minister Is Surprised When Ransacking Dormitory.

Sobbing as if her heart were breaking and gasping as if in pain, Miss Myrtle Harsh, aged 23, a school teacher, made to Prosecutor Ladd in Richmond a surprising confession of theft The young woman was caught ransacking rooms of the girl's dormitory at Earlham College. She is now suffering the pangs of remorse behind the bars of the jail at the Home for Friendless Women, charged with larceny. Miss Harsh is the daughter of Rev. Emerson Harsh of West Richmond, pastor of the Second English Lutheran Church, and for three years has been a teacher in the public schools at Greenville, Ohio. Previous to teaching there she graduated from the Ohio State Normal School.

Didn't Like Wife's New Hat.

Melville Pugh, of Terre Haute, pleaded guilty to trampling on his wife's big new hat, for which she caused his arrest on a charge of malicious destruction of property, and his fine and costs amounted to $12. The wife testified that "he never did like the hat, and last night he planted his foot right in the center of it."

AMONG OUR NEIGHBORS.

John W. Brown, believed to be from Indianapolis, was struck and instantly killed by an electric car in Los Angeles.

The plant of the Beach & Fuller Company, manufacturers of baskets and veneers at Evansville, was burned. Loss, $35,000.

Mrs. Elizabeth Adams, 30 years old, stabbed herself to death with a kitchen knife at a fashionable apartment house in Indianapolis.

A man supposed to be Henry Erickson of Chicago fell from a Lake Shore train at New Carlisle and was killed.

In Terre Haute, Melville E. Pugh's plea that his wife's new big hat distracted her attention from him and her household did not save him from a fine of $12 for destroying it.

S. H. Linson was cutting wheat on the Lambert farm near Columbus, when he ran into a swarm of bees. Before he could escape he was stung on the face seventeen times.

Second Annual Reunion

The second annual reunion of the five Sunday Schools Newville, Harlan, Milford, Coburntown and St. Joe, was held in Railroad park, on last Lord's day and proved to be a grand success in every way. Early the crowd began to gather until at 10 o'clock a large Sunday School session was held in which all the five schools participated. Herbert Moninger of Cincinnatti had been secured by the committee in charge to deliver the principal addresses. His subject in the morning was, Literature's Masterpiece, and the audience was captivated with the excellent truths represented so clearly, and his varied illustrations portrayed the subject in such a manner that all were brought in close touch with it at once, after an excellent solo by J. E. Sturgis entitled, "He Will Hold Me Fast." The communion was served then the meeting adjourned for the noon hour. After a bountiful dinner the meeting was opened again with music by the choirs led by J. E. Sturgis. After prayer, Miss Gladys Smith sang a beautiful solo. The vast audience then listened attentively to another magnificent address by Mr. Moninger taking for his theme, "The Value of a Human Soul," after which J. E. Sturgis sang another solo which was appreciated by all. Rev. O. L Hull of Garrett also made a few well chosen remarks. Other ministers present were J. Scholes of Cleveland, Leon Couch of Hamilton and J. A. Brown of this place. The next meeting will be held here again the first Lord's day in August 1910.

Notice of Settlement

Owing to the change in my business all persons knowing themselves to be indebted to me are requested to call and settle up. My books must be closed not later than September 15th. Announcement of changes will be made later.

A Fatal Wreck

Son of Mrs. Sarah M'Crory of St. Joe, Killed. Others Injured.

KALAMAZOO, Mich., Aug. 2—A special passenger train on the Grand Rapids & Indiana railroad loaded with excursionists from southern Michigan points, bound for this city to witness the Barnum & Bailey circus, was wrecked just outside the city limits today at noon within one hundred feet of where a similar accident occurred two weeks ago. As a result one man is dead, two fatally injured and a number of passengers are nursing minor hurts.

The dead:

OLIVER D. M'CRORY, Ft. Wayne engineer of the excursion train, leg cut off, horribly mangled and scalded; died on the way to the hospital.

The injured:

Theodore Krouse, Fort Wayne, fireman; injured internally and taken to hospital; condition serious.

J. E. Lonergan, Fort Wayne, conductor; fractured skull; condition serious.

Ed. M. Hall, baggageman, Grand Rapids, arm broken in three places and internally injured.

The passenger was late and was running at high speed along a sweeping curve just south of the city. A yard engine, the crew of which is believed to have been unaware of the running of a special, stood on the main track just outside of the yard limits. The engineer saw the switch engine when too late and made frantic efforts to stop his heavy train. The crash of the collision was heard for blocks. The switch engine went into the ditch and the passenger engine turned completely upside down.

PAST AND PRESENT

AS IT COMES TO US FROM ALL CORNERS OF THE EARTH.

Telegraphic Information Gathered by the Few for the Enlightenment of the Many.

H. C. Pulliam Shoots Self.

Harry C. Pulliam, president of the National League of Baseball Clubs, attempted suicide in his room in the third floor of the New York Athletic Club in New York City. Standing in the rear of the room, Mr. Pulliam held a revolver to his right temple. He fired only one shot. It went in at the right temple and came out seven inches away on the left side of his head. The bullet destroyed the right eye and passed through the upper part of the left. It is not believed that he can recover, although he continued conscious for some time after the shooting. The sight of both eyes was destroyed by the bullet, the physicians believe. Although the course of the bullet was not traced, it appeared evident that it had entered at least the covering of the brain and it seemed more than likely that the injury to the brain itself was enough to cause death. Although Mr. Pulliam's act at this time was entirely unexpected, some of his friends said that at the time of his recent illness it was known that he was subject to severe attacks of melancholia and his attendants had been reported then as fearful that he would make an attempt on hi ifsle. Since his return to New York in June he had apparently been in excellent spirits.

Orville Wright Breaks Record.

The world's aeroplane record for two men as to both time and distance was broken in a beautiful flight of one hour, twelve minutes and forty seconds, upwards of fifty miles and at a speed averaging about forty miles an hour, by Orville Wright at Fort Myer, with Lieut. Frank Lahm, of the Army Signal Corps, as a passenger. The former record was made last year by his brother Wilbur, joint inventor with him of the machine in which both achievements were performed, at Lemans, France, with Professor Painleve, of the French Institute, as a passenger. That flight was one hour, nine minutes and thirty-one seconds. Wilbur was an eager spectator of today's flight by his brother.

Freight Steamer Went to Bottom.

While the engineer lay asleep in a cabin of the Delaware, a passenger and freight steamer which plies between Trenton, N. J., and Philadelphia, Pa., a watchman on the pier where the boat was docked noticed that the little steamer was slowly sinking. After the engineer was aroused both men worked to save the craft, but the leak which caused the boat to settle could not be found and the craft was soon submerged.

A Revolution in Spain.

The outbreaks in the historically turbulent province of Catalonia, Spain, which started as a protest against the war in Morocco, have reached a stage of open rebellion and revolution. Churches, schools and bridges have been burned and dynamited, railroads wrecked and a convent pillaged. Public buildings have been attacked by an armed and determined mob. The principal sections of the disturbances are Barcelona, Tarragona and Gerona.

Airship Company Formed in Ohio.

The first airship company formed in Ohio has just been chartered by the Secretary of State. It is the Bostel Airship Company, of Cleveland, capital stock $25,000, which is authorized to manufacture and sell airships, aviators, aeroplanes and to transport passengers and freight through space.

Woman Gave Birth to Five.

Mrs. Thomas Renwick, of Newark, N. J., 35 years old, and already the mother of three children, gave birth to five infants, four living and perfectly formed, though very weak, the fifth malformed and dead. None lived more than fifteen minutes.

Political Riots in Mexico.

Over two hundred arrests have been made, a score more or less seriously injured, including two Americans, and two are reported dead as a result of political riots in the city of Guadalajara, Mexico.

Shoots Baby Playmate.

Fred Sydle, aged 7 years, of Kewanna, Ind., picked up a loaded shotgun and playfully pointing it at Thomas Frain, aged 4, pulled the trigger. A full load of shot entered the victim's body. His injuries are fatal.

Oldest Catholic Priest in the World.

Stanislaus Machorski, deacon of Lissowo, died at Thorn, Prussia, at the age of 102 years. He was the oldest Catholic ecclesiastic in the world.

AMERICANS A TRIVIAL, THOUGHTLESS PEOPLE

Prof. Charles Zueblin Tells the Chautauquans That Race Is Too Careless.

WOMEN LEAD IN CIVIC IDEALS

Gentler Sex Solving Its Economic Independence and Labor Unionism Moves Onward.

"The American people, their minds busied with frivolous, unimportant things, are more interested in what is worn on Miss Taft's head than what goes on in Mr. Taft's brain. Absorbed in the transient and trivial, they have little interest in the real significance of such all-important matters as the labor movement, the woman's movement and the higher criticism of the Bible." These were the opinions expressed at Chautauqua, N. Y., by Prof. Charles Zueblin, in explaining his views on democratic culture. "If you don't believe the American people are absorbed in triviality," he said, "read the newspapers. These are not run, as often supposed, by vicious miscreants, intent upon demoralizing human nature. They are run by shrewd men, who are giving the people what they want. It doesn't make any difference what opinions we form concerning these great movements, but we must know what they are and we must have an opinion that is our own and formed without prejudice concerning them or there is evidence of a flaw in our culture." If the men do not hurry up and join the movement for improvement of civic conditions, according to Prof. Zueblin, the cities will be cleaned up in spite of the men. "When we begin to look about us," he declared in reference to the place of women in modern life, "we find that there are many millions of women working outside of their own homes in this country. When we begin to recognize the significance, not only of woman's industrial activity and educational activities, but of the indispensable element of woman's economic independence, we cannot any longer delay the division of sexuality, even though we delay its accomplishment.

"When the intelligent laboring men find that the Supreme Court turns down their most precious principles, then they are going into unions. You cannot stop it, though you may delay it." This was the manner in which Mr. Zueblin expressed his conviction of the inevitableness of the organization of labor. "It is true," he continued, "that the best element among the working men belong to these organizations, but does not control or participate in their government; in exactly the same way the same kind of element does not participate in the municipal government. But more and more the pressure of the factory system will compel these people to come together if they do not get what they are demanding from their own activities, and through that unfortunate fighting that is going on to-day."

STORM DEAD TWENTY-ONE.

Fourteen Missing Along Gulf Coast and Property Damage $750,000.

Twenty-one reported dead, fourteen missing, ten injured and a property loss totaling $750,000 is the result of the storm which raged over the southern coast of Texas Wednesday. Of those missing, thirteen are the members of the families of three brothers Abernathy, who left High Island Tuesday, intending to go to Sabine Pass. They traveled by wagon and were to camp out on the beach during Tuesday night, resuming their journey Wednesday. Part of their equipment has been found, the animals which drew the wagon drowned, but searching parties have found no trace of the three men, their wives or the seven children who made up the party. The storm practically demolished the town of Velasco, but only one life was lost.

U. S. Destroyers Go to Alaska.

Six torpedo boat destroyers which have been in Puget Sound for nearly a month, met at Seattle Monday and then began a long cruise to Alaska, to acquaint officers and men with the northern waters and to give an opportunity for maneuvers. The destroyers are the Whipple, Truxton, Hull, Paul Jones, Perry and Hopkins.

Girls Saved by Sunbonnets.

Using their sunbonnets as bailers when the boat in which they were being driven by a strong wind was filling with water, Miss Marion Weeks and Miss Harriet Lohman, of Yonkers, managed to keep the craft afloat until rescued at South Norwalk, Conn., by Captain Andrew Mills.

CRACKER TRUST HAS RIVAL.

New Concern Is Organized with $6,000,000 Capital.

A $6,000,000 biscuit company, which probably will enter into active competition with the National Biscuit Company (the cracker trust), was organized in Hartford, Conn., the other day, papers of organization being filed with the Secretary of State. The company is organized under the laws of Connecticut and is called the General Biscuit Company. The $6,000,000 capital is to be half common and half preferred stock. Officers of the new company are: President, John B. Summerfield, of the firm of John B. Summerfield & Co., note brokers of 71 Wall street; vice president, Arthur N. Taylor, of Brooklyn; and secretary and treasurer, Henry M. Haviland, of Brooklyn. Mr. Summerfield is a trustee of the City National Bank, Brooklyn, president and director of the Miners' Smelting Company, and a director of the W. H. Beard Dredging Company.

HONESTY BRINGS LIFE POSITION.

Brakeman Restores Fortune in Gems —Wins a Lasting Gratitude.

A black leather handbag has proved to be a veritable Aladdin's lamp for William Robelin, a brakeman on the Long Island Railroad. The brakeman turned the jewels over to railroad officials and they soon found that the bag had been left in the train by Mrs. H. Schwab, the wife of a New York jeweler. Mrs. Schwab and her relatives called for the jewels, which were said to be worth $30,000, and asked to see Robelin. When he was produced they presented him with $100 in cash, provided him with two suits of clothes and instructed him to take two weeks' vacation and then report to the Maiden Lane office of Mr. Schwab to accept a position at $100 a month for life.

WYLLIE'S SLAYER TO DIE.

Indian Student Found Guilty in Trial of Less than Hour.

Sentenced to death after a trial lasting less than an hour, Madarial Dhingri, the Indian student who killed Lieutenant Colonel Sir William Hutt Curzon Wyllie and Dr. Lalaca, in London, England, when asked if he had anything to say told the Lord Chief Justice his sentence was illegal and would be avenged when India had the power now England's. Dhingri refused to plead or defend himself and said he was proud to suffer for his country. A. F. Hossley, publisher of the Indian Sociologist, was sent to prison for four months for publishing incendiary articles.

A $2,500 cash prize has been offered by James Gordon Bennett, which will go to the winner of the championship cup in the international balloon races to be held in Zurich, Switzerland, next October.

Mrs. H. C. Schneiter, of St. Louis, has started on a 1,500-mile pedestrian trip to Boston. She is accompanied by her husband. They will travel about thirty-five miles daily, making the trip in forty-five days.

SIX DEAD, FIFTY HURT IN WRECK

Fireman and Engineer Buried Under Wabash Train in River.

Six are dead and more than fifty injured as a result of the wreck of Wabash passenger train No. 4, bound for St. Louis, near Orrick, Mo., thirty miles east of Kansas City. A number of the injured are badly hurt and the death list may be increased, while many have injuries of only a minor nature. The wreck was the result of the current of the Missouri River undermining the track and causing the train to slide into the river. The engine first plunged into the stream, followed by the baggage and mail cars, a "dead" Pullman car and a chair car. Most of the injured passengers were riding in the chair car. This car was only partially submerged, but was stood on end, throwing the people violently around and causing a number of broken bones and other injuries.

KILLED IN COURTROOM.

Stepfather Slays Nathaniel Parker Willis of Indianapolis.

Shooting over the head of United States Senator Jeff Davis, W. Y. Ellis, a resident of Pine Bluff, Ark., fired a bullet into the heart of Nathaniel Parker Willis, wealthy owner of a liquor cure at Indianapolis, in the Chancery Court room in Little Rock. The killing was the tragic ending of a lawsuit brought by Willis against his divorced wife, who had subsequently married Ellis, for the possession of his child. Willis died almost instantly after he was shot, in the arms of his mother, who was waiting across the room and rushed toward him as he fell in the hallway outside of the court rom. Willis obtained his divorce several years ago and recently started litigation for the possession of the child.

WHITE HOUSE MISTRESS DIES.

Mrs. Elizabeth Dandridge Passes Away at Age of 86.

Mrs. Elizabeth Taylor Dandridge, daughter of Zachary Taylor, President of the United States, and mistress of the White House during the administration of her father, is dead at Winchester, Va. Mrs. Dandridge, who was 86 years old, was a sister of the first wife of Jefferson Davis, President of the Confederacy, and also of the wife of Surgeon General Wood of the army. When General Taylor became President his daughter, then known as Betty Taylor, took the place of her invalid mother as mistress of the White House. Mrs. Taylor died during the administration of her husband.

1,000,000 RAIN HITS DULUTH.

City Is Flooded by the Second Storm of Twenty-four Hours.

Duluth was flooded in the night Wednesday for the second time in twenty-four hours, and the damage may reach $1,000,000. The damage to streets alone will be several hundred thousand dollars. Scores of basements are flooded. Two and three-fifths inches of rain fell in about an hour and a half. The avenues were rivers. The water ran both ways on Superior street and for several blocks each side of Lake avenue. The water was two feet deep on the sidewalk on the lower side of Superior street. The water poured into the floor of the Bijou Theater, where a performance was in progress, and a panic was narrowly averted. The street car service was demoralized. The St. Louis Hotel basement had seven feet of water in it and the house was in darkness. Automobiles were abandoned in the streets for the night.

FOUR BOMB SUSPECTS HELD.

Columbus Police Believe They Have Men Implicated in Murder.

The Columbus, Ohio, police have taken into custody four Italian suspects in connection with the dynamiting of the house of Pasquella Spino, west of the city, when Spino and his young bride of four months were killed and their house wrecked. Included in the list of suspects is Tony Andrania, whose wife is said recently to have quarreled with Mrs. Spino, and who was a former suitor of the latter. Andrania, according to the police, told the mother of the dead young woman a week ago that she soon would be wearing mourning for her daughter.

New York Man Finds Banker's Life Too Quiet, So Turns Burglar.

When Ralph Sherman was caught at Far Rockaway with rich loot taken from the home of Reuben Sadowsky he confessed to the police that in six years he had fallen from the position of foreign correspondent for the firm of Knauth, Nachod & Kuhne, bankers at 13 William street, New York, receiving $5,000 a year, to the crimes of a burglar. Sherman is 27 years old, and speaks seven languages. In the police station-house a gold watch and six stickpins were found in his possession. As he said, he had turned burglar because he was tired of a quiet life in a bank.

Long Branch Fire Swept.

Fire swept across the southern part of the business section of Long Branch, N. J., and caused $100,000 damage. Starting in a livery stable near Second avenue, the flames spread rapidly to frame structures on both sides, destroying a dozen buildings. None of these, however, were of great value, with the exception of the Coulter House, which had not been opened this season. No one was seriously injured.

Shah's Jewels Are Missing.

Mohammed Ali, the ex-shah, is still at the Russian legation in Teheran. His departure has been "delayed" owing to difficulty in discovering the crown jewels, worth many millions.

Illinois Man Dead in River.

The body of a man found in the Missouri River at Kansas City was identified as that of J. C. Gray, of Clinton, Ill. There was nothing to show what caused death.

Work of Congress

After a session of little more than half an hour Friday the Senate adjourned until Monday, which is a day earlier than would have been possible under the unanimous agreement for sessions only on each third day while the tariff bill is in conference. The date was moved up in the hope that the conference report on the tariff bill might be in shape to be presented by Monday. The Senate also listened to a statement by Mr. Culberson that the Democrats had been united on the tariff bill. A large number of presidential nominations were confirmed, including that of Charles R. Crane to be minister to China. In an exciting session in the House Mr. Macon (Ark.) referred to his recent colloquy with Mr. Rucker (Colo.), and charged that the Colorado member had inserted in the Congressional Record certain references to him that had not been uttered. Mr. Macon also objected to the words "great applause." Mr. Rucker entered a general denial, but the Speaker declared the motion to strike the passages from the Record carried. Mr. Randall (Texas) wanted the Speaker to name a committee to consider bills prohibiting members of Congress and court officers from accepting gifts or employment from corporations, trusts or persons interested in legislation. At 1:05 p. m. the House adjourned till Tuesday noon.

-:—:-

After adopting a concurrent resolution empowering the President to transmit to the Governors of the various States copies of the resolution heretofore adopted by Congress authorizing an amendment to the Constitution relative to the levying of an income tax, the Senate Monday at 12:45 o'clock adjourned until Thursday. The postponement of the next meeting day for so long a period was generally construed as indicating the possibility of delay in receiving the report on the tariff bill from the conference committee. An extradition treaty between the United States and the Dominican republic, signed by Santo Domingo on June 19, was ratified and made public by the Senate. The House was not in session.

-:—:-

The Senate was not in session Tuesday. After a session of forty-nine minutes the House adjourned until Thursday, at which time it was expected that the much-talked-of resolution authorizing the tariff conferees to reduce the rates on leather and leather goods below those of the Payne bill will be brought in and acted upon. Some laughter was created by Mr. Clark, the minority leader, remarking that he was being "deviled to death" for information as to when the Democratic conferees were to be called in. "If you can tell me, I'll tell you," was the only consolation he got from Mr. Payne, the Ways and Means chairman. Mr. Tawney, of Minneapolis, aroused the House to a high pitch of excitement when he denounced Dr. Charles Richard Van Hise, president of the University of Wisconsin, for having, as Mr. Tawney said, made false charges against him regarding his attitude on the conservation of the national resources.

Lesson of the Pittsburg Survey.

Reviewing the "Pittsburg Survey" in an article for the April American Magazine, Ida Tarbell says: "This survey is the most awful arraignment of an American institution and its resulting class pronounced since the days of slavery. It puts upon the Pittsburg millionaire the stamp of greed, of stupidity and of heartless pride. But what should we expect of him? He is the creature of a special privilege which for years he has not needed. He has fought for it because he has fattened on it. He must have it for labor. But look at him and look at his labor and believe him if you can." In conclusion she says: "Justice takes a terrible revenge upon those who thrive by privilege. The curse of justice on those who will not recognize injustice, is the sodden mind, the dulled vision, the unfeeling heart."

SPARKS FROM THE WIRES.

THE BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY

CHAPTER XVIII.

The affairs of the Traction Company proved to be in a wretched tangle. Saxton employed an expert accountant to open a set of books for the company, while he gave his immediate attention to the physical condition of the property. The company's service was a byword and a hissing in the town, and he did what he could to better it, working long hours, but enjoying the labor. It had been a sudden impulse on Fenton's part to have Saxton made receiver. In Saxton's first days at Clarkson he had taken legal advice of Fenton in matters which had already been placed in the lawyer's hands by the bank; but most of these had long been closed, and Saxton had latterly gone to Raridan for such legal assistance as he needed from time to time. Fenton had firmly intended asking Wheaton's appointment; this seemed to him perfectly natural and proper in view of Wheaton's position in the bank and his relations with Porter, which were much less confidential than even Fenton imagined.

Fenton had been disturbed to find Margrave and Wheaton together in the directors' room the night before the annual meeting of the Traction stockholders. He could imagine no business that would bring them together; and the hour and the place were not propitious for forming new alliances for the bank. Wheaton had appeared agitated as he passed out the packet of bonds and stocks; and Margrave's efforts at gaiety had only increased Fenton's suspicions. From every point of view it was unfortunate that Porter should have fallen ill just at this time; but it was, on the whole, just as well to take warning from circumstances that were even slightly suspicious, and he had decided that Wheaton should not have the receivership. He had not considered Saxton in this connection until the hour of the Traction meeting; and he had inwardly debated it until the moment of his decision at the street corner.

He had expected to supervise Saxton's acts, but the receiver had taken hold of the company's affairs with a zeal and an intelligence which surprised him. Saxton wasn't so slow as he looked, he said to the federal judge, who had accepted Saxton wholly on Fenton's recommendation. Within a fortnight Saxton had improved the service of the company to the public so markedly that the newspapers praised him. He reduced the office force to a working basis and installed a cashier who was warranted not to steal. It appeared that the motormen and conductors held their positions by paying tribute to certain minor officers, and Saxton applied heroic treatment to these abuses without ado.

The motormen and conductors grew used to the big blond in the long gray ulster who was forever swinging himself aboard the cars and asking them questions. They affectionately called him "Whiskers," for no obvious reason, and the report that Saxton had, in one of the power-houses, filled his pipe with sweepings of tobacco factories known in the trade as "Trolleyman's Special," had further endeared him to those men whose pay checks bore his name as receiver. In snow-storms the Traction Company had usually given up with only a fame struggle, but Saxton devised a new snow-plow, which he hitched to a trolley and drove with his own hand over the Traction Company's tracks.

John was cleaning out the desk of the late secretary of the company one evening while Raridan read a newspaper and waited for him. Warry was often lonely these days. Saxton was too much engrossed to find time for frivolity, and Mr. Porter's illness cut sharply in on Warry's visits to the Hill. He was resting while he waited for the Transcontinental to exhaust its usual tactics of delay and come to trial. On Fenton's suggestion Saxton had intrusted to Raridan some matters pertaining to the receivership, and these served to carry Warry over the interval of idleness and restlessness.

"You may hang me!" said Saxton, suddenly. He had that day unexpectedly came upon the long-lost stock records of the company and was now examining them. Thrust into one of the books were two canceled certificates.

"It's certainly queer," he said, as Warry went over to his desk. He spread out one of the certificates which Margrave had taken from Wheaton the night before the annual meeting. "That's certainly Wheaton's endorsement all right enough."

Raridan took off his glasses and brought his near-sighted gaze to bear critically upon the paper.

"There's no doubt about it."

"And look at this, too." Saxton handed him Evelyn Porter's certificate. Raridan examined it and Evelyn's signature on the back with greater care. He carried the paper nearer to the light, and scanned it again while Saxton watched him and smoked his pipe.

"You notice that Wheaton witnessed the signature."

Raridan nodded. Saxton, who knew his friend's moods thoroughly, saw that he was troubled.

"I can find no plausible explanation of that," said Saxton. "Anybody may be called on to witness a signature; but I can't explain this. He opened the stock record and followed the history of the two certificates from one page to another. It was clear enough that the certificates held by Evelyn Porter and James Wheaton had been merged into one, which had been made out in the name of Timothy Margrave, and dated the day before the annual meeting.

"It doesn't make much difference at present," said Saxton. "When Mr. Porter comes down town he will undoubtedly go over this whole business and he can easily explain these matters."

"It makes a lot of difference," said Warry, gloomily.

"We'd better not say anything about this just now—not even to Fenton," Saxton suggested. "I'll take these things over to my other office for safe keeping. Some one may want them badly enough to look for them."

Raridan sat down with his newspaper and pretended to be reading until Saxton was ready to go.

CHAPTER XIX.

The iron thrall of winter was broken at last. Great winds still blew in the valley, but their keen edge was dulled. Robins and bluejays, coming before the daffodils dared, looked down from bare boughs upon the receding line of snow on the Porter hillside. The yellow river had shaken itself free of ice, and its swollen flood rolled seaward. Porter watched it from his windows; and early in March he was allowed to take short walks in the grounds. He was much weakened by his illness, and though he pleaded daily to be allowed to go to the bank, he submitted to Evelyn's refusal with a tameness that was new in him. Fenton came several times for short interviews; Thompson called as an old friend as well as a business associate. Wheaton was often at the house, and Porter preferred his account of bank matters to Thompson's. Wheaton carried the figures in his head, and answered questions offhand, while Thompson was helpless without the statements which he was always having the clerks make for him. Porter fretted and fumed over Traction matters, though Fenton did his best to reassure him.

He did not understand why Saxton should have been made receiver; if Fenton was able to dictate the appointment, why did he ignore Wheaton, who could have been spared from the bank easily enough when Thompson returned. Fenton did not tell him the true reason—but he urged the fact that Saxton represented certain shares which were entitled to consideration, and he made much of the danger of Thompson's breaking down at any moment and having to leave. Porter dreaded litigation, and wanted to know how soon the receivership could be terminated and the company reorganized. The only comfort he derived from the situation was the victory which had been gained over Margrave, who had repeatedly sent messages to the house asking for an interview with Porter at the earliest moment possible. The banker's humor had not been injured by the fever, and he told Evelyn and the doctor that he'd almost be willing to stay in bed a while longer merely to annoy Tim Madgrave.

"If I'd known I was going to be sick, I guess I wouldn't have tackled it," he said to Fenton one day, holding up his thin hand to the fire. The doctors had found his heart weak and had cut off his tobacco, which he missed sorely. "I might unload as soon as we can rebond and reorganize."

"That's for you to say," answered the lawyer. "Margrave wanted it, and no doubt he would be glad to take it off your hands if you care to deal with him."

"If I was sure I had a dead horse, I guess I'd as lief let Tim curry him as any man in town; but I don't believe this animal is dead."

"Not much,' said the lawyer, reassuringly. "Saxton says he's making money every day, now that nobody is stealing the revenues. He's painting the open cars and expects to do much better through the summer."

"I guess Saxton doesn't know much about the business," said Porter.

"He knows more than he did. He's all right, that fellow—slow but sure. He's been a surprise to everybody. He's solid with the men, too, they tell me. I guess there won't be any strikes while he's in charge."

"You'd better get a good man to keep the accounts," Porter suggested. "Wheaton's pretty keen on such things."

"Oh, that's all fixed. Saxton brought a man out from an Eastern audit company to run that for him, and he deposits with the bank."

"All right," said Porter, weakly.

Saxton came and talked to him of the receivership several times, and Porter quizzed him about it in his characteristic vein. Saxton was very patient under his cross-examination, and reassured the banker by his manner and his facts. Porter had lost his jaunty way, and after the first interview he contented himself with asking how the receipts were running and how they compared with those of the year previous. Saxton suggested several times to Fenton that he would relinquish the receivership, now that Porter was able to nominate some one to his own liking. The lawyer would not have it so. He believed in Saxton and he felt sure that when Porter could get about and see what the receiver had accomplished he would be satisfied. It would be foolish to make a change until Porter had fully recovered and was able to take hold of Traction matters in earnest.

Saxton had suddenly become a person of importance in the community. The public continued to be mystified by the legal stroke which had placed William Porter virtually in possession of the property; and it naturally took a deep interest in the court's agent who was managing it so successfully. Warry Raridan was delighted to find Saxton praised, and he dealt ironically with those who expressed surprise at Saxton's capacity. He was glad to be associated with John, and when he could find an excuse, he liked to visit the power house with him, and to identify himself in any way possible with his friend's work. During the extreme cold he paid from his own pocket for the hot coffee which was handed up to the motormen along all the lines, and gave it out to the newspapers that the receiver was doing it. John warned him that this would appear reckless and injure him with the judge of the court to whom he was responsible.

Though Porter was not strong enough to resume his business burdens, he was the better able in his abundant leisure to gamble over domestic and social matters with an invalid's unreason. He was troubled because Evelyn would not go out; she had missed practically all the social gaiety of the winter by reason of his illness, and he wished her to feel free to leave him when she liked. In his careful reading of the newspapers he noted the items classified under "The Giddy Throng" and "Social Clarkson," and it pained him to miss Evelyn's name in the list of those who "poured," or "assisted," or "were charming" in some particular raiment.

The doctor advised a change for Porter, the purpose of which was to make it impossible for him to return to his work before his complete recovery. Evelyn and the doctor chose Asheville before they mentioned it to him, and the plan, of course, included his son Grant. Mrs. Whipple still supervised the Porter household at long range, and the general frequently called alone to help the banker over the hard places in his convalescence.

A day had been fixed for their departure, and Mrs. Whipple was reviewing and approving their plans in the library, as Evelyn and her father and Grant discussed them.

"We shall probably not see you at home much in the future," Mrs. Whipple said to Mr. Porter, who lay in invalid ease on a lounge, with a Roman comforter over his knees. "You'll be sure to become the worst of gad-abouts—Europe, the far East, and all that."

"I guess not," he said, emphatically. "I never expect to have any time for loafing."

"Well, you're going now, anyhow. Don't let this girl get into mischief while you're away. An invalid father—only a young brother to care for her and keep the suitors away! Be sure and bring her back without a trail of encumbrances, Grant," she said, turning to the boy, "you must protect Evelyn from those Eastern men."

"I'll do my best," the lad answered. "Evelyn doesn't like dudes, and Warry says all the real men live out West."

"I guess that's right," said Mr. Porter.

She rose, gathering her wrap about her. Grant rose as she did. His manners were very nice, and he walked into the hall and took up his hat to go down to the car with Mrs. Whipple. It was dusk, and a man was going through the grounds lighting the lamps. Mrs. Whipple talked with her usual vivacity of the New Hampshire school which the boy had attended, and of the trip he was about to make with his father and sister. They stood at the curb in front of the Porter gate waiting for her car. A buggy stopped near them and a man alighted and stood talking to a companion who remained seated.

"Is this the way to Mr. Porter's stable?" one of the men called to them.

"Yes," Grant answered, as he stepped into the street to signal the car. The man who had alighted got back into the buggy as if to drive into the grounds. The street light overhead hissed and then burned brightly above them. Mrs. Whipple turned and saw one of the men plainly. The car came to a stop; Grant helped her aboard, and waved his hand to her as she gained the platform.

At 9 o'clock a general alarm was sent out in Clarkson that Grant Porter had disappeared.

SITE OF TYBURN TREE.

Marble Tablet Placed on Spot Where Thousands Met Death.

Thousands of English malefactors and thousands who were not malefactors, according to modern ideas, met their death at the hands of the hangman on a spot in one of the busiest centers of London county council, a London dispatch says.

The spot is the site of the famous Tyburn tree, the gallows on which London's criminals were hanged for more than 600 years. It is situated at the junction of Oxford street, Edgeware road and Bayswater road, opposite the marble arch which marks the principal entrance to Hyde Park. Shops and mansions look out on the spot which was once avoided by the superstitious.

The London county council has marked the exact spot where the permanent gallows stood by letting a tablet into the roadway. It bears an excellent representation of the old gallows, surrounded by a triangle with the following inscription:

"Here stood Tyburn Tree. Removed 1759."

The exact site was only fixed after much research and poring over old maps by the county council's archaeological experts. The reason for the difficulty was that different authorities—equally trustworthy—gave two sites for Tyburn tree, and it was not until it was discovered that there were really two of them that the mystery was solved. The spot now marked is the site of the old permanent gallows which it is known was in use in 1196 which was probably standing for many years before than time and which was removed in 1759. It was replaced by a movable gallows which was situated a few hundred yards away and was finally removed in 1783, when it was decided that public executions were barbarous spectacles, and that men and women should be hanged in future within the walls of Newgate prison.

At the time when Tyburn tree was bearing its dreadful fruit its site was far out in the country. Oxford street, now London's greatest shopping thoroughfare, was a country road and was known at Tyburn road. It is the direct route from Newgate prison, in the old city of London, to Tyburn, and it was the last road over which the condemned men traveled, sitting in an open cart with a priest or clergyman standing beside them and a mob of curious spectators following. Half way to Tyburn tree there was a liquor shop known as "Last Drink House," at which the condemned man was always served with a quart of ale. That has long since been destroyed and a great business building stands on its site.

Many famous criminals were hanged on Tyburn tree and it is estimated that at least 50,000 persons met their death there. Claude Duval, the famous highwayman, was hanged there, and John Price, the original "Jack Ketch," the hangman, was hanged for murder in 1710 on the very gallows on which he had hanged so many other men.

A man may live justly by avoiding what he blames in others.—Montaigne.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

William Brown, aged 39 years, of Folsomville, died of lockjaw, due to an injury to his foot when he jumped from a load of hay.

Jacob Click, 50 years old, bachelor, deeded all his property with $2,600, to Methodist Old Folks' Home at Warren. He is to be given care for the rest of his life free.

Mrs. Charles B. Fagan, of St. Paul, was badly burned in a gasoline explosion. After pouring some gasoline into a pan she struck a match. There was a flash and Mrs. Fagan ran screaming with her clothing in flames. The flesh on her arms was cooked. She will recover.

Norman Byrns, the engineer who was killed in the wreck of the Monon passenger train at Crawfordsville last week, was strapped in his cab with a heavy leather belt, which he wore during all his runs. This was used on account of curves and grades and aided him in reversing his engine.

On the farm of Alvin Brailey, eight miles southwest of Bloomfield, near Newberry, a large wildcat was killed by Phenis Cade and his bull terrier. This is the first wildcat killed in Greene County in many years. It is possible the animal is the one that escaped from Brazil a month ago.

Paul H. McNeill, of Bloomfield, has confessed robbing Isaac M. Vaugn, county recorder, of a purse containing $80. An affidavit was field against him. The mother of McNeil gave bond in the sum of $500. On account of the social standing of the McNeill family the affair has caused a sensation.

Horace Shubert, aged 57, a well-known farmer near Elkhart, died of injuries received when his right leg was drawn into his thrashing machine. He undertook to shove wheat straw into the machine and his foot was caught. The leg drawn entirely in before a son could stop the engine in answer to his cries.

More than $5,000 worth of merchandise, consisting of valuable woolen dress goods, was stolen from a freight car on the Nickel Plate railroad just east of Hammond. After it had been hauled in a closed wagon all the way to Grand Crossing the merchandise was recovered through the vigilance of a Chicago policeman.

Mrs. Nancy Raynold, 62 years old, of Linton, and George Wompler, 70 years of age, of Bainbridge, were married at Bloomfield a few days ago. They had been corresponding for six weeks and saw each other only once before the wedding. Mrs. Raynold's husband has been dead twenty-five years. Wompler is a wealthy retired farmer. They will live in Linton.

Relatives in Anderson have been advised of the recent drowning of Henry Miller, 80 years old, a resident of Madison County until two years ago, near Tuttle, Okla. He had been living with his daughter, Mrs. William Lane and family. Mr. Miller was found dead in a foot of water and his faithful dog stood by the body until it was recovered.

A blind woman beggar in Terre Haute could not by reason of her blindness positively identify Clifford Baskett, a crippled mendicant, as the man who took the money from her tin cup, and the police, while sure he was the thief, could not produce legal proof. Judge Gerdink found on his docket that there was a suspended sentence against Baskett on an old charge and sent him to jail for sixty days.

Mrs. H. E. Thomas, living near Shelbyville, recently began saving the egg money with which she intended to purchase a set of false teeth. Mrs. Thomas went to a neighbor's home for an hour or two, and Mr. Thomas and the farm employes were in the harvest field. When Mrs. Thomas returned she found the house had been robbed of the money she had put away and a valuable revolver had also been stolen.

The Indiana Railroad Commission has filed suit against the Evansville Suburban and Newburg Electric railroad, to recover $3,000 penalty and attorney's fees for violation of the anti-pass law. It is charged the company gave a free pass to William J. Becker, of Boonville, in consideration of an agreement with Becker to ship sand over the line of the defendant road. This is the first suit of the kind filed at Evansville.

Conductor Jerry Mahoney, who for nearly twenty years had the reputation of being the luckiest railroader in Anderson, because he had escaped so many accidents, was killed by falling under a freight car in the Pennsylvania yards. Conductor Mahoney belonged to a crew of the Big Four railroad that went to the Pennsylvania yards to transfer cars when he met death. A babe of but six days as well as two other children and his widow survive.

Henry Hoar, said to be the only United States pensioner that never was a soldier or in any way connected with the army, died recently at Salem from a bullet wound received in the John Morgan raid, July 10, 1863.

With no food for five days and sleeping in box cars for several nights, Jacob Owens, aged 51, claiming to live at Columbus, Ohio, was picked up in Evansville unconscious and sent to a hospital. He may die. Owens came to Evansville to look for work.

Years ago the site occupied by the court house at Huntington was a flint ledge from which Indians secured the flint for their weapons.

A horse belonging to Charles McCabe ran into a bunch of barbed wire on the George Wright farm, near Shelbyville, and choked to death.

Joe Palmer, a young man near Decatur, some months ago wrote to Miss Daisy Talbott, of Bedford, whose name he found written on an egg purchased at a Decatur store. Acquaintance followed and now the young people will marry.

Lightning struck the Grand Opera House, St. Stanislaus Polish Catholic church and three dwellings in Michigan City a few days ago. The church was set on fire. All losses are small. A heavy downpour of rain caused many washouts and some of the highways are blockaded.

Charles Watkins attempted to burn the County Jail at Shelbyville. He gathered a bed tick and blanket and removed his clothing, put all in a pile and set it on fire. The fire was burning fiercely when discovered, but was soon extinguished by Deputy Sheriff Laws. Watkins awaits commitment to an insane asylum.

"Dutch" Lyons, of Brook, a well-known grain dealer, is in a critical condition as a result of an automobile wreck north of Morocco. Mr. Lyons was thrown from the machine while it was running at a high rate of speed. He suffered a serious fracture of the jaw and several deep wounds about the face and head.

While William M. Patterson, a wealthy Muncie business man, was driving his new automobile at a rapid rate in Powers street, he turned around a corner and ran squarely into an interurban car on the Union Traction line. The machine was wrecked and Patterson was thrown out, but was not much hurt.

James Southwood, a well-known farmer and stock raiser near Boonville, had an unusual experience with a sick horse. The horse acted as if choked, and when several remedies were applied without avail, Dr. Cook put an instrument down its neck and extracted a coiled piece of baling wire. It is supposed the horse accidentally swallowed the wire while eating baled hay.

Mrs. John S. Sexson, wife of one of the best-known farmers of Greene County, died of lockjaw at her home, a few miles west of Bloomfield. Last week Mrs. Sexson stepped on a rusty nail, which pierced her foot and tetanus developed. She was a member of the Baptist church in Switz City, and the family is one of the most influential in the county. A husband and several children survive.

John H. Luchtman, an aged farmer and veteran of the Civil War, was bitten by a rattlesnake on his farm, five miles south of Michigan City. He was mowing in a meadow and stopped to remove some grass that had choked the sickle, when he touched the reptile and it sank its fangs into his hand. His wrist was bound with twine and he was hurriedly taken to a hospital. He will recover. The snake was killed. It had five rattles.

While attending school twelve years ago, Grover Jones, a clothing merchant of Shoals, inserted a slate pencil in his ear. When he withdrew it he noted that the end was broken and supposed it had fallen on the floor. This week his ear gave him some trouble and on examination it was discovered that the broken end of the pencil was still in the ear. It has not yet been removed, owing to its peculiar location.

An "unlucky dollar" has been returned to the County Treasurer's office in Indianapolis by a taxpayer, who says that he has had nothing but bad luck since receiving it. He insists that the Treasurer gave him a dollar too much in change and that he kept it, in spite of the pricking of his conscience. Since he received it his wife and son have died and he has had other misfortunes, which he attributes to his failure to return the coin that did not belong to him. The coin will be given to some charity fund.

Leonard B. Clore, of Franklin, who represented Johnson County in the recent session of the Legislature, has been notified of his selection as superintendent of judges for the 1910 annual corn exposition to be held in Omaha, Neb. A recent announcement from the directors of the National Corn Exposition barred Mr. Clore from entering any corn in any class. Mr. Clore won the $1,000 trophy and $1,000 in gold last December on his entry of Johnson County white Dent corn, and on a single ear he carried off the first prize, which was an automobile. Mr. Clore has decided that he will not go to Russia to conduct a three years' school of instruction in the raising of corn.

The St. Joseph Valley Traction Company has begun condemnation proceedings to secure its right-of-way for a line between Elkhart and Bristol.

Robert V. Braxtan, a well-known stock man and farmer, was killed last week at Paoli when his horse ran away. The animal became frightened and dashed into a tree, throwing him headlong on the stone pavement and rendering him unconscious. He died two hours later.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

Midsummer trade conditions are sufficiently gratifying to support the feeling of optimism which spreads throughout the lines of activity. Some increase in trading defaults is noted, but this does not detract from the healthy significance of high solvent payments through the banks, ideal crop prospects and heavier operations in factory production and distribution. Wider demands for money indicate that business generally revives under renewed vigor and confidence, and it is not surprising that preparations for the future are substantiated by many heavy demands, involving more drawing upon capacity of the leading industries. Seasonable weather has brought numerous buyers into the markets for general merchandise, furniture, hardware and machinery, and all reports testify to increasing consumption of raw supplies and adequate reduction of retail stocks here and in the interior.

Steel car building gains in this district and more hands are engaged at the mills and forges. Outputs now reach greater aggregate in implements, electric appliances, heavy forgeries, leather and wood working, and the current demands in these branches come from more numerous sources. Movements of raw materials reflect improvement in ore, copper, lumber, cement and wool, but there is decrease in hides and the principal supply for packing.

Bank clearings, $259,703,400, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1908 by 18.9 per cent, and compare with $230,259,787 in 1907. Failures reported in Chicago district number 37, against 29 last week, 35 in 1908 and 29 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 10, against 12 last week, 8 in 1908 and 3 in 1907.—Dun's Weekly Review of Trade.

NEW YORK.

Improvement in the crops, rather better advices as to ultimate outcome of the leading cereals, easing in prices of breadstuffs consequent thereon or because of larger wheat crop movement, a good distribution at retail under the stimulus of clearance sales and a slight enlargement of fall trade with jobbers and wholesalers are the leading features this week. Connected therewith in some degree are the advices from leading industries of enlargement of output, of a continuance of the upward tendency in values of manufactured goods, a larger demand for money for crop moving purposes, and a perceptible increase in the friction visible between employers and employes in a number of lines. This latter is a natural phenomena of the industrial situation, possibly made more noticeable this year by reason of the high level of prices of commodities and the consequent cost of living.

Another rise in the price of crude rubber to $1.85 per pound—an advance of 37 cents since July 1, and of 91 cents over July 1 a year ago—has made the position of rubber manufacturers difficult.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with July 22 were 239, against 206 last week, 263 in the like week of 1908, 155 in 1907, 171 in 1906 and 197 in 1905. Canadian failures for the week number 24, as compared with 36 last week and 24 in the corresponding week of 1908.—Bradstreet's.

MARKETS OF THE WEEK

The adoption of the Payne tariff bill, which is now predicted in the Washington dispatches, seems to afford little promise of relief from tariff debate. Congress will, of course, adjourn as soon as the tariff bill is signed but then will arise in all its fury the question of whether or not the tariff has actually been revised downward, whether President Taft or the Senate leaders has won a victory, whether the tariff commission will or will not prove of genuine assistance in future revisions of the tariff, etc. The subject is actually inexhaustable so it is futile to look for an end of it.

There is one point which stands out strikingly in all the discussion of the tariff and which has been more than ever emphasized in this session of Congress. That is the increasing importance of the position of Chief Executive. There are many Democrats and not a few Republicans who have viewed with alarm the increasing responsibilities which are being imposed on the President. There are conscientious men, in Congress and out, who have devoted much thought to some method of checking this tendency in legislation. But their efforts have not proved availing. The tremendous growth of the country, the increase in numbers of the House of Representatives, far beyond any possible expectation of the framers of the constitution, and the unescapable complexity of the legislation enacted for so large a country with such a variety of interests seems to render it impossible to avoid conferring more and more authority on the Chief Executive and delegating to him powers which a quarter of a century ago would have appaled every thoughtful publicist.

The Payne bill increases tremendously the responsibility of the President. Take the single provision for a corporation tax. In order to make possible the collection of this tax it has been found necessary to provide that federal inspectors may enter the counting-room of any corporation in the country make an exhaustive inspection of its book whenever, in the estimation of the Secretary of the Treasury, an accurate return has not been made to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. To all intents and purposes the Secretary of the Treasury is the alter ego of the President, being the personal selection of the latter and such selection being always confirmed by the Senate without question. Only the personal opinion of the President or of one of his immediate subordinates is to determine when such an investigation of the affairs of a corporation is to be made but it is not amiss to give some thought to the evil which would result from the abuse of such farreaching power. A dishonest President, or one so weak as to be the tool of designing associates, might levy tribute without limit and by such means perpetuate his tenure of office almost beyond calculation.

When Sick

Women suffering from headache, backache, pain inside, or nervousness, or any other ailment resulting from female trouble, should get Cardui and use it regularly. Cardui has been found, by thousands of ladies, to relieve female weakness, by restoring to health the weak womanly organs.

Take CARDUI

Mrs. F. S. Mills, Murietta, Calif., tried Cardui and writes:

"I don't think anyone can recommend a medicine more highly than I can Cardui. I had a mishap, followed by inflammation. I positively believe I would have died, had it not been for Cardui. When I began taking it, I could not stand on my feet. After taking two bottles, I was cured, and I now weigh 165 pounds."

Try Cardui—it will help you. Sold everywhere.

KEPT THE SABBATARIAN LAW

Records of Two Noted Men Cited as a Rebuke of the Laxness of the Present Day.

Two remarkable instances of fidelity to the letter of Sabbatarian law were given at the annual breakfast of the Lord's Day Observance society.

"I am afraid Scotland is leading in the van of Sabbath breaking," said Rev. Lord Blythswood, who presided. "One would think that people would notice and profit by the constantly illustrated fact that the man who observes the Lord's day prospers.

"I have worked for nearly 50 years, and such is my conscience that I would never put a foot in a train on the Lord's day, neither would I use a public conveyance.

"One might say it has prevented me from preaching in many places, but I cannot help that; I have had to drag myself along with the bag that contained my gown."

The other instance was contained in the speech of Prof. Beresford Pite. "The late Sir George Livesey told me," he said, "that he had never spent a Sunday away from his wife.

"Traveling from Glasgow on Saturday, he found that he could only arrive home at Tumbridge Wells by traveling on Sunday, so when he arrived at St. Pancras in the early hours of Sunday morning he walked the remaining distance (more than 40 miles), although over 70 years of age, and attended service at Rochester on the way."—London Express.

MUCH FUN WITH STOP WATCH

Owner Describes a Variety of Ways in Which He Has Found It Affords Him Diversion.

"Having a stop watch," says the man who had just bought one, "reveals a whole lot of ways of amusing yourself that you'd hardly think of before.

"Since I've had a watch I've been able to while away a lot of time. Not a pun, either. For instance, walking in the city where the numbered blocks make calculating easy, I am continually holding the watch on my pedestrian efforts.

"I figure first how long it takes me to walk a block. Going at top speed so that some folks think I'm mad, I have been able to do 88 yards in 29 2-5 seconds, or about seven miles an hour.

"Then, of course, I time all intermediate distances up to a mile. I've learned pretty well just what four miles an hour means, and I want to tell you that folks who speak so glibly about doing that ought to hold a watch on their performances to see what it means.

"The other day I got up some sprint races between some boys just so I could time their running. I find there's a lot of fun, too, in making imaginary bets with myself how long it will take me to catch up with some one else walking in the same direction or how long it will be before a car gets to a certain crossing.

"Also a stop watch is a great thing for timing how long you can hold your breath."

Keeping the Dollar at Work.

The period of waiting between the sowing of advertising seed and the reaping of the sales harvest is often an anxious time for the merchant whose capital is limited.

To the small dealer, therefore, quick returns are of even greater importance than to the big one. He must use rapid-fire mediums. The same money that he invests in publicity today must be available for reinvestment with the shortest possible delay.

The newspaper alone is capable of meeting his requirements. Attractive display in the advertising columns of a live newspaper ordinarily pays its own way, with usurious interest, on the day of publication.—Philadelphia Record.

Better Yet.

"Humph!" says the lady with the extra supply of artificial puffs. "Just listen to this crazy stuff in the woman's department of this magazine: 'To retain your husband's interest in you remember the little traits and ways and mannerisms that won his affections. Be coy, be vivacious. Flirt with him.'"

"Well,"—responds the lady with the shiny nose, "that seems to me to be good advice."

"Humph! To retain your husband's interest in you, flirt with somebody else's husband, my dear."—Life.

The Bees and the Candy Man.

A commercial traveler in North Dakota was carrying a large line of samples of candy and sugar, and it was necessary for him to drive across country with a team between towns. The driver and the traveler noticed that a good many bees were about. Arriving at his destination the traveler visited a prospective customer. He opened up the sample case and was astonished to find about 200 bees at work on the candy and other sweets. The bees were angry at the interruption, but nobody was hurt.

The "Thirteen" Superstition.

According to reliable authorities the popular superstition that attaches to the number 13 owes its origin to the story of "The Last Supper." For unreckoned centuries the superstition has been universal that if 13 persons sit down to a meal at the same table one of them will die before the year is out. This doubtless comes from the Biblical feast when Christ sat down at table with his 13 disciples.

A WHOLE YEAR FOR $1.00

That's what you can do for some friend—send him THE ST. JOE NEWS fifty-two times for only a dollar.

Better than a letter, because it gives ALL the home news each week; there is positively no token you could offer which would make a home so happy in your remembrance as this newspaper mailed to some distant relative or friend.

We are making it just as good as it possibly can be done for $1.00. In fact, lots of publishers have raised to $1.50 on not so creditable a paper as this—and we tell you frankly that when you plank down your dollar on our table for a friend, you'll get your money's worth. This is a good copy to start with. We'll save an extra one until Monday. Yes?

Be on the Lookout

Housewives would do well to be on the lookout for a fellow who is traveling over the country selling hot irons. It developes later, however, that the irons are no good and the $2 98 you paid for them is just so much money thrown away. There are said to be two different gangs on the road, one selling a gasoline iron and the other an iron that is called a carbon iron, which burns a sort of charcoal, which it is said proves to be a poor heater in the hands of an amateur. The fellow selling the gasoline iron was at Peru a few weeks ago and caught a few suckers. The scheme as worked at one place was as follows: An enterprising young man made a house-to-house canvas for a hot iron. The iron was hollow and burned carbon and charcoal. It was guaranteed to run for the small price of three cents a day, besides possessing numerous other advantages. The obliging agent even allowed the skeptical to burn their fingers on the hot iron in order to assure them that it really was hot. Almost every one purchased one for $2.90, besides 60 cents for the carbon. The agent left town quickly, leaving his victims to discover that the iron would not retain heat long enough to iron even a towel properly.

How it Happened

Gust Cupp is getting along very well and his injuries are not as severe as his friends thought them to be at first and the doctor thinks his arm will be useful and his hand not crippled much, if any. He was not caught in the belt as stated last week but on the line shaft that run the belt. He says that they were ripping lumber down stairs and when done the engineer shut off the power for them to throw the belt and Mr. Cupp went upstairs and up the ladder to the roof to fasten the belt up out of the way and had just reached for the strap to fasten it, when his sleeve caught on a set screw and whirled him around the shaft. He does not know how it happened to catch as he had been up there many times and the screw was four feet away from the belt and strap. All that saved his life was that the machinery was not going in full speed.

Henry H. Fales

was a New York native, being born in Wayles, on December 18, 1818 and died at the home of his son in Spencerville July 28, 1909, aged 90 years, 7 months and 10 days. He was a son of Peter and Judith Ann (Cole) Fales, the former a native of Massachusetts, of Welsh descent and the latter of Rhode Island, of English descent. When he was fifteen years of age his parents moved to Trumbull County, Ohio, where his youth was spent in assisting his father in the blacksmith's shop May 10, 1838 he came to Indiana and helped build one of the first mills on the St. Joseph River, at Orangeville, and ran it two years. He then moved to Spencerville, Concord township, DeKalb County, engaged in different vocations till 1844, when he settled on a farm and engaged in agricultural pursuits till 1871, and for twelve years was associated with his son in the furniture and undertaker's business at Spencerville. Since 1883 he has lived retired from the active business of life. Mr. Fales was married February 9, 1838, to Miss Rebecca White, a native of Trumbull County, Ohio, daughter of Ephraim and Betsey White. To this union were born ten children,—Emily, Elisabeth, Eli, Wallace, Orange, Elliot S., Thomas L., William L., Rosa Ann and Malcolm. Four of whom with his wife preceded him. His wife died April 19, 1894. From that time until death, he made his home with his two sons. He and his wife professed faith in Christ and joined the Lutheran church, under the pastoral care of Rev. E. W. Erick about thirty-four years ago.

He leaves to mourn his departure, six children, four sons and two daughters, twenty-two grandchildren, eighteen great grandchildren and a host of distant relatives and friends. The funeral was held from the Lutheran church, Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Rev. Erick officiating. Henry Beams, undertaker. Burial at Spencerville cemetery.

Are Doctors Any Good?

Foolish question! Yet some people act as if a medicine could take the place of a doctor! The best medicine in the world cannot do this. Have a family doctor, consult him frequently, trust him fully. If we did not believe doctors endorsed Ayer's Cherry Pectoral for coughs and colds, we would not offer it to you. Ask your doctor. No alcohol in this cough medicine. J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

If we did not believe doctors endorsed Ayer's Pills for constipation, billiousness, sick-headache, we would not offer them to you. Ask your own doctor about this.

MEAL ALWAYS IN READINESS.

Believer in Corporeal Resurrection Has Table Constantly Spread Adjacent to Tomb.

One of the most curious tombs in the United Kingdom is in County Wexford. In it is laid the body of one of that curious body—the Resurrectionists. One portion of the tomb is a furnished chamber, with a table and a few chairs. On the table will be found at any time a dainty meal of considerable dimensions, with a fowl, a ham, a leg of mutton and the necessary drinkables. The departed Resurrectionist provides by his will that this meal shall be laid each fortnight, and "if the meal is untouched in the mean time, it shall be given to the poor and a fresh meal laid." So far the meal has been untouched, though eerie rumors spread round the district from time to time that in spirit form the gentleman has appeared and has enjoyed his meal. Curious stories are told of poor people to whom the ham or the leg of mutton has been given being awakened in the night by strange rappings on their doors and windows and even by demands in a grim voice for a portion of the food which had been distributed. As a consequence and probably for another sad reason, it has come to be the practice to consume the food immediately it is brought home. It is the only way to counteract the envy of the spirit, with whom apparently hunger is constantly present.

WORK FOR THE INTERPRETER

Flow of Language Used by Chinamen Involving Simple Question and Answer.

A Chinaman was called as a witness in the police court of Los Angeles in the case of a driver who had run over a dog.

"What time was it when you saw this man run over the dog?" asked the judge.

"Me no sabe," replied the witness.

"I say," repeated the judge, "what time was it when you saw this man run over the dog?"

"Me no sabe," repeated John, smiling blandly.

"We shall have to have an interpreter," commented his honor, as he realised that the witness did not understand English; and accordingly another Chinaman was haled into court to act as interpreter. "Ask the witness," commanded the judge, "when he saw this man run over the dog."

The interpreter turned to his fellow countryman and said: "We chung lo, ho me choo lung wow, e-ho me ne chow chee loo kow so-loo bing gong tong yit bun."

To which the witness replied: "Wong lin yee, wo hoo, wing chong lung yue lee kin sing, choy yoke coey ying lung gong wah, shing suey way san yick lin toy bing coey bow taue, po tong po you hung mow kim quong yuen lee ck ow yo ben tong."

The interpreter then turned to the judge and said: "Him say two o'clock."—Lippincott's.

American Simplicity.

An American bishop who was visiting in England was greatly amused, not to say annoyed, by the way the Englishmen addressed him. Indeed, he became heartily tired of "Your Grace."

"When I returned to America," the bishop would say afterward, "you can imagine my surprise and delight, too, when one of my friends, standing on the pier, caught a glimpse of me as I waited to descend the gangplank, and called forth to me, 'Hello, Bish!'"

The Contrary Man

It seems natural for some people to take the opposite of every thing they come in contact with. They are in nearly every case on the other side, unless they happen to venture an opinion first. They are contrary and cannot help it, or at least do not seem to try to help it. I think the real contrary man is one of the poorest things God ever made, unless it is a real contrary woman. A man may be stubborn for what he thinks is a principle, but there is no principle involved with the real contrary fellow. Some fellows just seem to everlastingly have it in their make-up to be on the other side so much that they would not give up when they know themselves to be wrong. If one of them once gets mad at you, he will always be so, though he may have forgotten what the trouble was about. Whenever the really contrary fellow gets mad at you he nearly always fails to speak when he meets you. When this contrary man was made, there was a lack of part of the material that goes to make up a man and he was made narrow and has no power to out grow it. He sticks to his little prejudices because of his narrowness. On account of his narrowness he cannot see on but one side of a thing, and on account of his combativeness he looks on the other side of everything. I sometimes admire these contrary, conceited persons, because it is really wonderful how great an amount of both may be wrapped up in one man of such small calibre. The bull dog has but one idea, but he holds to it like grim death and many people admire him for his grit when this grit was simply in not knowing anything else. As a rule the contrary man is contrary for the same reason.

PRAYER AND ITS POWER.

By Rev. Frank G. Smith.

"Lord, teach us to pray."—Luke xi, 1.

Does the Christian world pray any less or any less earnestly than it used to; what are the facts? Perhaps there is as much saying of prayers as ever before; but saying a prayer and really praying are two different things all together; there is just about as much difference in a real prayer and the mere saying of a prayer as there is in a real, thick, warm, tender, personal letter, addressed in a well known hand, and a very common, ordinary, cheap, finely printed 1 cent circular letter, addressed by an addressing bureau with an addressing machine; and I doubt not that there is just about as much difference in the results obtained. I imagine that God's waste basket is just as capacious and just as handy and just as necessary as ours is; and when this second or third class stuff comes to Him that has no heart in it and no love in it and no hunger in it and no passion in it and no yearning in it and no faith in it and no submission in it and no consecration in it, I imagine a great deal of that stuff goes just where it ought to go, into the waste basket.

Now, let us test this matter out a little on the plane of personal experience. A minister told me recently in a confidential conversation that the morning prayer was a burden to him; that it was the hard part of the service; that he was glad when it was over and he wished he could conduct the service without it. What lies back of that confession? Simply this, that in reality he no longer believes in prayer; God is no longer to him a personal Father, with whom he speaks face to face, even as a man speaketh to his friend; the conceptions that made prayer a power in his life have been dispelled, and it is now only a mere performance; no wonder it is hard for him to pray; you have a little sweet faced, rosy cheeked girl in your home. It is not very hard for you to put your arms about her and draw her up close to you and let the little head rest on your shoulder and kiss the red lips again and again, but it would be a very unsatisfying performance if she were not there. You traveled 500 miles one day, and so did I, to have the blessed privilege of sitting down by mother's side and taking the dear old hand in yours and talking to her for hours. It was not very hard to do, but it would have been exceedingly unsatisfying if mother had not been there.

Let us examine the natural and reasonable and scientific basis of reality in prayer. Generally speaking the philosophy of our day quite universally admits that the material universe is sustained and upheld by an unseen spiritual energy. The finest expression of that spiritual energy is man; man made in the image of God; man with the power to know and feel and choose and do; now man's personality is not in his body, but it is in this spiritual essence that is a very part of God; and this spiritual essence is not centered in one place in my body as in my brain or my heart or my blood, but it is suffused all through my body and is the spiritual counterpart of my material body. So just as my spiritual personality is thus immanent and present in every part of my body all the time, in like manner, God's spiritual personality is immanent in the great universe and the finest and highest expression of that immanence is in man; we are a very part of God; no wonder it has been said, "He is nearer to us than breathing and nearer than hands and feet." His very heart beats within us; our hands are fairly clasped in His and His heart is against our heart. What a real, reasonable, intelligent and natural basis of reality for prayer this gives us.

True prayer is not a telephone business. It is living in the conscious presence of God and believing that He can and will do the best things for us and that to commune with Him constantly makes us ready to receive a larger and larger measure of His gifts. We dwell in God and He in us. Our lives are far more closely linked together than the lives of an earthly parent and child can be. The life of a child is a constant prayer in the life of a parent; it is a constant tug at the parent's heart and the parent does a thousand things for good that he would never do but for that abiding prayer of the child in his life. So the life of a good woman is a constant and abiding prayer in the life of a man, not only for negative goodness, but for positive righteousness. The grip of her life upon his life brings about countless things that never would have come out of his life but for this constant and abiding prayer, that her presence and influence furnishes. We are His children. It is He that hath begotten us. We are all thoughts from the infinite mind, sparks from the infinite flame. It is He that hath made us and not we ourselves, and He hath so arranged it, indeed, by the very nature of things it cannot be otherwise, than that just as sure as the pressure of the hand upon the lever brings certain results, so by the laws with which our lives are bound to His life the pressure of our hearts against His heart in prayer brings definite results that would not otherwise obtain. Men ought always to pray.

Have you prayed for your church? How earnestly have you prayed? It may be that you are not prepared to receive the blessing for which you ask. Pray until the barriers are burned away and until the blessing comes in like the tides. Pray for your children until God makes of you a channel of blessing to answer that prayer. Pray for the sick; pray that by faith they may open up the inner life for the absorption and infusion of that spiritual energy that shall make them well in the use of the appointed means. Pray for the sinning that their inner lives may be opened for the infusion of that eternal spiritual energy that shall cleanse them and keep them. As the engineer lays his hand upon the small lever and beckons to his aid a power that moves tremendous burdens, so lay your hand upon this appointed means and move the world up to the very heart of God. God grant that we may cry out tonight with the disciples of old: "Lord, teach us to pray." For only as we learn the nature, place and power of prayer will we learn to live in constant consciousness of God's presence and power and love of His fatherhood and our sonship. Only as we learn to pray will we come to know by a blessed and truthful experience that "All things work together for good to them that love God."

SOURCE OF ALL SOLACE.

By Rev. P. A. Halpin.

What have I in heaven, and besides thee what do I desire on earth.—Psalms lxxiii:25.

This a cry from the tortured heart of David—a cry from one in need to a friend indeed. Poor, in very truth, is he who calls no man friend, but poorer he who is no man's friend.

This would be a bleak world without affection, and hence the master has established, as a primal source of all solace, a fountain of love springing up perennially in Himself. The fairest and most fragrant flower of that love is friendship. All genuine affection is inseparable from friendship. The friends we have tried and not found wanting are the friends we trust, and where the trial of friendship has been longest our trust is greatest, and so old friends are best.

One there is who outdates and outclasses all other friends. He knows us and He understands, and, above all, He is willing and powerful to help us. He alone possesses the fullest equipment of a friend. He knew us in the eternities. He shapes events so as to make us fit into the marvelous scheme of His universe. He cared for us since our coming into all the bewilderment of this creation. We have walked erect or bent, and often have we stumbled and many times have we fallen. Yet whether upright or prostrate the touch of the strong hand of His friendship has been upon us, even when in insensate moments we have struggled to fling it off.

At all times, sick or ill, waking or sleeping, sad or joyous, His love holds us like the clasp of a mother. Others have, never has He shut a door against us. He was no mere life-saver by feeling or by thirst for fame or by hope of reward. He was all He was to us not because He had pity on us, but because He loved and wanted us. He is walking by our side ever. He meets us at the turn of every road. At every tick of the timepiece we can address ourselves to Him. Whether our feet are in the narrow path and we need courage, or whether we are fighting with swine for their husks, it is always our blessed privilege to appeal to this Friend to keep us uncontaminated or to bring us back from our wandering under the roof of the Father.

Such friendship teaches us our own worth. If He values us so highly, if He thinks so much of us, to what heights of manhood and womanhood may we not climb. How pitiful to be surrounded by such an atmosphere of love and not to live of its vitality. What fools we are to starve amid such plenty. If we realized all this we would not leave this Friend until we had failed with every one else, but our prayer to Him for help would be as our breathing and we would discover beyond doubt that old friends are best, and that of all old friends He, the ancient of days, is verily oldest and best.

SERMONETTES.

Government experts have discovered a new kind of food. It is said to be palatable, wholesome, nutritious, and ought to be reasonably cheap. The food in question is furnished by the seeds of the great yellow water lily, which in Southeastern Oregon have been gathered for many centuries by the Klamath Indians, who depend upon them to a considerable extent for their winter provender. They are so delicious, and so obviously available for consumption by civilized people, that it is thought there would be profit in collecting them on a large scale, preparing them for market by modern methods and putting them up for sale in neat and attractive packages, as a new food luxury.

The aborigines in question dwell among the foothills of the great Cascade range, in a region remarkable for multitudinous springs of icy-cold and crystal-clear water. It is from these springs that two vast water spaces, known respectively as Klamath marsh and Klamath lake, are supplied. The Klamath marsh, writes Rene Bach in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, contains 10,000 acres of the water lilies.

The water lilies are such exceedingly vigorous plants that they practically crowd out all other forms of vegetation over the area they occupy, even to the cat-tails. Thus the 10,000 acres represent that much space exclusively occupied by the "wokas," as the Indians call them. Their seeds are inclosed in large green pods, which when fully ripe undergo quite suddenly a curious sort of decomposition, as one might call it, literally melting and dropping into the water a mucilaginous fluid in which the seeds are most eagerly sought, the seeds having obtained a maximum of flavor and tenderness.

White people in Southeastern Oregon often buy wokas from the Klamaths for their own use, paying from 10 to 20 cents a pound for them—that is to say, for the kernels ready prepared and parched. They like them very much. But the price seems to be rather high, and it is suggested by Dr. F. V. Coville, botanist in chief of the Department of Agriculture, that modern methods might be employed to great advantage in placing the crop on the market. It would hardly be practicable, he says, to gather the pods in any other way than that now adopted, but the processes required for separating, cleaning and otherwise preparing the seeds might be performed inexpensively and advantageously by already familiar milling machines—so as to place the product on the market at a price low enough to enable it to compete with other breakfast foods.

F. Stubbs, an English ornithologist, expresses the opinion that birds habitually make use of storms in traveling from one part of their range to another. He points out that if a bird cannot find shelter, it must be more comfortable on the wing than on the ground during a storm, because in the fiercest gales the air, as a mass, is at rest; that is, the bird is in a moving supporting medium, like a swimmer in a strongly flowing river.

The advantages of oil fuel for stationary and marine boilers are receiving much attention in England. Although the total cost is greater for oil than coal, oil has the advantage of greater convenience, simplicity and cleanliness. It is also more efficient, since a pound of good oil is found to have a calorific value about 35 per cent greater than that of an equal weight of coal. It also occupies much less space, and in that respect is very suitable for ships. Many improvements have recently been made in the methods of spraying and burning the oil.

A curious photograph of a crocodile's nest filled with eggs, from two of which young crocodiles were just issuing, is contributed to Nature by G. W. Grabham. The photograph was made in the bed of the river Rahad, near the frontier of Abyssinia. The eggs were about three inches long, and the newly hatched crocodiles are ten inches long. They are perfectly formed, and utter a sound resembling the croaking of frogs. Before being uncovered, the eggs were buried about three inches deep in the sand at the bottom of a hole a foot deep. The young crocodiles, Mr. Grabham says, were perfectly willing to bite, but not strong enough to do any harm.

Spoiled the Performance.

The play was all about a horse—a famous horse, the autobiography of which is even yet among the "best sellers," and over the sufferings of which thousands of readers have shed tears of sympathy. The four-legged actor that had been cast for the part of the horse was doing his best, presumably to look pathetic.

With drooping head, it stood on the stage, from time to time switching its poor docked tail. One of the two-legged actors was delivering an impassioned and really touching speech, when the audience suddenly burst into a fit of prolonged and uncontrollable laughter.

The oration came to a sudden stop. The actor glanced at the horse, then turned and fled in dismay behind the scenes.

"Black Beauty" was yawning.

THE FINE ART OF MANNERS.

Miss Prindle was a formal and precise old lady who "conducted"—so the phrase ran—a very select sewing class for young girls. Besides being an excellent school for learning needlework, Miss Prindle's Thursday afternoon gatherings were instructed in the niceties of old-fashioned manners. Miss Prindle was herself a model of propriety, and had her pupils tried only to imitate her, their time would not have been wasted.

One day, down-town, Miss Prindle saw coming toward her a girl whom she recognized to be Marion Knight, one of her sewing class. The girl was walking along rapidly, not seeming to notice her teacher. As the two met, Miss Prindle caught her eye, and bowed and smiled in her most formal way. She then passed on, reflecting that Marion would doubtless benefit by the example of her salute, and some time be herself an example to others.

A few rods farther on, to her surprise, Miss Prindle again encountered—so she thought—Marion Knight. The girl was coming toward her, as before.

Miss Prindle stopped.

"Are you—" she began, "are you not Marion Knight?"

"Certainly, Miss Prindle," said the girl.

"And didn't I meet you only a moment ago?" she asked.

"No, Miss Prindle, I think that was my twin sister, Elsie."

Miss Prindle looked her confusion. "And she—she isn't in my sewing class, is she, Marion?"

"No, Miss Prindle; she has been away at school for a long time."

"O dear! O dear!" exclaimed the old lady. "And I don't know her, and I bowed and smiled to her! Oh—Marion, dear, will you tell her just as soon as you see her that I shouldn't have smiled and bowed to her, because I've never met her, you see? It was very bad form, you understand."

"But, Miss Prindle," protested the girl, "I think you met her last year when we first came to live here. Don't you remember? It was at the church fair."

"Oh, so I did!" cried the other, after a moment. "So I did. Well, in that case, Marion, you may tell your sister that I am glad I bowed, but I shouldn't have smiled. Good-by, dear!"

Neglected Opportunity.

Though Swansea, Wales, is in the very heart of the Welsh anthracite coal fields, stoves suitable for burning it are conspicuous by their absence.

FOREIGN-MADE CIGARETTES.

We Import Heavily Despite Our Large Domestic Production.

Though the United States is the greatest cigarette producing nation of the world, there are imported into this country every year more than $3,000,000 worth of foreign made cigarettes, some Turkish and some Egyptian. Turkey is a large tobacco producing country, yielding 50,000 tons of tobacco every year, and the Turks, it is well known, are a nation of smokers. The amount of tobacco raised in Egypt is inconsiderable, and yet Egyptian cigarettes are imported into this country in considerable amounts every year. The explanation of the matter is simple. It seems that the Greek tobacco crop last year was the largest Greece ever harvested—about 200,000,000 pounds. A brand of Greek tobacco is used for Egyptian cigarettes.

Why, it is asked, Egyptian? The answer is that Egyptian cigarettes are made by Greeks, because cigarette paper is too expensive for Greece, where it is a government monopoly. Thus the business has gone over to Egypt. The most famous cigarette makers of Egypt are Greeks.

A very large business in cigarette making has been established in Alexandria, and it is in the hands of Greeks, who import their tobacco from their own country and in turn ship it to foreign countries. England and the United States are the chief markets for Egyptian cigarettes, which are, in fact, Greek cigarettes, those bearing the title Turkish being imported from Turkey direct.

There has been a decided influx of foreigners who manufacture cigarettes, into this country, during the last few years. Americans are inclined to like the taste of the foreign brand better than the domestic product and the manufacture of them is heavy.

ALPINE ADVENTURE.

In the northeastern corner of the Tyrol is the best skee-ground in Europe, writes W. A. Baillie-Grohman in "Tyrol." The region has many lofty peaks, which makes mountain climbing of interest. The author gives one of his adventures on a peak near the village of Kitzbuehel.

"On one of these peaks occurred to me many years ago a little adventure which gave me an opportunity of admiring the grand view rather longer than was pleasant.

"I was out stalking chamois, and having some unoccupied hours in the middle of the day, when stalking is practically useless, as the beasts are resting, I thought I would ascend one of those pinnacles upon which at that time few human beings, I suppose, had ever set foot.

"The very last bit was a smooth-faced rock not more than twelve feet high, but absolutely unclimbable if unaided by rope, or another man, upon whose shoulders one could get, and so obtain a hand grip of the top, and thus draw oneself up. As I was alone, I had recourse to a short length of rope I had in my knapsack. Making a slip-noose, I threw it upward till it gripped some projection. Then I drew myself up.

"While looking about me, an unfortunate movement of my legs, which were dangling over the brink as I sat, caused the rope to slip and fall down to the small ledge on which I had stood when flinging it upward. This ledge, or band of rock, was uncomfortably narrow, not wider than thirty inches, and the abyss below was a perpendicular wall four or five church steeples in depth.

"At first it did not seem such a serious fix to be in. By letting myself drop to the ledge, my extended arms gripping the top, the distance between the soles of my feet and the ledge was not more than four feet or so—nothing to speak of if that yawning gulf had not been there and I had had boots on my feet. But having taken these off and left them below, together with my coat and rifle, I should have to drop on to sharp rocks barefooted, and hence would be very apt to lose my balance.

"The more I considered the position, the more I funked that drop, and to make a long story short I stayed on that pinnacle two nights, until the morning of the third day, before hunger drove me to risk the drop, which I did in safety.

"How I got down the remainder of that descent, 'shinning' down chimneys and creeping along narrow ledges, was a mystery to me afterward, for I was faint with hunger and my knees trembled and shook under me. When I reached the first habitation where I happened to be known, the peasant woman at the door hardly recognized me."

Who Bought Them.

A man engaged in buying a necktie for himself turned the pile over and over, and at last laid aside two as not worthy of further consideration. The salesman picked out one of the rejected ties, and placed it in a separate box. The buyer, according to the New York Sun, asked if the salesman had placed it with those he was looking at by mistake.

"Oh, no," was the response, "but we have orders when five or six men turn down a tie to take it out and put it aside."

"What becomes of them?" asked the other.

"We sell them to women who come in here to buy ties for men."

A SURE SIGN.

When It Appears Act at Once.

Trouble with the kidney secretions is a certain sign that your kidneys are deranged—that you should use Doan's Kidney Pills. They cure all irregularities and annoyances, remove backache and side pains and restore the kidneys to health. Mrs. John B. Whittaker, 303 Jefferson St., Madison, Ind., says: "Kidney trouble caused me to suffer terribly from headaches, backaches and extreme weakness. I had days of depression and languor and at times my ankles swelled. I was nervous and worn out. Doctors and kidney remedies failed to help until I used Doan's Kidney Pills. I am in better health now than I have been for years, thanks to them."

He Delayed the Game.

An Eastern college graduate applied for work in a Michigan lumber camp, says a writer in Everybody's Magazine. He was told to occupy himself with one end of a cross-saw, the other end being in charge of an old and experienced lumberman.

At the end of the second day the young man's strength began to wane. Suddenly the old man stopped the saw a moment.

"Sonny," he said, not unkindly, "I don't mind yer riding on this saw, but if it's jest the same to you I wish you'd keep yer feet off the ground."

Church Without Fees.

The rector at Alderley, England, declared at his vestry meeting that his parish church was now entirely free from fees. He stated that he had a conscientious objection to receiving either marriage or burial fees, and thought they were a source of abuse. Alderley is said to be the only parish church in England where there are no fees.

Just and Merciful.

If we may judge by an isolated example reported in the Kansas City Journal, little girls are well qualified for jury duty. While the lawyers were arguing the case of little Ezra Moulton, charged with incorrigibility, before the probation officer of the juvenile court of Wyandotte County, the judge invited a bevy of little girls, who had come as witnesses, into his private office.

"Now," began the judge, when the little witnesses were all seated in an expectant circle, "now most of you came here in behalf of the defendant, little Ezra Moulton. I have written my decision on this slip of paper. You will each take one of these slips and write on it your opinion as to what the punishment of Ezra Moulton should be—a good whipping by his mother, or several long years in the house of correction.

When the judge returned to the office, after leaving the jury to meditate a few minutes, he found them all in favor of the whipping.

"That was what I had written," said the judge, trimphantly. "The jury is dismissed."

PILES

"I have suffered with piles for thirty-six years. One year ago last April I began taking Cascarets for constipation. In the course of a week I noticed the piles began to disappear and at the end of six weeks they did not trouble me at all. Cascarets have done wonders for me. I am entirely cured and feel like a new man." George Kryder, Napoleon, O.

Eczema Made Hands and Feet Swell, Peel and Get Raw—Arms Affected, Too—Gave Up All Hope of Cure—Quickly Cured by Cuticura.

"I suffered from eczema on my hands, arms and feet for about twelve years, my hands and feet would swell, sweat and itch, then would become callous and get very dry, then peel off and get raw. I tried most every kind of salve and ointment without success. I tried several doctors, but at last gave up thinking there was a cure for eczema. A friend of mine insisted on my trying the Cuticura Remedies, but I did not give them a trial until I got so bad that I had to do something. I secured a set and by the time they were used I could see a vast improvement and my hands and feet were healed up in no time. I have had no trouble since. Charles T. Bauer, R. F. Books.

God be thanked for books! They are the voices of the distant and the dead and make us heirs of the spiritual life of past ages. Books are true levelers. They give to all who will faithfully use them the society, the spiritual presence, of the best and greatest of our race. No matter how poor I am, no matter though the prosperous of my own time will not enter my obscure dwelling, if the sacred writers will enter and take up their abode under my roof—if Milton will cross my threshold to sing to me of paradise, and Shakespeare to open to me the world of imagination and the workings of the human heart, and Franklin to enrich me with his practical wisdom—I shall not pine for want of intellectual companionship, and I may become a cultivated man, though excluded from what is called the best society in the place where I live.—William Ellery Channing.

A Slowly Shifting Center.

In 1790 the center of population in this country was twenty-three miles east of Baltimore, in the State of Maryland, or virtually on the Atlantic shore line. In 1900 the center was in the State of Indiana. Its migration, the Geographical Journal says, has been slow and remarkably uniform, both in rate and direction. It has hovered for one hundred and ten years along the thirty-ninth parallel of latitude, and its total variation in latitude has been less than one-third of a degree.

The westward movement has averaged less than a degree in a decade, notwithstanding the incredibly swift occupation of a vacant continent by a movement of population westward. The easterly position of the center of population is also due to the more evenly distributed and more abundant resources of the United States.

It should not be forgotten that the geographical center of the continental United States lies some hundreds of miles west of the Mississippi River. The eastern half of the country therefore takes in the Atlantic lowlands, the prairies and Great Lake plains, the Gulf lowlands, and the forests and minerals of the Appalachian Mountains and Appalachian plateau. Over against these are the arid and mountainous areas of the West.

Certain areas will be reclaimed to incredible productiveness, and the mineral wealth is vast; but the center of population may be expected to remain permanently to the eastward of the geographical center of the land.

THE NEW WOMAN.

Made Over by Quitting Coffee.

Coffee probably wrecks a greater percentage of Southerners than of Northern people for Southerners use it more freely.

The work it does is distressing enough in some instances; as an illustration, a woman of Richmond, Va., writes:

"I was a coffee drinker for years and for about six years my health was completely shattered. I suffered fearfully with headaches and nervousness, also palpitation of the heart and loss of appetite.

"My sight gradually began to fail and finally I lost the sight of one eye altogether. The eye was operated upon and the sight partially restored, then I became totally blind in the other eye.

"My doctor used to urge me to give up coffee, but I was willful and continued to drink it until finally in a case of severe illness the doctor insisted that I must give up the coffee, so I began using Postum and in a month I felt like a new creature.

"I steadily gained in health and strength. About a month ago I began using Grape-Nuts food and the effect has been wonderful. I really feel like a new woman and have gained about 25 pounds.

"I am quite an elderly lady and before using Postum and Grape-Nuts I could not walk a square without exceeding fatigue, now I walk ten or twelve without feeling it. Formerly in reading I could remember but little but now my memory holds fast what I read.

"Several friends who have seen the remarkable effects of Postum and Grape-Nuts on me have urged that I give the facts to the public for the sake of suffering humanity, so, although I dislike publicity, you can publish this letter if you like."

Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

JOLLY JOKER

Mrs. Briggs—Does your husband take any special exercise? Mrs. Griggs—Yes; he's all the time kicking.

Mr. Summerboard (politely)—Shall I help myself to the beans? Hired Man—You will if you git enny!

Knicker—When he graduated he thought he would save the State. Bocker—And now he is trying to save a dollar a week.

"Your wife doesn't seem to care much for that friend of yours." "No; he's the man I lay the blame on when I'm detained downtown."

"Who's that homely girl you spoke to?" "Sir, that lady has promised to be my wife." "Cheer up. Lots of women don't keep their promises."

Editor—What are you writing? Reporter—A race with death. Editor—Say we call that race off and get it up in some other form this time.

"I've moved to the country now, and planted a garden." "Anything coming up?" "Sure. My wife's family is coming up to spend the summer."

She—Better join our picnic party. He—What's the use, when I can more easily enjoy warm lemonade and sandwiches with ants on 'em in my back yard?

Customer (looking at electric fans)—No, I don't believe I care for a second-hand fan. Dealer (waving his hands)—Vy? Ain' segond-hand air as good as any?

Hub—Reckless and extravagant—I? When did I ever make a useless purchase? Wife—Why, there's that fire extinguisher you bought a year ago; we've never used it once.

"I don't believe in hiding my light under a bushel," remarked young Sapleigh. "You would be foolish to do so," rejoined Miss Slashem, "when a pint cup would more than hide it."

Fond Mother—Tommy, darling, this is your birthday! What would you like to do? Tommy, Darling (after a moment's reflection)—I think I should enjoy seeing the baby spanked.—Figaro.

"It's hard to lose a beautiful daughter," said the wedding guest sympathetically. "It's a blamed sight harder to lose the homely ones," replied the old man who had several yet to go.

"Mean thing!" exclaimed Mrs. Newliwed; "it's just brutal of you to call it 'this stuff.' You said you'd be glad if I baked my own bread——" "Yes, dear," replied the brute, "but I didn't say you should bake mine."

Critic (as the composer plays his last piece)—Very fine indeed. But what is that passage which makes the cold chills run down the back? Composer—That is where the wanderer has the hotel bill brought to him.—Fliegende Blaetter.

Mr. Budworthy—Rather clever fellow, that young Dudelong, don't you think? Miss Pewstules—I really could not tell. He scarcely uttered a word the whole time he was here. Mr. Budworthy—Sly dog! He knows when he is at his best.—Puck.

"How did you manage to see everything in Rome inside of two days?" "Well, you see, we got up early, my wife went to the shops, my daughter to the picture galleries, and I took in the restaurants. In the evening we compared notes."—Fliegende Blatter.

Miss Passay—This gold dollar was given to me by my grandfather when I was christened. It was just coined shortly after my birth. See, it is dated 1880. Miss Sharpe—Yes, how considerate of them to have the coiner date it so far ahead.—Philadelphia Press.

Towne—It's all well enough to talk about forgiving our enemies, but, I tell you, it's a hard thing to do. Browne—That's what it is. We should not be expected to forgive our enemies except when they freely admit that they don't deserve our forgiveness.—Philadelphia Press.

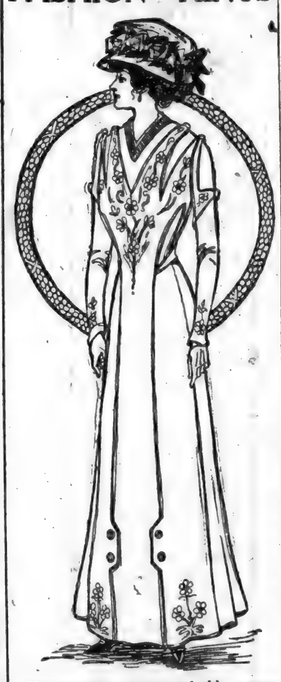
She (indignantly)—Why did you fail to keep your appointment with me yesterday? He—I'm awfully sorry, but I was compelled to wait in a restaurant until it was too late. She (icily)—Pardon me, but I thought you had a position in a bank. I wasn't aware that you were a waiter.—Tit-Bits.

Merchant's Wife (suddenly appearing in her husband's office)—Ha! I thought you said your typewriter girl was an old maid? Merchant (much confused)—Um—er, yes, m'dear, of course, of course; but she is sick today, and she sent her little granddaughter as a substitute.—Philadelphia Record.

Epicure—Waiter, this steak is positively bad. It must be three weeks old. Waiter—Ah, pardon, monsieur! I have made se meestake, and have brought you se venison. Epicurean—Venison? Oh, yes! Then you may leave it. (Tastes it.) Ah! to be sure, it is venison; and very nice, too—very nice, indeed!—Town Topics.

Mrs. de Temper (looking up from the paper)—Well, I declare! Another woman, single-handed, has captured a burglar. I should think she would have been killed by the brute; but the papers say the moment she grabbed a poker and made a dash for him, his knees trembled and his teeth shook, and he sank to the floor in affright. Mr. de Temper—He is probably a married man.—New York Weekly.

FASHION HINTS



The attractive feature of this ponge gown is the embroidery done in daisy pattern, in silk to match the material. The waist and sleeve effect is also novel.

A Martyr to Poesy.

Jim Bludso was holding 'er nozzle agin the bank.

"It ain't my business to do that," he said. "That's the pilot's job. But if I don't do it, begosh, it'll knock thunder out o' John Hay's pome!"

Raising his voice again, amid the thick, black smoke, he continued to cheer the galoots on the burning boat with his cussedness.

A Sad Lack.

Speeder—That auto of mine doesn't go fast enough."

Roaster—What's the matter?

Speeder—Several victims have complained that they knew what struck them, which means something defective. And I am not cruel.

Clearly Unprejudiced.

The attorney for the prosecution was examining the talesman with the bushy whiskers.

"Mr. Skiles," he said, "you say you have read about this case. Have you formed or expressed any opinion concerning it?"

"No, sir," responded the possible juror; "I never believe nothin' I see in the newspapers."—Chicago Tribune.

Sore throat is no trifling ailment. It will sometimes carry infection to the entire system through the food that is eaten. Hamlins Wizard Oil is a sure, quick cure.

A Joke's Life.

"What becomes of a joke when it gets too old for the newspapers?"

"It goes on the stage."

"And after that?"

"To the theatrical program."

"Where it ends its existence, I s'pose."

"Oh, no; it lives honorably for many years in Congressional cloakrooms."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

QUEER TROPICAL DISHES.

Colonel Roosevelt Will Have Opportunity to Sample Many.

While Colonel Roosevelt is in Africa, says the New York Press, he will have an opportunity of tasting that delicious dish, baked elephant's foot. The Elephas Indicus or Elephas (Lozodon) Africanus walks on his toes and the balls of his feet. The real foot of an elephant extends up some distance from the ground. Like the "trotter" of the hog, the foot of the elephant is full of gluten, and the flesh, if properly baked, is very tender, tasting something between pork and chicken. From a freshly killed elephant the foot is cut off at the ankle and baked in a hole in the ground which has previously been heated with hot stones left in the bottom. The foot having been put into the hole, which is made just about big enough to receive it—some natives line the hole with green leaves—sand is shoveled over it and it is left to cook. One must not be in a hurry for his dinner. When taken out and the thick skin peeled away a delicious morsel awaits the epicure.

Alligator soup and roast lion may be had for the ex-presidential table if supplies run short in the African wilderness. A few years ago a famous French naturalist gave a dinner in the Rue Richelieu, Paris, at which these "dainties" were served. Alligator soup tastes very much like clear turtle soup. People who have eaten roast lion pronounce it to be of a savory and delicate flavor, but a trifle tough.

Somewhere in his wanderings Colonel Roosevelt will strike the land of camels and may have a chance to partake of the flesh of the "ship of the desert." Camel's flesh is white like veal, but tastes like beef. The Arabs consider the hump a great delicacy. As to roast monkey, Captain Clapperton, the African explorer, declares that "they are by no means unpleasant to the taste. In fact, nine out of ten would eat them with the certain conviction that they were eating rabbit, and not bad rabbit, either."

Give and Take.

Councilman Henry Bolte, of Atlantic City, is pushing a bill to prohibit cameras on Atlantic City's incomparable white beaches.

"There are cameras and cameras," said Mr. Bolte the other day, "and some of them do nothing but good. Yet I am convinced that all must go, though I can see the other side of the question, too. Every question has its two sides. It is like the dialogue of Diogenes and Aristippus. Aristippus one day passed by Diogenes the cynic, where he sat before his tub eating cabbage. Diogenes saluted with a sneer the splendidly clad Aristippus at the head of his glittering retinue.

"'Oh, Aristippus,' he said, sourly, 'if you knew how to live on cabbage, you would not have to flatter kings.'

"Aristippus waved his hand airily to the pessimistic philosopher.

"'Oh, Diogenes,' he retorted, smiling, 'if you knew how to flatter kings you would not have to live on cabbage.'"

On the Other Hand.

Another terrific eruption of Mount Vesuvius had just taken place.

"There it goes again!" exclaimed the despairing observers on Mars. "The people on that planet have been flashing signals at us now and then for hundreds of years, and in our crude state of development we have not been able to devise any way to respond!"

Not Yet, but Sometime.

Man from the City—You intend to keep bees, I suppose.

Suburbanite—Some day, perhaps. At present we are devoting our entire energies to keeping a cook.

Quick Growing Flowers.

One morning you drive through the woods and see nothing but the usual green of winter; two days after on the same road you behold afar what seems to be a huge white sheet showing through the tree trunks and bushes, says a Pass Christian correspondent in the St. Louis (Mo.) Globe-Democrat. It is not a sheet—merely a solid curtain of Cherokee roses, waxy, white, fragrant and blooming so thickly that only here and there is any green to be seen.

A big dead tree that has been showing gray and hideous for months turns overnight into an enormous purple bouquet; it is the work of a wistaria, sending down showers of lavender sweetness with every puff of wind. Sweet olive, bridal wreath, wild jasmine and fifty others rush into a prodigality of bloom that seems a wicked, delightful extravagance to northern eyes, and the noble army of lilies marches up the side of each path and waves its banners beneath every wall.

With His Usual Thump.

Mrs. Jenner Lee Ondego—Did you feel that earthquake shock this morning?

Mrs. Seldom Holme—Very distinctly; but I thought it was my husband getting out of bed.

SOLID GOLD & SILVER AWARD
For the Best Ear of Corn
To be Known as the W. K. Kellogg National Corn Trophy
To be Awarded at the
National Corn Exposition, Omaha, December 6 to 18, 1909.

Over one hundred thousand million (100,000,000,000) ears of corn were grown in the United States last year. Over a billion dollars were paid for them. More than a million and a quarter extra dollars went into the pockets of the farmers for corn this year than they received for the previous year's crop.

The reason for this may be found in the fact that the people of the United States are beginning to learn how delicious corn is and to realize its full food value.

Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes has placed corn among the indispensable items of daily fare.

The makers, therefore, are interested in the development of the King of Cereals, and have decided to award a beautiful trophy for the man, woman or child who can produce the best ear of corn in two different seasons.

Professor Holden, of the Iowa State College, the greatest authority on corn in the world, will award the prize at the National Corn Exposition, to be held at Omaha, Neb., December 6th to 18th, 1909. Two single rules will govern the plan, and they are:—that you send your best ear of corn to the National Corn Association., Omaha, Neb., before November 27, 1909; and that you are a member of the National Corn Association. Full particulars regarding which can be had by writing to National Corn Exposition, Omaha, Neb. Tie a tag securely to your specimen and word it, "For the Kellogg Trophy Contest," and write your name and address plainly. If yours is judged the best, you will get the trophy for 1910. If you succeed again next year or the year following, the trophy will become your property for all time. In other words, you must produce the best ear of corn two different years.

There will be no restrictions. Any man, woman or child belonging to the Association can enter. It will be open to every state in the Union. Professor Holden will judge the corn particularly on the basis of quality. The growing of more corn per acre is one object of the award, but the main purpose of the founder of the trophy is for

Harry Kees had the fire quenched by the time the citizens arrived. A very large crowd had gathered in a few minutes with pails and ladders ready for business.

J. W. Sherer, living north-west of town, had quite an experience with a hugh owl, last Sunday. It was seen to have taken a young turkey and he followed it to the woods where it had commenced to eat it. Upon approaching the owl flew into a tree and when Mr. Sherer came close, it flew at him and struck him in the face making several severe scratches. He immediately sent for a gun and the animal was killed, and when measured the wings were 55 inches long.

The St. Joe people who were in attendance at the Union Sunday School picnic at Cold Springs says that it was a decided success. This year witnessed the largest attendance of Sunday School scholars and workers of any year since these gatherings were instituted. A forenoon and afternoon program of readings and music was given. Rev. P. H. Welsheimer, of Canton, O., gave interesting and instructive addresses, speaking both forenoon and afternoon, on Sunday School work. The Hamilton band furnished music during the day. Boating and bathing and the tobboggan slide furnished amusement for many of the older ones present as well as for the children. W. S. Renner was chosen chairman for the ensuing year, E. E. Swaidner, secretary, and Mrs. Ella Farnum, treasurer. Representatives from various schools of the country were chosen as associate members of the committee on arrangements. The next annual picnic will be held at the same place on August 4, 1910.

Sends Her Thanks.

The following is the reproduction of a letter written for Mrs. Elisabeth Widney, by Mrs. T. A. Fredrick of Salina, Kansas.

Dear Friends:—

We wish to send a few lines through the columns of THE NEWS, thanking the editor and all the other dear friends who so kindly helped in making the postal shower on Mrs Elisabeth Widney such a grand success. She received greetings from seven different states. This was due to the large circulation of THE NEWS. The number of beautiful greetings she received far exceeded our expectations. There were about 160 postal greetings besides 48 different beautiful colored pictures of Seattle and exposition buildings. To say that she was surprised doesn't express it at all. When we piled nearly a peck of them in her lap and told her that was her mail for that day, I wish you could have seen the look of surprise and astonishment on her face. She did not seem to know where to begin, so we proceeded to help her look them over and read the few words of loving remembrance written on nearly every one and as we would read the name of some almost forgotten old friends, she would exclaim, "Well my land, how did she happen to think of me", or "For pity sakes how did they know it was my birthday", or "Isn't this or that a beauty," and they were indeed the most beautiful collection of their kind we have ever seen. We enjoyed them almost as much as she although we did not know half of them. But she remembered everyone. And now she said (when we told her that it was THE NEWS that had made it so widely known that the 22nd. day of July was her 78th., birthday) you must send a little message and have them give my heartiest thanks to each kind friend. When we ask her what would have pleased her better, she said, nothing. She will spend many otherwise lonely hours looking them over.

Notice of Settlement

Owing to the change in my business all persons knowing themselves to be indebted to me are requested to call and settle up. My books must be closed not later than September 15th. Announcement of changes will be made later.

Must Prepay Charges.

Recent instructions sent to some of the local express companies call attention to the federal statutes relative to the shipments of liquor and the companies are enforcing the law. The companies will only accept for shipment goods marked, and the shipping bill shows the nature and quantity of the liquor. No liquor is shipped C. O. D. as this would make the company the seller. No package will be delivered even if all charges are prepaid except to a bona fide consignee. This means that the liquor cannot be sent and delivered to a fictitious person or name. One of the local companies now has a case of liquor on hands which was sent to a man under a fictitious name and which it cannot deliver under the law

The penalties under the federal law for violation of the statute range from a prison sentence of from one to two years and fines not to exceed $5,000 for each offense.—Gazette.

Here on Tour of 20,000 Miles

Dr. Frank Wise Goodell, M. D., of Effingham, Ill., a grandson of Judge Herrick, one of the early judges of the state, arrived here Thursday from his home on a 20,000 mile tour of the United States and Mexico He is stopping with an aunt, Mrs. Electa J. Ryan, of north east of St. Joe. On Friday afternoon he made THE NEWS a very pleasant call, giving a brief discription of his tour.

This exclusive tour has been arranged in detail and will be for three purposes—to see the country, to visit the old family landmarks of the Goodell and Herrick families and to visit physicians and hospitals all over the country. From Fort Wayne Dr. Goodell goes to southern Michigan, thence to Ann Arbor, into Ohio, where his mother was born; to New York, where his grandfather was born; to Weatherfield, Vt., to Windsor county, where his father was born; to New Hampshire, Maine, Salem, Mass., New York City, Chicago, Rochester, Minn.; through Iowa, Nebraska, Wyoming, Yellowstone park and Montana to Seattle; down through California, lower California, the southwest, Texas, into Mexico, back through Texas, Indian Territory, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Tennessee, Georgia, Florida, and up the coast and through the middle west and Indiana again and back to Illinois. When he started on this tour he attempted to find a ticket agent who would make him a complete ticket for the entire trip but none would volunteer the monumental task and he is buying his tickets from place to place.

Fairview Picnic

Last Saturday in John Knight's grove, near the Fairview church was held by that Sunday School one of the largest and most successful picnics held in years. The day was an ideal one, the weather just right for a picnic. The crowd was large, estimated at six hundred. The program was an excellent one, consisting of songs, recitations and addresses. The Mt Pleasant, Newville U. B., Dillon Chapel, Norris Chapel, Rehobeth, Concord and St. Joe M. P. schools attended in a body each having a large delegation. Addresses were made by Rev. Brown of the St. Joe Christian church, Rev. Metchler of the Dillon Chapel U. B. church and Rev. McCain of the local church. Each Sunday School furnished songs and recitations. All were good and highly appreciated by the large audience that sat and listened for 2½ hours. It was in every sense of the word a religious picnic The dinner was an excellent one and just as advertised. The cash net proceeds amounted to $101.50. The funds are to be used for the improvemene of the church. Friends of the church and members of the Concord church rendered valuable assistance during the entire day. The Fairview church feels very grateful to all who worked so nobly for the success of the day, especially the Concord and Rehobeth bands and the speakers. The success of this picnic established the fact that a picnic will pay conducted along strictly religious lines.

Who Was It?

A few days ago an article was going the rounds of the papers relative to the mobbing of one George Johnston, at Platte City, Mo. It seems that Johnston secreted himself and from Ambush shot and killed a man by the name of Moore. D. J. Baker wrote the Mayor of Platte City and gave a description of our George Johnston which tallied exactly with the George Johnston who was hanged by the mob, except Mr. Baker described Johnston's hair as inclined to curl and the Mayor said he could not tell about that as the man's hair who was taken from the jail and hanged by the mob was clipped close. The Mayor gave it as his opinion that he was our George, and expressed a willingness to render any assistance he could to accurately identify the body.

PAST AND PRESENT

AS IT COMES TO US FROM ALL CORNERS OF THE EARTH.

Telegraphic Information Gathered by the Few for the Enlightenment of the Many.

Blue Laws Are Out.

Both houses of the Connecticut Legislature have passed a bill repealing the so-called "Blue Laws" relating to Sunday observance, which forbid almost every form of recreation and secular activity. The laws, which have been seldom enforced are relics of enactments by the law-giving body of 1722. The new Sunday bill is short. It defines the Sunday and prohibits all sports and secular activties "except such as are demanded by necessity and mercy and such as are for the general welfare of the community." Under the words "general welfare of the community" Sunday baseball is probably permitted and the advocates of the bill admit that the courts must interpret the wording in several places.

Over A Million.

A dispatch from Washington, D. C., says: Carrying an aggregate appropriation of $1,100,000 or $666,000 more than as originally reported, the conference report on the urgent deficiency appropriation bill was adopted by the House. Bitter opposition was directed against the provisions of the bill respecting the establishment of a customs court and providing for the purchase of automobiles for the Vice President and the Speaker, but all attempts to send the report back to the conferees for amendment were defeated. The bill as passed made no provision for the payment of salaries of judges and officers of the court.

Chicago's Chief of Police Resigns.

The announcement has been made by Mayor Busse of Chicago, Ill., that George Shippy, chief of police, had sent in his resignation to the Mayor. Chief Shippy has been in very poor health for several months and at present is on an indefinite leave of absence. Barnard J. Mullaney, secretary to the Mayor, will probably succeed Shippy as chief.

Ten Firemen Injured.

Ten firemen were injured while fighting a fire that caused a loss estimated at $15,000 to the feed stables of the Union Stock Yards Company on Hares Island, near Pittsburg, Pa. Two of the men were given the oxygen treatment in an effort to revive them. The fire was of unknown origin.

Mother and Babe Drowned.

The bodies of Mrs. Julius Neneth, 21 years old, and her eight-months-old son, were found in the Morris Canal at Newark, N. J. It is believed that the woman drowned herself and her child. The woman's husband was arrested on the testimony of neighbors that there was trouble in the Neneth apartments the previous night.

Is $50,000 Short.

Calhoun Harris, secretary and assistant cashier of the Orr cotton mills at Anderson, S. C., has been arrested, charged with breach of trust. Expert accountants who are going over his books announced that $50,000 was missing. Harris says the apparent shortage will be found due to clerical errors.

Meets Death at Throttle.

Engineer O. D. McCorry, of Fort Wayne, Ind., was killed and three other trainmen were severely injured when a special Grand Rapids & Indiana passenger train collided with a freight train at the First street crossing in Kalamazoo, Mich. Baggageman Ed. M. Hall, Fireman Crouse and Conductor Charles Lonergan were cut and bruised.

A Gasoline Explosion Kills Five.

An explosion from gasoline followed by a destructive fire in a four-story building on West Third street, St. Paul, Minn., is known to have caused the death of five persons—two children, a woman and two men—and the injury of four men and three women. The police think that four more persons are still in the ruins.

Nine Million for New Freight Cars.

Contracts have been awarded by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company for freight cars to cost between $8,000,000 and $9,000,000. The cars will replace old equipment on the lines east of Pittsburg and Erie.

WRIGHT MEETS U. S. TEST.

Orville, with Passenger, in Airship Surpasses Requirements.

Orville Wright Friday night attained a hard earned success. In a ten-mile cross country flight near Washington in the aeroplane built by himself and his elder brother, Wilbur, and accompanied by Lieutenant Benjamin D. Foulois, of the army signal corps, he not only suppressed the speed requirements of his contract with the United States government but accomplished the most daring flight ever planned for a heavier than air flying machine.

He broke all speed records over a measured course and established the practicability of the aeroplane. Wright's speed was more than 42 miles an hour. He made the ten-mile flight in 14 minutes and 42 seconds, including the more than twenty seconds required for the turn beyond the line at Shuter Hill, the southern end of the course. He attained a height in crossing the valley of Four Mile run of nearly 500 feet, and the average altitude of his practically level course was about 200 feet.

President Taft arrived at the parade ground at Fort Myer just in time to see the aeroplane land and to participate in the demonstration which welcomed the triumphant aviators. He sent Colonel Treat, commanding officer of the artillery at Fort Myer, to bear his congratulations to the victors.

MEXICO SHAKEN BY QUAKES.

Capital and Dozen Other Towns Hit —Fourteen Dead.

Central Mexico, from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from Querato on the north to Oaxaca on the south, a distance covering more than 1,000 square miles, was shaken at an early hour Friday by a series of the most severe earthquake shocks felt in the region for the last quarter of a century. Reports telling of the loss of life are not complete, but the official figures show that fourteen persons were killed, while more than a score probably were fatally injured.

A message sent by G. Poyres, commercial traveler, from Chilpancingo, says the place has been completely destroyed. The inhabitants are living in the open and suffering greatly from the elements. The shocks continued for several hours, accompanied by subterranean rumblings and electrical storms. The towns reported hit by the quakes and the extent of damage done are:

Santa Julia—Several killed; property damaged.

Mexico City—Six killed, several hurt; property damaged.

Chilpancingo, State of Guerrero—Partly destroyed.

Acapulco, State of Guerrero—Partly destroyed.

Pueblo—Houses damaged and one person dead.

Vera Cruz—Property damaged.

Oaxaca—Property damaged.

Tlacotalpan—Property damaged.

Silicayoapam—Property damaged.

Merotheon—Property damaged.

Pachuca—Property damaged.

Jalapa—Property damaged.

Toluca—Property damaged.

Chilapa, State of Guerrero—Property damaged.

SEES SPOUSE HUG; KILLS 2.

Woman Slays Husband and Girl She Finds Him Embracing.

Tired of being made a slave by the man she married sixteen years ago, Mrs. Tony Panella, wife of a prominent East End grocer, in Canton, Ohio, fired two bullets through his head when she found him embracing Clara Pizzana, his clerk. Death was instantaneous. Then she turned the revolver on Mrs. Pizzana. Being too excited to shoot, she threw it down and secured a large butcher knife, with which she slashed the woman until death came. Later, with the bloody knife still in her hand, she went to a nearby barber shop, where she telephoned the police: "They got what they deserved. I am not sorry for my crime," she said.

PRETTY GEM THIEF SOUGHT.

Sigmund Klobber Bewails Loss of Diamond to Fair Highwayman.

The Chicago police are seeking a pretty, fashionably dressed young woman who early Tuesday morning robbed Zigmund Klobber of a diamond stud valued at $60. According to Klobber's story to the police he met the young woman in Lincoln Park. Her bewitching smile induced him to make overtures of friendship and he had no difficulty in engaging her in conversation. The girl, who was not more than nineteen years of age, says Klobber, suggested a walk, and the two strolled north in North Park avenue. At Tell place Klobber's companion stopped, and, turning quickly, snatched his diamond stud from his shirt. She ran north and disappeared into an alley.

INSURRECTION IN SPAIN WHICH ENDANGERED ALFONSO'S THRONE.

(From the Chicago Examiner.)

New photograph of Spain's ruler and his Queen, who hastened home from San Sebastian to a throne endangered by insurrection; typical group of the Moorish soldiers; Premier reported to have resigned; harbor at Barcelona, where the insurrection brought about a state of siege with heavy loss of life; royal palace, guarded by troops whose loyalty is doubtful, and map showing cities affected by the insurrection and war.

MADE IMMUNE FROM TYPHOID.

Soldiers Undergo Test and Prove the Value of New Serum.

The last of the series of typhoid tests have been applied to Sergeant Fuller and Privates Schmidt and Goodman, of Fort Omaha, and they have been pronounced immune. In June they were vaccinated with typhoid serum and developed the disease in a mild form. Later they were vaccinated, but the serum did not "take." Ten days ago they underwent the supreme test, that of drinking freely of a gallon of stagnant water into which one million fever germs had been placed. The men were placed in the hospital and closely watched. They should have developed symptoms within five to seven days, but as none has appeared they are now declared immune.

Democratic Leader Announces Lone Star State as His New Home.

William Jennings Bryan is to move to Texas. He said so in the course of an interview preceding his delivery of his "Prince of Peace' lecture in Bellefontaine, O. He declared he intended to move to Texas following a South American tour on which he will start this fall. "I am not to seek election to the Senate from Nebraska," he said. "I am not going to be a Nebraskan, for I am going to move to Texas. I expect to continue in politics in Texas."

In view of the reported reconciliation of the opposing elements, it is recommended, however, that general amnesty be proclaimed, and that it be made the occasion of a national holiday.

TEN KILLED IN WRECK.

Trains of Spokane and Inland Line Collide at Coldwell, Wash.

Ten persons were killed and at least sixty were injured in a head-on collision of electric trains on the Spokane and Inland Railway Saturday afternoon. The wreck occurred at Coldwell, Wash., a station between Couer d'Alene, Idaho, and Spokane. No. 20 west-bound train had left Couer d'Alene at 4:30 p. m., and just reached Coldwell when it met No. 5, east bound. Both trains were going at the rate of about fifteen miles an hour. They crashed together without warning to the crew or passengers. The heavily laden coaches were crushed. Men ando women were thrown from their seats, some being hurled to the top of the coaches, while others were sent flying through the windows. Several coaches left the track, and passengers were caught under the pile of broken timbers. The Couer d'Alene hospital is now filled with the injured. Only one of the train crew is reported injured.

Billion Feet of Water Loose.

The Empire reservoir nineteen miles northwest of Fort Morgan, Colo., holding 2,500,000,000 feet of water, broke Monday night, releasing 1,000,000,000 feet, causing $500,000 damage to ranches and rushing down the south Platte river. No lives were lost.

TRY TO WRECK TREASURE TRAIN

Obstruction on Burlington Track to Ditch Car with $250,000.

As a passenger train on the Burlington was rounding a hazardous curve for the station of Belmont, ten miles out from Crawford, Neb., the engineer discovered on the track a few rods ahead an obstruction composed of steel rails. Engineer Wade stopped the train within a few feet of the obstruction. It is said that the express car contained $250,000 in gold bullion billed to New York city. A farmer named Chris Berger, found near the spot, was arrested. He pleads innocence, saying he was at the point to flag the train to get into Alliance for medical aid. Berger has a badly torn arm, caused, he says, by the accidental discharge of a shotgun.

A blackmailer attempted to obtain $10,000 from James A. McClurg, son-in-law of Banker D. C. Moffat, of Denver, by sending a note demanding the money under threat of kidnaping Frances McClurg, his 17-year-old daughter, and dynamiting the family home. McClurg was instructed to put the money in a sealed package, and give it to a messenger boy who would call for it. McClurg notified the police, and when the boy called he was followed by detectives, but the blackmailer must have seen the detectives, as he never appeared to meet the boy.

HOUSE ADOPTS TARIFF CONFERENCE REPORT

Vote Is 195 to 183—Twenty Republicans Against Two Democrats Favorable.

ALLEGED JOKERS UNEARTHED

Sensation Caused by Discovery of Tricks with Respect to Lumber and Leather Rates.

The House of Representatives in Washington adopted the conference report on the tariff bill Saturday night by a vote of 195 to 183. Previously a motion to recommit the bill to conference was defeated by a narrow margin—186 to 191. The previous question on the motion to recommit was ordered after the House had been in continuous session for ten hours. Twenty Republicans voted against the adoption of the report. They were:

Cary (Wis.)	Miller (Minn.)
Davis (Minn.)	Murdock (Kan.)
Gronna (N. D.)	Nelson (Wis.)
Haugen (Iowa)	Nye (Minn.)
Hubbard (Iowa)	Poindexter (Wash.)
Kelfer (Ohio)	Southwick (N. Y.)
Kendall (Iowa)	Steenerson (Minn.)
Lenroot (Wis.)	Stevens (Minn.)
Lindberg (Minn.)	Volstead (Minn.)
Mann (Ill.)	Woods (Iowa)

Two Democrats, Broussard and Estopinal of Louisiana, voted for the report. The Republicans voting to recommit the bill were twenty-two in number, as follows:

Cary (Wis.)	Miller (Minn.)
Davis (Minn.)	Murdock (Kan.)
Good (Iowa)	Nelson (Wis.)
Gronna (N. D.)	Norris (Neb.)
Haugen (Iowa)	Nye (Minn.)
Hubbard (Iowa)	Pickett (Wash.)
Kendall (Iowa)	Poindexter (Wash.)
Lenroot (Wis.)	Southwick (N. Y.)
Lindberg (Minn.)	Steenerson (Minn.)
Madison (Kan.)	Vreeland (N. Y.)
Mann (Ill.)	Woods (Iowa)

Chairman Payne made the motion to recommit to shut off Representative Mann, who was ready to move to recommit with instructions. Under the rules only one motion to recommit is in order, and the strategy of Mr. Payne, who voted against his own motion, of course, prevented a direct vote on any specific feature of the conference report.

Of even greater interest, in some respects, than the formal proceedings in the House was the alleged discovery of startling jokers in the conference report with respect to lumber and leather. These alleged jokers were brought to notice through the meeting of the progressive Senators Saturday afternoon, and in circles where the information penetrated it caused a decided sensation.

CHAPTER XX.

Wheaton sat in his room the next evening, clutching a copy of a Gazette extra in which a few sentences under long headlines gave the latest rumor about the mysterious disappearance of Grant Porter. Within a fortnight he had received several warnings from his brother marking his itinerary eastward. Snyder was evidently moving with a fixed purpose; and, as Wheaton had received brief notes from him couched in phrases of amiable irony, postmarked Denver, and then, within a few days, Kansas City, he surmised that his brother was traveling on fast trains and therefore with money in his purse.

He had that morning received a postal card, signed "W. W.," which bore a few taunting sentences in a handwriting which Wheaton readily recognized. He did not for an instant question that William Wheaton, alias Snyder, had abducted Grant Porter, nor did he belittle the situation thus created as it affected him. He faced it coldly, as was his way. He ought not to have refused Snyder's appeals, he confessed to himself; the debt he owed his brother for bearing the whole burden of their common youthful crime had never been discharged. The bribes and subterfuges which Wheaton had employed to keep him away from Clarkson had never been prompted by brotherly gratitude or generosity, but always by his fear of having so odious a connection made public. He was face to face with the crucial moment where concealment involved complicity in a crime. His duty lay clear before him—his duty to his friends, the Porters—to the woman whom he knew he loved. Was he equal to it? If Snyder were caught he would be sure to take revenge on him; and Wheaton knew that no matter how guiltless he might show himself in the eyes of the world, his career would be at an end; he could not live in Clarkson; Evelyn Porter would never see him again.

The Gazette stated that a district telegraph messenger had left at Mr. Porter's door a note which named the terms on which Grant could be ransomed. The amount was large—more money than James Wheaton possessed; it was not a great deal for William Porter to pay. It had already occurred to Wheaton that he might pay the ransom himself and carry the boy home, thus establishing forever a claim upon the Porters. He quickly dismissed this; the risks of exposure were too great. He turned all these matters over in his mind. Clearly the best thing to do was to let the climax come. His brother was a criminal with a record, who would not find it easy to drag him into the mire. His own career and position in Clarkson were unassailable. Very likely the boy would be found quickly and the incident would close with Snyder's sentence to a long imprisonment. He would face it out no matter what happened; and the more he thought of it the likelier it seemed that Snyder had overleaped himself and would soon be where he could no longer be a menace.

He went down to dinner late, in the clothes that he had worn at the bank all day and thus brought upon himself the banter of Caldwell, the Transcontinental agent, who sang out as he entered the dining-room door:

"What's the matter, Wheaton? Sold or pawned your other clothes? Come on now and give us the real truth about the kidnapping," said Caldwell with cheerful interest. "You'll better watch the bank or the same gang may carry it off next."

"I guess the bank's safe enough," Wheaton answered. "And I don't know anything except what I read in the papers." He hoped the others would not think him indifferent; but they were busy discussing various rumors and theories as to the route taken by the kidnapers and the amount of ransom. He threw in his own comment and speculations from time to time.

"Raridan's out chasing them," said Caldwell. "I passed him and Saxton driving like mad out Merriam street at noon." The mention of Raridan and Saxton did not comfort Wheaton. He reflected that they had undoubtedly been to the Porter house since the alarm had been sounded, and he wondered whether his own remissness in this regard had been remarked at the Hill. His fingers were cold as he stirred his coffee; and when he had finished he hurriedly left the room.

He felt easier when he got out into the cool night air. His day at the bank had been one long horror; but the clang of the cars, the lights in the streets, gave him contact with life again. He must hasten to offer his services to the Porters, though he knew that every means of assistance had been employed, and that there was nothing to do but to make inquiries. He grew uneasy as his car neared the house, and he climbed the slope of the hill like one who bears a burden. He had traversed this walk many times in the past year, in the varying moods of a lover, who one day walks the heights and in the next plunged into the depths; and latterly, since his affair with Margrave, he had known moods of conscience, too, and these returned upon him with forebodings now. If Porter had not been ill, there would never have been that interview with Margrave at the bank; and Grant would not have been at home to be kidnaped. It seemed to him that the troubles of other people rather than his own terrors were bearing down the balance against his happiness.

Evelyn came into the parlor with eyes red from weeping. "Oh, have you no news?" she cried to him. He had kept on his overcoat and held his hat in his hand. Her grief stung him; a great wave of tenderness swept over him, but it was followed by a wave of terror. Evelyn wept as she tried to tell her story.

"It is dreadful, horrible!" he forced himself to say. "But certainly no harm can come to the boy. No doubt in a few hours——"

"But he isn't strong and father is still weak——"

She threw herself in a chair and her tears broke forth afresh. Wheaton stood impotently watching her anguish. It is a new and strange sensation which a man experiences, when for the first time he see tears in the eyes of the woman he loves. Evelyn sprang up suddenly.

"Have you seen Warry?" she asked—"has he come back yet?"

"Nothing had been heard from them when I came up town." He still stood, watching her pityingly. "I hope you understand how sorry I am—how dreadful I feel about it." He walked over to her and she thought he meant to go. She had not heard what he said, but she thought he had been offering help.

"Oh, thank you! Everything is being done, I know. They will find him tonight, won't they? They surely must," she pleaded. Her father called her in his weakened voice to know who was there and she hurried away to him.

Wheaton's eyes followed her as she went weeping from the room, and he watched her, feeling that he might never see her again. He felt the poignancy of this hour's history—of his having brought upon this house a hideous wrong. The French clock on the mantel struck seven and then tinkled the three quarters lingeringly. There were roses in a vase on the mantel; he had sent them to her the day before. He stood as one dazed for a minute after she had vanished. He could hear Porter back in the house somewhere, and Evelyn's voice reassuring him. The musical stroke of the bell, the scent of the roses, the familiar surroundings of the room, wrought upon him like a pain. He stared stupidly about, as if amid a ruin that he had brought upon the place; and then he went out of the house and down the slope into the street, like a man in a dream.

While Wheaton swayed between fear and hope, the community was athrill with excitement. Rewards for the boy's return were telegraphed in every direction. The only clue was the slight testimony of Mrs. Whipple. She had told and re-told her story to detectives and reporters. There was only too little to tell. Grant had walked with her to the car. She had seen only one of the men that had driven up to the curb—the one that had inquired about the entrance to Mr. Porter's grounds. She remembered that he had moved his head curiously to one side as he spoke, and there was something unusual about his eyes which she could not describe. Perhaps he had only one eye; she did not know.

Raridan and Saxton, acting independently of the authorities in the confusion and excitement, followed a slight clue that led them far countryward. They lost the trail completely at a village fifteen miles away, and after alarming the country drove back to town. Meanwhile another message had been sent to the father of the boy stating that the ransom money could be taken by a single messenger to a certain spot in the country, at midnight, and that within forty-eight hours thereafter the boy would be returned. He was safe from pursuit, the note stated, and an ominous hint was dropped that it would be wise to abandon the idea of procuring the captive's return unharmed without paying the sum asked. Mr. Porter told the detectives that he would pay the money; but the proposed meeting was set for the third night after the abduction; the captors were in no hurry, they wrote. The crime was clearly the work of daring men, and had been carefully planned with a view to quickening the anxiety of the family of the stolen boy. And so twenty-four hours passed.

"This is a queer game," said Raridan, on the second evening, as he and John discussed the subject again in John's room at the club. "I don't just make it out. If the money was all these fellows wanted, they could make a quick touch of it. Mr. Porter's crazy to pay any sum. But they seem to want to prolong the agony."

"That looks queer," said Saxton. "There may be something back of it; but Porter hasn't any enemies who would try this kind of thing. There are business men here who would like to do him up in a trade, but this is a little out of the usual channels." Saxton got up and walked the floor.

"Look here, Warry, did you ever know a one-eyed man? It has just occurred to me that I have seen such a man since I came to this part of the country; but the circumstances were peculiar. This thing is queerer than ever as I think of it."

"Well?"

"It was back at the Poindexter place when I first went there. A fellow named Snyder was in charge. He had made a rats' nest of the house, and resented the idea of doing any work. He seemed to think he was there to stay. Wheaton had given him the job before I came. I remember that I asked Wheaton if it made any difference to him what I did with the fellow. He didn't seem to care and I bounced him. That was two years ago and I haven't heard of him since."

"Who's at the Poindexter place now?"

"Nobody; I haven't been there myself for a year or more."

"Is it likely that fellow is at the bottom of this, and that he has made a break for the ranch house? That must be a good lonesome place out there."

"Well, it won't take long to find out. The thing to do is to go ourselves without saying a word to any one. Let's make a still hunt of it. The detectives are busy on what may be real clues and this is only a guess."

"I can't imagine that fellow Snyder doing anything so dashing as carrying off a millionaire's son. He didn't look to me as if he had the nerve."

"It's only a chance, but it's worth trying."

In the lower hall they met Wheaton, who was pacing up and down. He was afraid of John Saxton; Saxton, he felt, probably knew the part he had played in the street railway matter. It seemed to him that Saxton must have told others; probably Saxton had Evelyn's certificate put away for use when William Porter should be restored to health. This went through his mind as John and Warry stood talking to him.

"Wheaton," said Saxton, "do you remember that fellow Snyder who was in charge of the Poindexter place when I came here?"

"What—oh yes!" His hand rose quickly to his carefully tied four-in-hand and he fingered it nervously.

"You may not remember it, but he has only one eye."

"Yes, that's so," said Wheaton, as if recalling the fact with difficulty.

"And Mrs. Whipple says there was something wrong about one of the eyes of the man who accosted her and Grant at Mr. Porter's gate. What became of that fellow after he left the ranch—have you any idea?" Raridan had walked away to talk to a group of men in the reading room, leaving Saxton and Wheaton alone.

"He went West the last I knew of him," Wheaton answered, steadily.

"It has struck me that he might be in this thing. It's only a guess, but Raridan and I thought we'd run out to the Poindexter ranch and see if it could possibly be the rendezvous of the kidnapers. It's probably a fool's errand, but it won't take long, and we'll do it unofficially, without saying anything to the authorities." His mind was on the plan and he looked at his watch and called to Raridan to come.

"I believe I'll go along," said Wheaton suddenly. "We can be back by noon tomorrow," he added, conscientiously, remembering his duties at the bank.

"All right," said Warry. "We're taking bags along in case of emergencies." A boy came down carrying Saxton's suit case. Wheaton and Raridan hurried out together to The Bachelors' to get their own things. It was a relief to Wheaton to have something to do; it was hardly possible that Snyder had fled to the ranch house; but in any event he was glad to get away from Clarkson for a few hours.

(To be continued.)

THE DRINKING HABIT.

We are Exceeding the Liquid Requirements of the Organism.

It would be idle to deny that the drinking habit has reached almost the proportions of a pastime among us. We no longer drink only when we are thirsty. We drink when surrounded by our fellows to promote good fellowship just as we drink when alone to escape from boredom; we drink when we are merry and we drink when we are depressed. In short, we drink much and often.

Each has his favorite tipple. Tea, that mild distillation of the Orient, is the beverage of gossip and literature, suggesting placid rumination and a quiet setting. Soda, ginger beer and the thousand and one concoctions of the corner soda fountain tempt the abstemious, above all in hot weather. Wines and more ardent spirits administer a fillip to the nerves of those who are addicted to the use of alcoholic stimulants. Each after his fashion indulges in some kind of excess.

The secret of this indulgence in liquid refreshment of various sorts is to be found largely in the fact that each season sees a multiplication of the beverages that are agreeable to the taste. We drink not because we are thirsty, but because the flavor is pleasing to the palate, and in doing this some physicians contend we are exceeding the liquid requirements of the organism. In considering this matter editorially the Lancet remarks:

"The thirsty person who cannot satisfy his thirst unless the beverage contains what is in reality a drug has really acquired an unhealthy habit, or, to put it plainly, a disease. Yet what else is the alcohol of the various alcoholic beverages, the caffeine of tea and coffee, the glucoside or quinine of bitters, or even the ginger of ginger beer or of ginger ale, the aromatic oil of the liqueur, the carbonic acid gas in soda water, the citric acid of the lemon and so on but a drug? All these clearly convey something into the organism over and above water itself; they cannot quench thirst in the sense that water does."

The medical journal goes on to ascribe the great growth of this habit of drinking liquids other than water to the fear that water may contain disease entities. It ends with a warning that persistence in the habit frequently manifests its ill effects in a disturbance of function which may result in harm to the entire organism.

Rothschild's Rules.

The greater financiers or business men frequently give to the public wise maxims for success. But it is not always definitely known whether these maxims were formulated when the particular Captain of Industry was a barefooted boy selling newspapers or since arrival at the pinnacle of fame.

It is, therefore, the more interesting to read the rules formulated before final success by Rothschild—the Rothschild, the man who founded the house and was Europe's greatest financier. He placarded the walls of his banks and counting rooms with maxims. Here are a few of them:

Carefully examine every detail of your business.

Be prompt in everything.

Take time to consider, and then decide quickly.

Dare to go forward.

Be brave in the struggle of life.

Make no useless acquaintances.

Pay your debts promptly.

Learn how to risk your money at the right moment.

Employ your time well.

Be polite to everybody.

Never be discouraged.

Then work hard and you will be certain to succeed.

Getting Rich.

"How did you get the money to buy paints to finish your big picture?" asked the sympathetic intimate of the struggling artist. "Pawned my coat." "Oh! And how much did you get for your picture?" "Nearly enough to get my coat out."—London Globe.

Work of Congress

When the Senate met Friday Senator Hale, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, reported the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, with amendments necessary to carry out certain provisions of the new tariff law. After five minutes' open session the Senate went into executive session, and a few minutes later adjourned until 12 o'clock. Entering upon the last stages of its consideration by Congress, the tariff bill as reported by the conferees was submitted to the House by Chairman Payne and ordered printed in the Congressional Record. Three hundred and fifty of the 390 members were in their seats when Chairman Payne passed up to the Speaker's desk the bulky document which has occupied the attention of Congress for four and half months.

-:—:-

Provision was made for the administration of the new tariff law by the adoption by the Senate Saturday of numerous amendments to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, which was passed. In addition to the salaries for judges and other officials and employes of the new United States Court of Customs Appeals the Senate appropriated $100,000 to aid the State Department in making treaties, $25,000 for the President's traveling expenses, $100,000 to pay the expenses of the advisory board which will assist the President in carrying out the duties imposed upon him by the maximum and minimum provision and $100,000 to defray the expenses of a bureau which will enforce the collection of the new corporation tax. The Senate voted to reduce the salaries of the judges of the new Customs Court to the amount received by Judges of United States Circuit Courts. Salaries of the government attorneys who will try customs cases also were reduced. The House adopted the conference report on the tariff bill, 195 to 183, twenty Republicans voting adversely. A motion to recommit the bill to conference was lost by a narrow margin.

-:—:-

Several Senators insisted that the conference report be read in full Monday to avoid undue haste, and the Senate dragged through a seven-hour session. Senator Daniel opened the debate on the report, charging that the Democratic members of the Finance Committee had been dealt with unfairly in that they had not been permitted to vote in committee on the adoption of the report. He claimed that an agreement entered into for that purpose with Mr. Aldrich had been violated. Intentional violation was disavowed by Mr. Aldrich, who could not agree with Mr. Daniel as to what had occurred between them. Senator Bristow said the bill did not keep party pledges and he would not vote for it. The conference report on the Philippine tariff bill was agreed to by the House. The measure is supplementary to the Payne tariff bill and is intended to provide enough additional revenue to make up the amount which will be lost to the Philippine government by the enactment of the provision for free trade between the United States and the Philippines. A bill granting a franchise for the construction of a dam across the Savannah River was passed. The remainder of the session was taken up with a discussion of the urgent deficiency appropriation bill as amended by the Senate. One of the amendments provided for carriages for the Vice President and the speaker, and all of them were disagreed to.

-:—:-

When the Senate met Tuesday it was at once apparent that opposition to the conference report on the tariff bill had collapsed, and an agreement was soon reached to vote on the measure at 2 o'clock Thursday. The Western Senators agreed to vote on the bill at that time under the understanding that a concurrent resolution would be passed correcting the hide and leather schedule. The change will make manufactured leather dutiable at 10, instead of 15 per cent. Senator Culberson said he would seek to have cotton bagging included in the concurrent resolution. Mr. Aldrich in replying to Mr. Newlands said that the conference provision giving the President power to secure information on the maximum and minimum clause would be found more effective than the Senate clause. Senator Clapp attacked the conference report and Senator McCumber supported it. After being in session seven minutes the House took recess until 3 o'clock in the afternoon. In answer to Mr. Clark (Missouri), Mr. Dalzell (Pennsylvania) said the adjournment was moved in order that the members might take action on the conference report on the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, and that the tariff bill would not be brought in. When the House reconvened there was a very slim attendance, and the report was not ready, so the House adjourned.

FROM FAR AND NEAR.

The four-story brick building in Pittsburg occupied by the Kirby Shoe Company burned. Loss, $75,000.

Fire that swept the business district of Orange, Va., caused $75,000 damage, only partially covered by insurance.

While bathing at Medicine Hat, Alberta, two employes of the Canadian Pacific Railway, John Ritchie and William Shaw, were drowned.

VOTERS BEAT TOM JOHNSON.

Cleveland Mayor's 3 Cent Carfare Grant Beaten in Referendum.

Mayor Tom L. Johnson on Tuesday received the most severe defeat of his career in Cleveland when the Schmidt street railway grant was turned down at the referendum election by a majority of 3,763 votes after a campaign which has been the most bitter of recent years. The vote stood: For the grant, 31,022; against, 34,785.

The Schmidt grant provided for a 3 cent fare line on Payne avenue for a distance of two and one-half miles and was intended as the basis of a system that would absorb all the franchises of the Cleveland railway company as they expired next January, and force a settlement of the eight years' fight on terms to suit Johnson.

TOM L. JOHNSON.

With the defeat of the Schmidt grant, the alternative evidently desired by the public is the so-called Taylor plan, suggested by Federal Judge Taylor, which provides that new grants shall be made to the Cleveland Railway Company on the basis of an income of 6 per cent to the stockholders at a fair valuation, the fare to be as low as this income will allow with good service on all lines.

Mayor Johnson early admitted his defeat and stated that the fight would go on even though he is beaten at the mayoralty election in the fall. What move he will make next has not been announced.

MOB TRIES TO LYNCH OFFICIAL.

Fury Is Brought On in City Council Over Politics.

The City Council of Indianapolis was virtually in the hands of a mob from 1 to 3 o'clock Tuesday morning and the feeling was so intense that the police had to be continually on guard to prevent violence. The situation was brought on by a combination of Democrats and Republicans, which had for its object, it is alleged, the appointment of primary election inspectors that would be favorable to N. W. Harding, Republican candidate for Mayor, and Charles B. Clark, Democratic candidate for the same office. Lew Shank is the opposing Republican candidate and Charles Gauss the opposing Democratic candidate.

Councilman Royce, a Harding man, slipped out of the chamber just as the vote was announced in Harding's favor and was pursued by a mob with cries of "Hang the scoundrel!" "Shoot the traitor!" and other denunciations. The mob passed on his rear, and seeing no other means of escape Royse ran to the police station. Officers succeeded in protecting the trembling Councilman.

To frustrate an alleged attempt on the part of combinations to get control of the water power sites of the country and to carry out the policy of the administration for the conservation of the nation's natural resources, approximately 42,000 acres of land for water power sites were temporarily withdrawn in Colorado, Montana and Utah by Acting Secretary of the Interior Pierce in Washington.

Big Car Plant for Chicago.

The Pressed Steel Car Company will build a new $2,500,000 plant at Chicago for making passenger cars. Plans had been prepared to build the plant at McKees Rocks, Pa., but adverse criticism by the public and newspapers regarding the strike at the McKees Rocks plant has changed the arrangement.

Blind Negro Slays Two in Row.

A blind negro, angered by the bartender's refusal to serve him more liquor, pulled out two revolvers in a crowded saloon, killing two men and seriously wounding a third. William F. Sasson is the man under arrest on two charges of murder.

1,000 Drowned in Manchuria.

News has reached Tokio of a terrible flood in the Province of Changchun, Manchuria. In the City of Kirin, situated at the head of steam navigation on the River Sungari, 225 miles from Mukden, 1,000 people have been drowned and 7,000 houses submerged.

Woman Slays Assailant.

Mrs. Hannah Gibson, living in a hamlet near Coatesville, Pa., shot William Thompson of Lancaster, Pa., inflicting a wound from which he died. Mrs. Gibson has not been arrested. She told the police that while gathering wood the man attacked her with a stick.

$60,000 Blaze in Omaha.

In Omaha, Neb., fire damaged the Omaha Printing Company to the extent of $60,000. The loss is covered by insurance.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

Business conditions assume more strength and the final action upon tariff revision imparts buoyancy to various important branches. The latter is reflected by further accumulation of new demands and increasing use of money. The discount rate is firmly sustained at the recent advance. August payments of interest and dividends will involve heavy settlements at the banks, making a substantial drain upon funds, which are already notably drawn upon by the interior for crop-moving purposes.

Security markets are seen to be advancing, but the week records, for the first time in a long period, a simultaneous decline in values of primary breadstuffs and provisions.

Growing crops are exceptionally favored and larger movements appear in grain, factory outputs, general merchandise and mine and forest products. Official returns testify to heavy movements of commodities by the lakes and earnings of the Chicago steam roads show sustained gains.

All the mills at South Chicago, except one under repair, are running full, while preparations are made for larger use of equipment and labor in transportation. Contracts come forward freely in iron and steel, cars, power, structural materials, lumber and leather. Prices of the raw materials maintain firmness, although receipts to some extent run well over those of a year ago. The electric trades now obtain considerable forward work, thus encouraging free buying of supplies. Furniture-making shows steady recovery.

There is satisfactory absorption of tanned product for the shoe-shops, belting and novelties. Building operations remain steady, causing sustained demand for planing mill outputs and sanitary supplies. Retail trade here is benefited by the high temperatures, and many visiting buyers attend the wholesale markets.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 29, against 37 last week, 22 in 1908 and 30 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 4, against 10 last week, 5 in 1908 and 8 in 1907.—Dun's Weekly Review of Trade.

NEW YORK.

More buyers are in evidence in leading markets and fall jobbing trade shows signs of getting under headway, but the vacation season, the imminence of the tariff bill settlement and the rapidity of recent price advances breeds conservatism in many wholesale lines, pending clearer views of final crop outrun.

Industrial operations show enlargement, with iron and steel leading. There is a little more doing in the coal trade, but demand still lacks breadth, while coke is easier. There is a trifle less industrial unrest in evidence than a week ago. Car building concerns report large orders placed by railroads. There is more doing in the shoe trade east and west, but advices are that high prices of leather and hides tend to restrict trading in those lines.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with July 29, were 223, against 239 last week, 275 in the like week of 1908, 142 in 1907, 170 in 1906 and 178 in 1905.

Canadian failures for the week number thirty-four, as against twenty-four last week and thirty-two in the corresponding week of 1908.—Bradstreet's.

The Leather Trust is stretching its hide.

Ira Hadsell of Ft. Wayne visited here last week.

If you don't hurry up, you will not have any summer vacation to spend.

The Misses Mae and Lola McCain and Mary Scholes were entertained to Sunday dinner by the Misses Neva and Vera Andress.

There are many names on our list whose subscriptions have expired, and we must say that according to the new law that to have THE NEWS continued to your address, prompt renewals will be necessary. It is not our desire to take any names off the list.

There are too many young men moving from the country to the towns to find employment in the big factories. It should be remembered that the man on the farm is the most independent man on American soil today. He produces his own beef, pork, fruit, bread and cheese and supplies the needy with his surplus. The Wooster Democrat says: "The farm is the place and the young man who leaves it for the uncertainties and more likely the disappointments of city life, is not exactly well balanced."

"$2,000.00"

Mr. Luther Guthrie, of Beaufort, N. C. spent money freely in employing doctors to cure his wife from continual headache. He writes:

"One bottle of Cardui did my wife more good than anything she has taken for ten years past. She had suffered with headache for ten years and I had spent $300.00 for doctors' bills for her, but nothing did her any good.

Take CARDUI

She has taken two bottles of Cardui and it has done her two thousand dollars ($2,000) worth of good. Just as long as it is made, I shall have Cardui in my home."

For all forms of female pain, like headache, side ache, pain in limbs, dizzy feelings, dragging down-sensations, etc —Cardui has been found to be an effectual remedy. Don't wait till you are "all run down."

Try Cardui at once.

Dysentery is a dangerous disease but can be cured. Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy has been successfully used in nine epidemics of dysentery. It has never been known to fail. It is equally valuable for children and adults, and when reduced with water and sweetened, it is pleasant to take. Sold by H. M. Milliman, St. Joe; F. R. Bowman, Spencerville.

Your dining room floor can be touched up and refinished with Campbell's Floor Finish and the result will be very satisfactory. D. J. Baker carries a full line of all size cans, and the manufacturers guarantee perfect satisfaction if the simple directions are followed.

Occasionally one will hear the remark: "I wish I was out of this town" and then one feels like saying, "I wish you were," for a man who stands on the street corners chewing and spitting, telling stories, cursing the town, finding fault with his grandmother because she was a woman, claiming that the merchants are a lot of thieves, that the lawyers and newspaper men would skin a man to a finish, and a whole lot more is a nuisance and an abomination. Any town pestered with one or more such worthies would be justified in exercising cowhide authority on the bosom of their pants. No one is obliged to live where he is not suited. If one hasn't an encouraging word for the business enterprise and institutions of his town, should shut up and "go 'way back and sit down." If things don't suit you, move to where they will. A growler and sorehead in a town is an enterprise killer every time. It would pay a town to donate him $5 and tell him to move.

Some few weeks ago we published a letter from W. H. Hanen of Spokane, Wash., and in regards to the size of their new house we said it to be 12x16 but it should have read 4 rooms 12x16, large bay window, pantry, 2 closets and basement. The matter was an error on our part and should be corrected. Mr. and Mrs. Hanen are getting along fine. We would be pleased to hear from them at any time.

The Auburn won new laurels at Ft. Wayne, Saturday when it defeated the forty horse-power four cylinder National driven by Mertz in the handicap race, one of the big events of the afternoon. Earl Parker was at the wheel and covered the distance of five miles in six minutes and ten seconds. Auburn was given a handicap of one minute because of it being only a twenty-five horse-power and the National a forty horse-power yet the driver of the National stole fifteen seconds off the minute given the Auburn so in reality Parker had only forty-five seconds, the start. A Buick was entered but withdrawn. The Auburn also took second in the two-mile event for stock car entries costing $1,500 or less. The Buick won first and the Mitchell third. The Auburn was behind only three seconds.

Epilepsy, Fits

"My son was cured of a very bad case of epilepsy with Dr. Miles' Nervine."
MRS. D. BAKER, Cleveland, O.

"My little daughter who was afflicted with St. Vitus' Dance is now entirely well after taking Dr. Miles' Nervine only four months."
MRS. C. G. BENNETT, Alma, Mich.

Epilepsy, Fits, St. Vitus' Dance and Spasms, are all nervous diseases. They have been cured in so many instances with Dr. Miles' Nervine that it is reasonable to conclude that it is almost sure to cure you. With nervous diseases of a severe type, persistent use has almost invariably resulted in a complete cure or lasting benefits, worth many times the cost of the remedy. The best evidence you can get of its merits is to write to those who have used it. Get a bottle from your druggist. Take it all according to directions, and if it does not benefit he will return your money.

Committed Suicide.

Father of Wm. Smith, the Wabash Section Foreman of St. Joe.

Word came to Butler early Wednesday morning that Jacob Smith, of Troy township had hung himself.

Coroner Briggs was called and he and Dr. Harrison went to the home and found Mr. Smith's lifeless body hanging from a ladder in the barn.

Mrs. Smith said that when she awoke about 5 o'clock in the morning she found that he had already gotten up. She arose and got breakfast, when she rang the bell, he did not come in and she sent a child who is staying with them, to the barn to see what was the matter. The child returned and reported having found him hanging to the ladder.

The Coroner was called as above stated and he pronounces it a clear case of suicide. Evidently Mr. Smith had taken a strap off the harness and climbed up the ladder that leads to the hay mow, and tied the strap to the top round of the ladder and around his neck and letting himself down he thus strangled himself to death. It was plain that it was intentional, for he could easily have helped himself by taking hold of the ladder and stepping onto the rounds.—Butler Herald.

Opening of Lands.

Arrangements have been completed for the opening of 70,000 acres of choice irrigated lands on the Valier (Montana) tract October 7th, 1909. The days set for registering claims are October 1st, 2nd, 4th, 5th, and 6th. Everything is being planned for handling the crowds comfortably and for conducting the drawing without delay or discomfort. This Carey segregation is to be thrown open to the public at reasonable terms. The price and terms set by the State Land Board is $40.50 per acre, including land and perpetual water rights which are the oldest and best established in the State. The first payment required is $3.50 per acre; fifteen years are allowed in which to complete the payments. The land will grow as good crops as the best $200, an acre soils of the corn belt without their uncertainty of seasons, and home-seekers will doubtless gobble up the 70,000 acres of irrigated land very quickly.

'Twas A Glorious Victory.

There's rejoicing in Fedora, Tenn. A man's life has been saved, and now Dr. King's New Discovery is the talk of the town for curing C. V. Pepper of deadly lung hemorrhages. "I could not work nor get about," he writes, "and the doctors did me no good, but, after using Dr. King's New Discovery three weeks, I feel like a new man, and can do good work again." For weak, sore or diseased lungs, Coughs and Colds, Hemorrhages, Hay Fever, LaGrippe, Asthma or any Bronchial affection it stands unrivaled. Price 50c. and $1.00. Trial Bottle free. Sold and guaranteed by H. Milliman.

Great Alteration Sale of Pianos.

Hundreds of fine new pianos, forming a part of Lyon & Healy's magnificent stock, have got to be removed from the third floor of their building at the corner of Wabash Avenue and Adams Street, Chicago, because of putting in new flooring. In order to dispose of the pianos with greater facility, extraordinarily low prices have been affixed. These figures are phenomenally low. Lyon & Healy are making a determined effort to close out this great stock of instruments within the next few weeks so that the carpenters may pursue their work unhampered, and the prices have been reduced with this object in view. Send for a copy of list of bargains. If you do not wish to pay all cash for a piano you can arrange for monthly payments. Or make a visit of inspection some day soon.

Lyon and Healy exhibit the largest and most varied stock of pianos in the world—over 1,000 instruments.

That's what you can do for some friend—send him THE ST. JOE NEWS fifty two times for only a dollar.

Better than a letter, because it gives ALL the home news each week; there is positively no token you could offer which would make a home so happy in your remembrance as this newspaper mailed to some distant relative or friend.

We are making it just as good as it possibly can be done for $1 00. In fact, lots of publishers have raised to $1.50 on not so creditable a paper as this—and we tell you frankly that when you plank down your dollar on our table for a friend, you'll get your money's worth. Geo. Packard, wife and children and Mrs. Callie Shull of Walkerville, Mich., are visiting relatives here and at St. Joe. They will remain until after the Lake family reunion some time during this month.

Glen Henderson, who has been acting as Captain of the Bay City, Mich., ball team, has been promoted to manager. His success as ball player is causing considerable talk and he is surely making good this season.

Rev. Dunlap and wife of Pennsylvania, a former pastor of ten years, are visiting here and St. Joe. He preached in the E. L. church to a full house on last Sunday evening. They will return home the last of this week.

Singles Won the Game

One week from last Friday, the married and single men played ball at the south side park. The singles won by a score of 12 to 13. This was the first game of another three game series and will be as interesting as the two last years. Two years ago the singles won the series and last year the married men won. Indications now point to another victory for the singles The next game is scheduled for next Friday. The old married men who were in the previous games are down and out and the newly married bunch such as, Esq., Allen, Chapman and F. D Lake now constitute the double line up. The married life is good for anything but ball players, as Friday's game testified.

Book Friends.

Men who are most observant as to the friends they make, or the conversation they join in, are carelessness itself as to the books to whom they intrust themselves and the printed language with which they saturate their minds. Yet can any friendship or society be more important to us than that of books which form so large a part of our minds and even of our characters? Do we in life take any pleasant fellow to our homes and chat with some agreeable rascal by our fireside, we who will take up any pleasant fellow's memoirs, we who delight in the agreeable rascal when he is cut up into pages and bound into calf?—Frederic Harrison.

THE POPULAR PULPIT

THE FOUNTAIN OF YOUTH.

By Henry F. Cope.

"Thy youth is renewed."—Psalms ciii., 5.

All men feel as the years come over them that life has lost something it never can find again. True, the days mean more to us all and yet, somehow, they mean so much less; life is richer, yet poorer. Forty finds us sighing for some lost joys and most of all for the power of seeing things with youth's enthusiasm and freshness of vision.

We need to know whether this process of hardening, this loss of the power of the keen enpoyment of ideals, this slackening in response of enthusiasms is necessary; whether the heart and spirit must get old along with the years, and the love and hope stiffen up along with the limbs. Youth's dreams must fade, but need the spirit become unresponsive to the better visions that age ought to bring?

At its heart this passion for readolescence is simply the longing to find again the lost keen enjoyment of life; we would take it less as routine and still less as a bitter dose; we would feel some spontaneity, some real pleasure in the day's work and in the oncoming years.

The renewal of youth is a renewal of the heart. It is a matter of finding again the sufficient motives for living. They come again into youth's keen joy in living who take time to look up once in a while from their tasks to the eternities, to set their little round of daily doing in relation to the great universe in its infinite course.

A man soon becomes only a cog when he looks only at his own particular wheel. Somehow we need always to keep before us some sense of this whole workshop of our humanity in which each is doing our part, in which in some way all the work will fail short if we fail of that part. Seeing life whole, in its vast relationships, saves it from the curse of seeming trivial.

No life is trivial. It may be set down in the most narrowing circumstances and yet it may reach up to the stars. It may seem to be in lowliest condition and yet its influence may go through the ages. The size of every life depends on its ideals. Greatness always is a matter of the heart. You may bury a large soul, but it will only spring into larger living.

The keen joy of living that belongs to youth is simply the outflow of spontaneous physical powers; there comes a keen joy in living to maturer years which is born of the consciousness of the greatness of life and of the vision of the reach of one's influences, the possibilities of one's living. A sufficient motive comes when life is seen as the chance to love and serve.

The boy shouts because he must; the man may not shout, but still the sparkle may come to his eye and the blood rush to his heart and soul within him kindle at the impulse of a great passion, with the enthusiasm of attempting a great task. If you want to feel the renewal of youth take on a task worthy of your powers.

It takes a large measure of faith in the universe and in the goodness that eternally reigns through all to keep our hearts young. Nothing withers the spirit and congeals the blood quicker than the habitual pessimism born of looking only on the fabric of life from the under side, seeing only the knots and tangles and knowing nothing of the glowing pattern of the whole.

Let the eyes once catch the vision of the wonder of this world of which even the individual is an essential part; let the life but once feel this sense of belonging to the universe, of having a place therein and a part to play as truly as the stars in their courses and you have tasted of the springs of eternity; passing years makes no impress then, for you see yourself as part of the eternal purpose of life.

Each stage in the way of life has its own vision, its own inspiration. They are eternally young who live always in their day, leaving the past they learn the meaning of the present; they do its work; they catch the uplifting, invigorating vision of the coming days. To put all the heart into life, to live and to do greatly and not meanly, to live for a great world and a great to-morrow is to be eternally young.

"SHADOW OF GREAT ROCK."

By Rev. Dewitt L. Pelton.

As the shadow of a great rock in a weary land.—Isaiah xxxii. 2.

The metaphor expressed in these words was very vivid to the dwellers in Palestine. The sun during the dry season blazes down day after day unceasingly without a cloud to veil its brightness. Vegetation withers and springs and streams go dry. Travelers push along listlessly in the parching heat.

Yet, as in all tropical countries, the heat is not oppressive in the shade, out of the direct rays of the sun. Such a shade may be found "in the shadow of the great rock," which in mountainous sections juts out from time to time from the surrounding barrenness. Such great rocks are always most welcome to the traveler. In the long shadows cast by them there is refreshment and rest. Often a spring of purest water gushes from the rock. Vegetation flourishes in the rock's shadow. There is safety, too, in the caverns of the rock against the sudden attacks of marauders. So David sang, "Thou art my rock and my hiding place." Safety, refreshment and inspiration are found "in the shadow of a great rock in a weary land."

An honorable man in business, in politics, in social life, is a great rock in the circle in which he moves, affording refuge, encouragement and inspiration. A man of honor in business whose word is as good as his bond, who scorns trickery, who gives good measure, whose service is honest, whose work is up to standard, is such a rock.

The influence of his character is not confined merely to those who come in contact with him. The shadow of his influence reaches to multitudes whom he does not know, who observe him, take notice of his integrity and uprightness and know thereby that honor is not yet dead among men and are encouraged in their own place and sphere to imitate his example.

Such, likewise, is the influence of a noble woman in the social life of the day, in the midst of the scandal of the time, surrounded by the malicious gossip of a community, for gossip is usually malicious and has little connection with the truth.

Such a woman puts the vicious to silence, the scandal-mongers to shame and renews our faith in the innate purity of womanhood. Her influence reaches far beyond the circle of her acquaintance. She is as a "great rock in a weary land."

The great names in history viewed from this point of view are great rocks of safety, refreshment and inspiration in a toiling, struggling world. Serene and immovable, like giant peaks, they live their lives in a higher atmosphere, in the midst of petty, self-seeking, mean, ambitious and cringing selfishness of their day. In their presence moral distinctions, which in the hazy atmosphere in which most of us live become obscured and blunted, grow clear and plain.

The grace of God can make us rocks of influence in the midst of circles in which we live. Consider St. Peter, the "man of rock," whose name Simon was changed to Peter (which in the Greek means rock). Originally vacillating, unstable and impulsive in disposition, Christ saw in him qualities that were noble and rocklike, and named him what through His grace he would become, Peter, the "man of rock." So with all of us. We can overcome faults and failings in our lives; there can be developed in us new graces and virtues unknown to us, so that standing four square and immovable in the midst of the untoward influences of this world, we, too, may be rocks of refuge, encouragement and inspiration, casting a shadow of blessed influence upon multitudes in this weary world.

COMING INTO CHRISTIAN LIFE.

By Bishop S. M. Merrill.

In studying different styles of experience the various temperaments of people must be taken into the account as well as their training and habits; for all these play important parts in determining what they will do and how they will proceed in seeking God, and coming into the Christian life, as well as in advancing to the higher states of grace. "Many men of many minds," and men of extremely different environments, are to be met and rescued and transformed—cleansed and built up in the likeness of God. The gospel, if divine, must have provisions and be sufficiently flexible to meet every condition and to fit the peculiarities and idiosyncrasies of every individual. It is therefore unwise to expect that all will receive the grace of God in the same way, while there is folly in supposing that by any possible constraint everyone can be brought to measure up to one given type of Christian experience, either in its earlier or later stages. Diversity marks the work of God from incipiency to consummation. The foundation principles of redemption and the essential terms of salvation are always the same; but in the revelations of saving power in the soul, and in all the steps of progress following the induction into Christ, there are innumerable varieties, giving to each man an experience that is personal and unique.

From all this the fact is readily deducible that it is improper to make any man's experience a standard or a model for the experience of other people. Christ is the model man. His active life as a man was perfect, and to be imitated; but He never experienced the cleansing or washing from sin which our sanctification implies. He was not regenerated or sanctified as sinners must be: and therefore He never illustrated in anything He did or suffered the process of passing from sin to holiness. He declared and lived up to the standard of moral purity necessary for our complete union with Himself, and made the way possible, so that everyone, each with His personal characteristics and His individual environments may come up to the full measure of duty and privilege without in the least ceasing to be himself. The quiet man of phlegmatic temperament can reach the high standard, and continue quiet; while the man of impulsive nature will rise, perhaps more rapidly, to the same standard, but with almost superhuman emotions and marvelous demonstrations.

Anything to Amuse.

Fat Man—What! Are you going to let this small boy shave me?

Barber—Let the boy have his fun for once. It is his birthday, sir.—Fliegende Blaetter.

Father's Patent.

Johnnie—Why do you have three pairs of glasses, father?

Father—I use one to read with, one to see at a distance and the third to find the other two.

Small Harold—I guess mamma's sorry I'm not deaf and dumb.

Visitor (astonished)—Why, how's that?

Small Harold—She's always saying that I should be seen and not heard.

At the Play.

"The plot thickens here."

"That's good. It's been pretty durned thin up to now."—Cleveland Leader.

A Triple Personality.

Dr. Clifford tells of an amusing adventure which happened on one occasion when he was conducting a mission service at Carr's Lane, Birmingham. Arriving only a few minutes before the commencement, the doctor was refused admission by the policeman at the door.

"I want to go in," said Dr. Clifford.

"Are you a seat holder?" asked the official.

"No, I am not."

"Then you can't go in."

"I think," remarked the famous passive registrar, "that there will be room for me in the pulpit."

"I am not so sure of it," retorted the other.

"But I am Dr. Clifford, and I am due to preach in another minute and a half."

"Oh, are you?" said the incredulous policeman. "I have let in two Dr. Clifford's already." — London Telegraph.

Striking While the Iron Is Hot.

Little Ralph, an only child of 4, had been permitted to stay up one evening when his parents had company. At the table he made a quaint remark, at which all the guests laughed. He instantly saw that he had made a hit, and with commendable enterprise sought to follow it up.

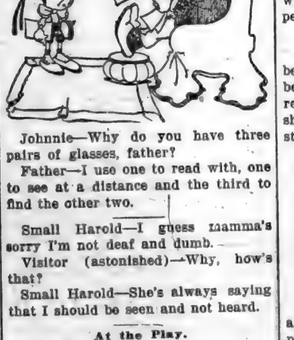
Why He Quit the Game.



"Did you evah play ball, old man?"

"Yaas, I did once, old chap, but it disarranged my necktie and mussed me clothes, don'tcherknow, so I quit!"

Their Substitute.

Eva—Yes, we bachelor girls often give a yachting party and never think of taking a man along.

Jack—Well! Well! Don't you ever get lonesome?

Eva—Oh, well, if we do we hug the shore.

Kind Needed in Kentucky.

"My father has a pocket knife with seven blades and one corkscrew."

"That's nothin'. My uncle in Kentucky got one with seven corkscrews."—Life.

The Opposite Meeting.

"There is certainly one queer and contradictory thing about business building operations."

"What is that?"

"Whenever a man wants to expand his building for business he calls in a contractor."—Baltimore American.

Where Education Failed.

An old "darky" in Alabama called across the fence to his neighbor's son, who is a student at the Atlanta University.

"Look hyar, boy," he said; "you goes to school, don't yer?"

"Yes, sir," replied the boy.

"Larning 'rithmetic an' figgering on a slate, eh?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, it don' tak' two whole days ter make an hour, do it?"

"Why, no," answered the boy.

"Wal," said the old man, "you was going ter bring that hatchet back in an hour, wasn't yer? An' hit's been two whole days sense you borrered hit. What's the use of yo' education ef you go to school a whole year, an' den can't tell how long hit takes ter fetch back dat hatchet?"—Tit-Bits.

Cornering the Market.

"My daughter is too young to be married."

"I came early to avoid the rush.'

Luck.

She—He's lucky; somebody paid his expenses at college.

He—Well, I've been through college myself.

She—Yes; but he got a job as plumber afterward.

Wasn't Settled.

Caller — Why is your servant going about the house wth her hat on?

Mistress—She only came this morning and hasn't yet made up her mind whether she will stay or not.—Harper's Weekly.

To His Wife.

Perhaps the wife whose remains lie beneath the following epitaph would be pleased at the sentiment could she read it once; could she read it twice, she would probably look for the broomstick—and her husband:

"Thou hast gone before me
To thy last, long sleep;
Tears cannot restore thee—
Therefore I weep."
By her husband.

Buying It Outright.

"My train leaves at 2:30."

"I didn't know you owned a train."

"I don't yet. In buying my ticket and sleeping car berth I only made a partial payment. I expect to square up for the rest when I meet the porter."

More Likely.

She—They say Golden has untold wealth.

He—So the tax collector told me.

Economy in the Barnyard.

Hen—Isn't my new hat a love? And the trimming cost me nothing. I'm so glad I didn't give your castoff tail feather to that tramp rooster.

William King — Where'd you get those pumps?

Charlie Prince—Off a shoe tree.—Cornell Widow.

A Method.

"How did Bluffard Shucks get the reputation of being an original wit?"

"By saying something utterly nonsensical as if he seriously believed it."—Washington Star.

A Modest Hope.

"Do you take this woman for better or worse?"

"I do, jedge, I do. But I hopes we kin kinder strike an average."—Washington Herald.

A Busy Boy.

"Goodness! John, how stout you've grown at the university!"

"Yes, mother—it has cost me many sleepless nights."—Fliegende Blatter.

Caught on the Rebound.

"There is a ring around the moon to-night," remarked the young man in the porch rocker. "Do you know what that means?"

"No," replied the fair occupant of the hammock, "but I know what a ring around a girl's third finger means."

And as there was only one way out of it, the y. m. went out that way—and bought the ring.

Ready with a Sneer.

"I wonder why it is," remarked the fluffy-haired girl who writes type between her tri-daily stunts at the boarding house, "that as a rule men laugh and women weep at weddings?"

"The fact that they are not the principals in the affair probably has something to do with it," answered the pessimistic old bachelor.

Two More than One.

"But remember, my dear," he said, "that you and I are one."

She looked at him scornfully.

"One!" she echoed. "Nonsense! We are ten. I'm the one and you are the cipher."—Pathfinder.

Spiteful.

Belle—Don't you think this hat makes me look much older?

Beulah—Yes, I do; but, actually, I don't know how old you really are!—Yonkers Statesman.

Trials.

"Don't waiters try you?" asked the thin chauffeur of his companion while waiting for a meal.

"Not so much as judges," replied the fat chauffeur with the fast look.—Yonkers Statesman.

ONE OF MILLIONS.

It is a commonplace that the really valuable man, in business or anything else, is the man who has ideas, or imagination. Lorin F. Deland, writing in the Atlantic Monthly, tells of a young man who went to him for advice as to some way of getting an increase of salary. He was even debating whether he had not better give up his situation and trust to luck to find something better. "I urged him at once against such a course," says the writer, "and told him to look for something better while he was holding his present situation. I said to him:

"'Mills, the important thing for you in this matter is to ascertain whether you are paid all that you are worth; and that settled, whether you can make yourself worth any more. But first of all, let us see if you can make yourself worth any more, whether you are paid it or not. If you can, you had better stick, and look for your raise at the first opportunity.' He agreed, and I went ahead with my plan.

"First, I told him for thirty days to put his mind on one thing: To devise some method whereby his house could sell at least one hundred dollars' worth more of goods. It must be a practicable plan, and should be presented as any interested employe would present such a matter to his superior.

"Thirty days passed, and Mills came to me again. With all his thinking, he had found no method by which the business of the firm could be extended even one hundred dollars a year.

"I then put him to work on his second month's labor: To discover any method by which the firm could transact its present volume of business with greater economy, so that, by improved methods, there should be effected a saving of at least fifty dollars a year.

"At the end of the time he came back to me with his report. He had been able to discover no new method whereby the firm could economize. He had, however, discovered one thing, namely, that he would not need to go ahead for another thirty days with our experiment, for he had about made up his mind that he would continue where he was.

"'My boy,' I said to him, 'just realize for a moment where you stand. You are not able, though you have worked three years in this house, to increase the volume of the business one hundred dollars a year, nor can you point out a way to save that account. My warning is, lie low! Attract as little attention to yourself as you can. Don't let the proprietors or the manager remember that you have been three years in their employ; if you can help it.

"'You are an absolutely unproductive young man. I don't mean that you are a bit inferior to thousands of other young men who are in the stores and wholesale houses of this city; but you, like them, are simply sitting upon the head of one of the bright men in the counting room. He has to solve all these problems. You and fifty others in your establishment are just sitting on the top of his head, like so many dead-weights. If the business prospers, you expect a raise of salary, when it is his head-work that has gained every inch of progress. He has to carry you all.'

"The young man went off sadder and wiser than he came. For five years thereafter, in which I was able to follow his course, he held the same place and at the same salary."

The Precedent Breaker.

Leaders of men have even been precedent breakers. Timid people, no matter how able, never make leaders. Fearlessness and originality are characteristic of all men of progress. They have no reverence for the old simply because it is old; with them it is always a question of pushing forward, of improving on the past, instead of slavishly copying it.

What Charles W. Eliot has done for the educational world, the Marshall Fields, the Wannamakers, the James J. Hills, the Carnegies have done for the business world.

General Grant did what all the generals who condemned him for not following war precedents in text books on military tactics could not do, he ended the war. Napoleon ignored all previous war methods, broke all war precedents in his conquering march through Europe. Men of force and initiative are always breaking precedents. Weak, timid, forceless men never break anything.

Roosevelt had little use for White House precedents or political traditions. In every position, whether as Police Commissioner, Governor, Vice-President or President, he has always insisted on being himself—nobody else. He never tries to imitate or copy his heroes. No matter how much he admires a man, he never imitates him. A great deal of his remarkable force comes from being himself.

"The surest way to secure failure," said Joseph Jefferson to young actors, "is to imitate some one else."—Orison Swett Marden in Success Magazine.

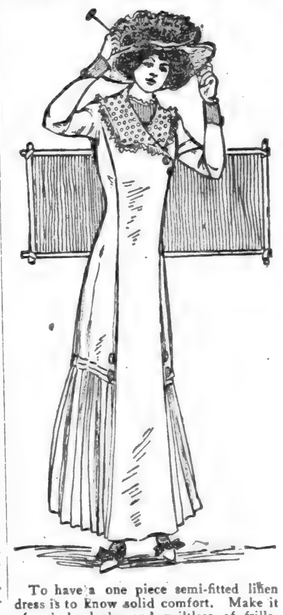
A Little Slow.

"How's collections in your church, Brudder Shinn?"

"Well, we ain't nebber had to stop in de middle of a collection to go an' empty de box."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

There is so little excuse for conceit that we wonder so many are afflicted with it.

FASHION HINTS



To have a one piece semi-fitted linen dress is to know solid comfort. Make it of a dark shade, and guiltless of frills. The Irish lace or batiste collars so popular now, are a good neck finish. The sketch shows one of these useful warm weather morning dresses.

A Dainty Toilet Article.

Every lady who desires to keep up her attractive appearance, while at the Theater, attending Receptions, when shopping, while traveling and on all occasions should carry in her purse a booklet of Gouraud's Oriental Beauty Leaves. This is a dainty little booklet of exquisitely perfumed powdered leaves which are easily removed and applied to the skin. It is invaluable when the face becomes moist and flushed and is far superior to a powder puff as it does not spill and soil the clothes.

It removes dirt, soot and grease from the face, imparting a cool, delicate bloom to the complexion. Sent anywhere on receipt of Five Cents in stamps or coin.

Irving was playing "Macbeth," so runs the story in "Impressions of Henry Irving, and he had reached the place where Macbeth orders Banquo's ghost to leave the banquet board.

"Hence, horrible shadow—unreal mockery, hence!" said Irving, in his most tragic tones, and with a convulsive shudder he sank to the ground, drawing his robe about his face.

On Banquo withdrawing, a voice came from high up in the gallery:

"It's all right now, 'Enery; 'e's gone."

CHILD HAS SIXTY BOILS

And Suffered Annually with a Red Scald-Like Humor on Her Head—Troubles Cured by Cuticura.

"When my little Vivian was about six months old her head broke out in boils. She had about sixty in all and I used Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment, which cured her entirely. Some time later a humor broke out behind her ears and spread up on to her head until it was nearly half covered. The humor looked like a scald, very red with a sticky, clear fluid coming from it. This occurred every spring. I always used Cuticura Soap and Ointment, which never failed to heal it up. The last time it broke out it became so bad that I was discouraged. But I continued the use of Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Resolvent until she was well and has never been troubled in the last two years. Mrs. M. A. Not Guilty.

Martin Gosford's hens received so much blame to which they were justly entitled that when their owner could prove them guiltless of depredations he hastened to their defense. "My flower beds are in a terrible condition Mr. Gosford," said one of his summer neighbors one day.

"I know they be, I know they be,' groaned Martin, "but my hens didn't do it this time, Mis' Gage!"

"Are you sure?" asked the lady in a tone of chill doubt.

"Yes, ma'am, I am," said Martin with emphasis. "There was only one chicken, Mis' Gage, and it hadn't but just went into the front bed when I sot my dog after it, and he chased that chicken through every last one o' them flower beds till he got it headed for home, an' there wa'n't nary another chicken nor hen dast go nigh 'em."

He Had Heard of It.

The teacher was trying to explain the word "transfiguration." "Don't you remember the transfiguration on the mount?" she said. "Who was it who was transfigured and changed in appearance on that occasion?" she asked hopefully. After a moment of thoughtful silence, Barker hesitatingly raised his hand.

"I can't just remember his name," he said, "but he was up there hunting and he went to sleep and slept twenty years."

ON FOOD.

The Right Foundation of Food.

Proper food is the foundation of health. People can eat improper food for a time until there is a sudden collapse of the digestive organs, then all kinds of trouble follows.

The proper way out of the difficulty is to shift to the pure, scientific food, Grape Nuts, for it rebuilds from the foundation up. A New Hampshire woman says:

"Last summer I was suddenly taken with indigestion and severe stomach trouble and could not eat food without great pain, my stomach was so sore I could hardly move about. This kept up until I was so miserable life was not worth living.

"Then a friend finally, after much argument, induced me to quit my former diet and try Grape-Nuts.

"Although I had but little faith I commenced to use it and great was my surprise to find that I could eat it without the usual pain and distress in my stomach.

"So I kept on using Grape-Nuts and soon a marked improvement was shown, for my stomach was performing its regular work in a normal way without pain or distress.

"Very soon the yellow coating disappeared from my tongue, the dull, heavy feeling in my head disappeared and my mind felt light and clear; the languid, tired feeling left, and altogether I felt as if I had been rebuilt. Strength and weight came back rapidly and I went back to my work with renewed ambition.

"To-day I am a new woman in mind as well as body and I owe it all to this natural food, Grape-Nuts." "There's a Reason."

MYSTERY IN FARMER'S DEATH.

Wealthy Agriculturist Found at Home with Bullet Hole in Head.

Mystery surrounds the supposed suicide of Isaac Winget, one of Delaware County's wealthiest farmers, who was found dead at his home, one mile east of Selma, with a bullet hole through his temple, and a revolver by his side. No member of Winget's family was at home at the time, his wife and daughter being at the home of a relative about a mile away. On their return the dead body was found on the floor. Those who are investigating the case, together with the coroner, are unable to assign any reason for Winget's act. Winget made a fortune in the days of the Delaware County oil boom, one of the most productive pools in the county having been found on his farm. He was forty-five years old, and the widow and eight-year-old daughter survive. Winget had no financial difficulties, is supposed to have possessed fair health and his domestic life was happy. The position of the wound and the course of the bullet seem not to carry out the theory of accidental death.

SUICIDES AT MIDDLETOWN.

Four in a Year, All on Account of Ill Health.

Mrs. George Sweigart, aged thirty-three, wife of a Pennsylvania section hand, died at Middletown, the result of taking paris green with suicidal intent. She had been sick for some time and the act was due to her illness, it is believed. Sweigart returned from work at night to find his wife suffering from poison, evidently taken some time during the afternoon, but physicians could not save her and death occurred the next morning. This suicide is the fourth at Middletown in a year. All were on account of ill health. The suicides were Frank Litzenberger, a wealthy lumber and lodge man; William Fugua, trustee of Fall Creek township, and Miss Crystal Powell, the latter, two months ago.

WHISTLES HIMSELF TO JAIL.

Police Arrest Negro After Peculiar Clew Furnished by Women.

James Jefferson, colored, has whistled himself into jail in Terre Haute, and perhaps into the penitentiary. It was the whistling that two women heard when robbed by a negro highwayman that furnished a clew to Jefferson's identity. Each woman says that as he came up to her he was whistling. By methods of their own the police learned that Jefferson whistled as the two women say their assailant did, and they identified Jefferson when they saw him.

Auto Dives Twenty Feet.

In an automobile accident in Lafayette Wilbur Mereiths, aged 28, was killed and George Blacknell sustained a broken leg and was injured internally. The party was returning from the German National Park when the driver, Harry Styner, lost control of the machine and it went down a twenty-foot embankment. Mereiths had his neck broken, and Styner was also buried under the machine.

Watch Big Freight Boat Burn.

Hundreds of people lined the banks of the Ohio River to watch the burning of the freighter Bernidine King. The boat had been tied up at a wharf at Evansville. Captain John Woods and a deckhand were awakened by the crackling of flames and escaped without their clothes. The boat was let once cut loose and it drifted out into midstream, where it burned.

Nominated for Mayor by Four Votes

A. M. Schmidt, Democrat, was nominated for Mayor of Fort Wayne by a majority of four votes over Charles McCulloch. There were 6,000 Democratic votes. The Republicans nominated Jesse Grice.

Fatally Kicked by Mule.

Joseph Carlisle, a farmer living four miles north of Petersburg, was fatally kicked by a mule he was feeding.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF.

George French, aged 28, of Chicago, who was arrested in Valparaiso for stealing a horse, died of appendicitis at a local hospital.

At Crocker thieves robbed a Wabash freight train, getting away with $2,000 worth of silk goods. The thieves are supposed to be from Chicago. They escaped with their booty.

The body of George French, aged 28 years, who died of shame after his arrest at Valparaiso, has been shipped to Decatur, Mich., his home, for burial. French was arrested on suspicion of being a horsethief. His humiliation caused him to grieve himself sick, peritonitis developed, and death followed. His innocence was established after death.

Thomas Swope, a nonunion street car conductor who shot and probably fatally wounded Herbert Kappler on a street car in Evansville, was removed to the State reformatory at Jeffersonville for safe keeping.

A woman known as Mary Winters was murdered and Charles Gerhardt, an iron worker of Martinsville, Ill., was beaten almost to death by a party of tramps near the Vandalia Railroad, west of Terre Haute. The man may recover

A Reconnaissance.

Mr. Rawson's mule had strayed away, and Pomp had been sent to find it. Instead of running along the road in the direction in which the mule had been last seen, Pomp scrambled up Prospect Hill as far as he could go, and surveyed the countryside.

When he returned in triumph with the mule an hour later, Mr. Rawson inquired why he had wasted time climbing the hill.

"'Twa'n' no waste ob time!" said Pomp, indignantly. "Don't you know, Mr. Rawson, sah, dat a mewel is one ob dose animals you is got t' 'proach from de front end foh yo' own safety? An' how could I 'proach dat mewel from de front end till I knowed whar he was?"

AN EASY WAY.

How to Cure Kidney Troubles Easily and Quickly.

It is needless to suffer the tortures of an aching back, the misery of headaches, rheumatic pains, urinary disorders or risk the danger of diabetes or Bright's disease. The cure is easy. Treat the cause—the kidneys—with Doan's Kidney Pills. P. W. Champion, Salem St., Marion, Ky., says: "I did not expect ever to be well again. Deranged kidneys caused me untold sufferings. Stones in the kidneys seemed to be tearing me apart and the secretions were seriously disordered. Doan's Kidney Pills righted this trouble and removed all pains and aches and dissolved the stones. I am completely cured."

Remember the name—Doan's. Sold by all dealers. 50 cents a box. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Pathos and Humor.

The study of the art of putting things is to be recommended to every one who meditates a plung into print. Even the writing of a death notice involves a certain amount of genius, if the author wishes to keep clear and well defined the fragile line which lies between the serious and the funny.

That this is true is shown by certain quotations from a Leipzig paper given in Bishop John F. Hurst's "Life and Literature in the Fatherland." Here are a few sentences extracted from these obituary notices:

"To-day death tore away from us for the third time our only child."

"Last night at five thirty the Lord took to Himself during a visit to the grandparents our little daughter Antoine of teething."

The last speaks better than it knew.

"Here died Marie Wiegel, who was the mother and seamstress of children two."

Woman's Vocations.

Though a blacksmith's work is somewhat out of the regular order of woman's vocations, there are a number of women engaged in that work in the United States. In a suburb of Lincoln, Neb., lives Mrs. Wilcox, who for five years was a school teacher. For some time, however, she has been following the vocation of a blacksmith. She is said to do all branches of the work, forging iron, repairing wagons, and shoeing horses. She has three daughters who are going to school and taking music lessons and who also assist in the shop work.

There are 193 women blacksmiths in the United States, according to the latest census, 571 machinists, 85 bootblacks, 3 mining engineers, 897 watchmen, policemen and detectives, 1,320 hunters, 11 surveyors, 248 chemists, 41 mechanics, 545 carpenters, 54 civil engineers, 48 longshoremen, 113 wood choppers, 306 draymen, 440 bartenders, 2 motormen, 13 car conductors, 7 steam car conductors, 2 roofers, 126 plumbers, 45 plasterers, 167 brick and stone masons, 241 paperhangers, 253 bankers, 45 brokers, 1,271 officers of banks, 2,883 manufacturers and officials of companies, 153 builders and contractors, 261 wholesale dealers. But the most popular of feminine occupations is domestic service. There are 2,099,195 domestics in Uncle Sam's domains.

Too Uncertain.

The traveling salesman had looked at Mrs. Dolan's third-floor-back, and found it neat and attractive. "I'll take it for two months," he said, "and I always pay as I go. I suppose that will suit you?"

"It will not," said Mrs. Dolan, firmly. "There's times I'm not in the house whin folks goes; they're liable to be called off sudden, whin I'm out o' the way. My boarders pays whin they come—or else they don't come."

As We Progress.

"That is a tender old poem."

"Is, eh?"

"But what did the poet mean here where he speaks of the children's hour?"

"Why, I s'pose under the terms of the divorce decree each parent was entitled to have the children at certain hours. The judges don't usually draw it so fine, though."—Kansas City Journal.

At the Summer Resort.

"I'm sorry," said the maiden, "but you'll have to go now."

"But it's only 10 o'clock," replied the young man.

"I know, but we can't have the ham mock any longer. There's so much company in the house that pa has to sleep out here and I just know we're keeping him out of bed."—Detroit Free Press.

Luck at Last.

"Tse done had de proof dat dar's luck in a rabbit's foot," said Erastus Pinkly.

"What were de proof?"

OWES HER LIFE TO

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Vienna, W. Va.—"I feel that I owe the last ten years of my life to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Eleven years ago I was a walking shadow. I had been under the doctor's care but got no relief. My husband persuaded me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it worked like a charm. It relieved all my pains and misery. I advise all suffering women to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. Emma Wheaton, Vienna, W. Va.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotics or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record for the largest number of actual cures of female diseases of any similar medicine in the country, and thousands of voluntary testimonials are on file in the Pinkham laboratory at Lynn, Mass., from women who have been cured from almost every form of female complaints, inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion and nervous prostration. Every such suffering woman owes it to herself to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial.

If you would like special advice about your case write a confidential letter to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

FELT REPARATION WAS DUE

Impulsive But Repentant Cowboy Would Respect Last Wishes of the Deceased.

A young Bostonian went to Texas and turned cowboy. He rapidly caught the spirit of the country and as rapidly shook off the outward semblance of tender-footed eastern habit. Rough-bearded, leather-clad, sombrero as wide as the widest, 42-caliber Colts on his hips, he was as wild as the wildest. Yet within his bosom still burned the flame of Boston culture and refinement. One day he was riding with a stranger across the prairie. Turning his head suddenly (he was slightly ahead) he saw his companion make a suspicious motion toward his hip-pocket. Without hesitation he drew his revolver and shot him. The stranger dropped like a log. The cowboy dismounted and looked at the body of his victim. "I wonder if he was really going to shoot me?" he soliloquized; "I'll see." Turning the body over, he discovered a flask of whisky protruding from the pocket. "Poor fellow!" he said, in a tone of regret; "I've made a mistake. I've killed an innocent man and a gentleman at that. He wasn't going to shoot me; he was going to invite me to have a drink. Well," he sighed, drawing his sleeve across his mouth, "the last wishes of the deceased shall be respected."

A Reasonable Charge.

"A tourist in Georgia stopped over night at the Palace hotel, in a little village, and expressed a desire to taste Georgia 'possum," said Henry S. Weaver of Atlanta, Ga. "The whole 'possum, cooked in genuine Georgia style, with 'taters on the side, was placed before him.

"'Two dollars extra for the 'possum,' said the landlord, when the guest came to settle.

"'It's an outrage,' said the guest.

"'It's 'cording to the way you look at it, stranger,' said the landlord; 'but it took me six nights' swamp wadin' to ketch that 'possum, an' when I kotched him I kotched the rheumatism with him.'"

The Deserter.

"Do you desire to have it understood," asked the judge, addressing the lady who wanted the divorce, "that your husband deserted you?"

"Yes, sir."

"Please tell the court as concisely as you can how he deserted you."

"Two months after we had completed our wedding trip he scolded me because he thought I was so extravagant in the matter of getting clothes, and I went home to my people."

"Yes, proceed."

"Well, I waited and waited and waited for him to come and beg me to return to him, and he never did."

Life and Literature.

A young girl once asked Mark Twain if he liked books for Christmas gifts. "Well, that depends," drawled the great humorist. "If a book has a leather cover, it is really valuable as a razor strop. If it is a brief, concise work, such as the French write, it is useful to put under the short leg of a wabbly table. An old-fashioned book with a clasp can't be beat as a missile to hurl at a dog; and a large book, like the geography, is as good as a piece of tin to nail over a broken pane of glass."—Christian Register.

Soon after the noon hour children, grandchildren, great grandchildren, their only living brother, C. M. Coburn and wife, nephews, nieces, and other relatives, neighbors and friends and their pastor, Elder J. A. Brown and family to the number of seventy-six gathered at the country home of J. W. Hart and wife, 2 miles southeast of Coburn's Corners, to celebrate their birthday anniversary. The first in order after the greeting of friends was the partaking of a sumptuous dinner prepared and spread on a long table in the shade in the front yard. After which a program was rendered consisting of piano music, songs, an address was given by Bro. Brown, entitled, "The three stages of life, childhood, middle age and old age" which was very appropriate for the occasion. R. G. Coburn then read a sketch of life, which was much appreciated by those present. Songs, recitations, original poem by Mrs. Rosa Murphy, song by Uncle Wm. Coburn, also eighty-four years old, closed the program. The balance of the afternoon was given to a social chat which was enjoyed by all present, each wishing that this dear old brother and sister might enjoy life's richest blessing while here on earth and the blessed reunion which awaits them on the Heavenly shore. One of the lasting features of the occasion was the post card shower, from distant friends as well as those present.

Fort Wayne saloons were wide open Sunday afternoon from one until seven o'clock. It was announced Saturday that the saloon men had called themselves together and decided to open in the afternoon on Sunday. It is claimed that Mayor Hosey was absent from the city while this was being done. The News reports that it was one of the most shameful days Fort Wayne had seen for years and it has placed Hosey in a bad position and the results will be watched. The Mayor has the power to do as he thinks best.

First Piano Recital.

The first piano recital of the season was given last Friday evening by Miss Esther Hallabaugh, a graduate of the Johnston School of Music in 1907. The program opened at about 8:15 and lasting for about one hour. Miss Hallabaugh was at ease during the entire program and it showed that she was master of her music. In all fourteen selections were played making a total of about 32,000 notes in her program. Each piece was memorized to perfection. The audience was not so large as it might have been but they appreciated her work. We might at this time take it upon ourselves to register a kick to the people of our town. St. Joe has the reputation of being a musical town but by the crowd Friday evening one would change their minds. A young person should be encouraged by their home people when giving an entertainment of any kind. Had you have made your appearance at this recital you can't imagine how much better it would have been. Let a free show come along and they will have bumper crowds, but a little entertainment by home talent, isn't worth your consideration. That's entirely wrong. Perhaps too, you have some favorite giving a recital that you will attend, but if you are a lover of music you should take them all in. Mr. Johnston has put the price down within the reach of all, 50 cents for six entertainments and its no more than right that you patronize the recitals. Encourage the students all you can.

The second piano recital of a series of six, of the Johnston School of music was given by Miss Lola F. Nimmons and Miss Grace F. Shaner, at the M. P. church Monday evening. The program was commenced at 8 o'clock and continued for about one hour, the students alternating. The music was high class and showed thorough preparation. The audience was larger than the previous night and it is thought that larger crowds will attend the commencement on Friday night.

Herrick Reunion.

The Second Annual Reunion of the Herrick family was held Friday, Aug. 13, at the home of Sylvester Stopher, one mile south of Harlan. At an early hour friends and relatives began to arrive until the number reached eighty-five. After a general handshaking, the first in order was the partaking of a sumptous dinner prepared and spread on a long table in the shade in the front yard.

A business session was then held electing new officers and talking in general concerning the betterment of the organization. The newly elected officers were Pres. Frank Herrick, Secy. and Treas. R. D. Herrick. After the business session closed an excellent program was rendered consisting of piano and violin music, vocal and cornet solos and duets. The remainder of the afternoon was spent in a social way. Watermelon, lemonade and ice cream were served.

Thus ended the days program which was in every way a success. The next reunion will be held in Frank Herrick's Grove, one half mile north-west of St Joe, the last Saturday in August 1910.

Woman Burns to Death.

Mrs. Edward Day, who lives near New Hope church, five miles southeast of Boonville, Ind., was seriously injured as a result of rekindling a fire with coal oil. Harold, her 10-year-old boy, who was standing near, was seriously burned. Mr. Day, in an attempt to save his wife, who was rapidly being enveloped in flames, was seriously burned about the hands. It is thought it will be necessary to amputate one of his hands. Mrs. Day's body was a mass of burns and she died. Two other children, who were in bed, were carried to safety by near neighbors. The house burned to the ground. Nothing was saved.

Solve Mystery of Mail Robberies.

In the arrest of Postmaster Philip C. Smith, of Chicago, Ky., government officers believe they have solved the mystery of missing registered mail that has recently failed to reach Chicago, Ill. Merchants of Chicago have been missing letters registered by customers. Two men detailed by Chief Postoffice Inspector Holmes, of the Cincinnati district, have notified him of the arerst of the postmaster of Chicago, Ky., a hamlet lying southeast of Louisville. They report finding a large number of letters containing checks, drafts and cash addressed to Chicago, Ill. Smith is charged with detaining registered mail.

Son of Author of "America."

Samuel Francis Smith, embezzler, forger, former mayor of Davenport, Iowa, and son of the man who wrote "America," died in a hospital at Toronto, Canada, where he was taken from a train bearing him to Newton Center, Mass., to meet his wife. He was released last week from the State Reformatory at Anamosa, Iowa, on orders from Governor Carroll. His sentence was suspended because of his old age. Convicted of embezzling trust funds in Davenport five years ago, he had served five of his eleven years. Six years ago Samuel Francis Smith was a highly respected citizen.

Wild Steers Trample People.

A number of persons were trampled when a dozen steers which were part of a wild west parade charged into a crowd at the entrance to the St. Clair street bridge in Port Huron, Mich. Several dogs ran barking at the steers as they reached the bridge approach and stampeded the animals into the crowd. Miss Jessie Ingley, of Grayling, was seriously injured internally. The other injured persons' hurts were of a minor nature.

"Jack the Choker" at Work.

"Jack, the Choker," has made his appearance in Peru, Ind. He visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Jones on East Sixth street. Mrs. Jones was caught by the unidentified man and choked almost to death. Her husband drove the assailant away. Miss Sharp, a nurse, was also a victim of the choker. She got away from him, however, and called for help before she was seriously hurt.

Eleven Die in Hotel Fire.

Eleven lives were lost when the Okanogan Hotel at Vernon, B. C., was burned. The building contained about sixty guests and at least eleven failed to escape. Ten bodies have been recovered. Identification is difficult. One man died in a hospital and four others are badly burned. The property loss is about $35,000.

Drowns Herself and Child.

The bodies of Mrs. James H. Ritter and her 4-year-old daughter were found in an abandoned well by the woman's husband at their home in McComb, Ohio. The Coroner pronounced the case suicide. Mrs. Ritter had been in ill health.

Fire Loss of $1,000,000.

A loss estimated at $1,000,000 was caused by the fire which has swept thirty-six buildings from the main street of the summer resort town of Monticello, N. Y. The buildings burned included hotels, stores and residences.

Col. Albert Pope is Dead.

Col. Albert A. Pope, the pioneer bicycle manufacturer of the United States and well known as one of the first advocates of the existing good roads system, is dead at his summer home in Cohassett, Mass.

$250,000 Fire at Lynn, Mass.

The large Morocco manufacturing plant of A. B. Hoffman & Co., incorporated, West Lynn, Mass., was burned at a loss of nearly $250,000.

TARIFF BILL IS VICTOR; SIGNED BY PRESIDENT

Senate Vote 47 to 31—Leather Joker Corrected—Congress Adjourns.

SEVEN SENATORS BOLT G. O. P.

President Defends Measure as Fulfillment of His Pre-Election Pledges.

President Taft signed the Payne tariff bill at 5:06 Thursday evening in the President's room at the capitol in Washington, surrounded by cabinet officials, Senators and representatives who had gathered to witness the simple ceremony.

Within an hour thereafter, or at 6 o'clock, the Senate having adopted the conference report by a vote of 47 to 31, and both houses having adopted the concurrent resolution to correct the errors in the leather schedule, the special session of Congress adjourned without day. For good or ill, the revised tariff is before the people. The new law became operative at midnight.

Thursday night the President gave a farewell dinner at the White House to the leaders of both houses of Congress. Friday evening he departed for the summer capital at Beverly.

Seven Republicans Vote "No."

Seven Republican Senators voted against the bill, viz.: Clapp and Nelson of Minnesota, Beveridge of Indiana, Cummins and Dolliver of Iowa, Bristow of Kansas and La Follette of Wisconsin. Senator McEnery of Louisiana, Democrat, was paired in favor of the bill. Details of the vote are as follows:

The passage of the bill was witnessed by crowded galleries. House members filled the rear of the Senate chamber. Prominent among the latter was Sereno E. Payne, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, whose name the bill will carry as its author.

Immediately after his return to the White House from the capitol, where he had gone to sign the Payne bill and also the Philippine tariff and the deficiency appropriation bills, President Taft issued a statement to the country. It is a defense of the new tariff law with respect to meeting party pledges, and the President's campaign interpretation of the platform. The President does not seek to declare the bill perfect, but in the main he regards it as having wrought substantial downward revision.

SHOOTS JUROR; KILLS SELF.

Stranger Wounds Hotel Man Who Helped in Sentencing Him.

Daniel A. Fenton was shot and fatally injured on West Main street in Middletown, N. Y., at 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon. Fenton, who conducted the Hotel Elberton, left his hotel about 2 o'clock. He was followed by a stranger, who tapped him on the shoulder and made a remark. Fenton looked at the stranger, turned and fled. The stranger fired a revolver from his pocket, but missed the fleeing man. He then took up the pursuit and fired two more shots. Fenton fell to the sidewalk and the stranger, after looking at Fenton closely, fired a bullet through his own brain. The stranger did not regain consciousness. On the way to the hospital Fenton said: "It was McSorley. I sat upon a jury that sent him to prison for a long term." Fenton has conducted hotels in San Francisco and Chicago.

CHRONOLOGY OF NEW TARIFF LAW.

MARCH 15—Special session convened.
MARCH 16—President Taft sends message.
MARCH 17—Payne tariff bill introduced in House.
APRIL 9—Payne bill passes House by 217 to 161.
APRIL 10—Bill referred to Senate Finance Committee.
APRIL 12—Reported back to Senate.
JULY 6—Completed in committee of the whole.
JULY 8—Tariff bill passes Senate, 45 to 34.
JULY 9—House rejects Senate's 847 amendments by 178 to 151.
JULY 9—Bill goes to conference committee.
JULY 16—President Taft issues ultimatum that tariff must be revised downward.
JULY 30—Conference report presented to House.
AUG. 1—House passes Payne-Aldrich bill by vote of 195 to 183, twenty Republicans voting adversely.
AUG. 5—Bill passes Senate in final form at 2:10 p. m. by 47 to 31, and is signed by President Taft at 5 o'clock.
AUG. 6—New law goes into effect. In all 141 days from date reported until signed by President.

TAFT PRAISES PAYNE BILL.

I have signed the Payne tariff bill because I believe it to be the result of sincere effort on the part of the Republican party to make a downward revision and to comply with the promises of the platform as they have been generally understood and as I interpreted them in the campaign before election.

This is not a perfect tariff bill, or a complete compliance with the promises made strictly interpreted, but a fulfillment free from criticism in respect to a subject matter involving many schedules and thousands of articles could not be expected. It suffices to say that, except with regard to whisky, liquors and wines, and in regard to silks and as to some high classes of cottons—all of which may be treated as luxuries and proper subjects of a revenue tariff—there have been very few increases in rates.

There have been a great number of real decreases in rates, and they constitute a sufficient amount to justify the statement that this bill is a substantial downward revision and a reduction of excessive rates. This is not a free trade bill. It was not intended to be. The Republican party did not promise to make a free trade bill.

The Philippine tariff section I have struggled to secure for ten years past, and it gratifies me exceedingly by my signature to give it the effect of law. I am sure it will greatly increase the trade between the two countries, and it will do much to build up the Philippines in a healthful prosperity.

The corporation tax is a just and equitable excise measure, which, it is hoped, will produce a sufficient amount to prevent a deficit and which incidentally will secure valuable statistics and information concerning the many corporations of the country, and will constitute an important step toward that degree of publicity and regulation which the tendency in corporate enterprises in the last twenty years has shown to be necessary.

Milton H. Clark, a prominent horseman, formerly president of the Lake Erie and Mohawk Valley circuit, is dead.

Tobogan, Pat Ornus and Arvid Ladd were killed and a score of crack horses were injured by a fire which destroyed fifty-five stalls at the driving park at Tursa, Okla.

Not one of the American horses that were among the starters in the events at Sandoun Park, England, were winners. H. P. Whitney, J. R. Keene and Richard Croker were represented in the ties.

At the Canadian Athletic championship meet at Winnipeg, George H. Goulding, of Toronto, clipped nearly a second off the world's best mark. His record for the mile walk is 6 minutes and 25 1-5 seconds.

There is a scarcity of good steeplechase horses throughout the country, and it is the exception to find new, promising steeds. The races are filled with old "has-beens," and others on the verge of breaking down. The fields are of goodly size, as a rule, in Canada, but there are no new horses, and the same old names which have been familiar for years are still doing duty.

SALT LAKE OCCUPIED BY G. A. R.

Veterans Rule City and Tourists Augment Large Crowds.

Occupation of the city of Salt Lake by the Grand Army of the Republic was complete Monday. Coming from all directions, the veterans won every strategic point and commanded all communications. Their colors were everywhere. On the program it was the first day of the forty-third encampment. Edgar Allen, commander-in-chief of the Sons of Veterans, was one of the early arrivals. He was tendered a reception by his organization Monday evening. The first formal gathering was that of the Union exprisoners of war, who met in the Federation of Labor hall at 10 o'clock.

COMMANDER NEVIUS.

The railroads carried a heavy passenger traffic into Salt Lake with few mishaps. The veterans and members of affiliated organizations were outnumbered by the tourists and sightseers. Arrivals Sunday were estimated at 6,000. All who came were accommodated without difficulty, and there was still a large number of rooms upon which to draw.

Two camp fires, one at Assembly Hall in Temple square and the other at the armory, were attended by the Grand Army members Monday night. A local celebration, the entrance of the wizard of the Wasatch and his satellites, was a brilliant outdoor spectacle at 9 o'clock and throughout the evening. Commander Nevius of the Grand Army of the Republic, his staff and officers of allied organizations met the visitors at a reception under the auspices of the women's committee in the Commercial Club parlors.

WOMAN FOR PRESIDENCY.

Chicago Settlement Leader Wanted as Chief Executive.

"Jane Addams of Chicago, future President of the United States," will be the slogan before many months have passed, according to the advocates of equal suffrage. Boston has been chosen as the starting point of the startling and novel campaign by which the women hope to gain prestige, if not actually a president.

Miss Alice Stone Blackwell says that no better candidate could be found than the Chicago woman, and her opinion is shared by Boston suffragettes, who are preparing to work with might and main for the election of Miss Addams. "A woman President would be quite as competent to attend to the national duties as a man," says Miss Blackwell. "There have been women rulers of countries before now, and many of them stand out in history as notable for their good judgment and strong, intelligent minds."

MISS JANE ADDAMS.

When interviewed at Hull House in Chicago Miss Addams treated the whole matter as a joke.

TURK ULTIMATUM TO GREECE.

Porte Demands Declaration of Non-interference in Cretan Affairs.

The Porte has sent a note to Greece demanding a formal declaration by that country of non-interference in Cretan affairs. In the event of a refusal to accede to the demand, Turkey will break off diplomatic relations with Greece.

Crete was evacuated by the international troops on July 26, and the following day the Greek flag was run up at the fortress and the militia barracks at Canea, the capital of the island. The Cretans lost no time in testing the disposition of the Powers, which had promised Turkey that they would protect the Porte's suzereignty. Since then there has been continuous unrest on the island. The Macedonian and Cretan situation is considered exceedingly grave in Washington.

"Rat" Thwarts Suicide Plan.

Bertha Deline, a young woman, after quarreling with a suitor on the street in Roanoke, Va., shot herself in the head in an attempt to commit suicide. A "rat" in her hair saved her life, the speed of the bullet from a 32-caliber revolver being checked by that appurtenance.

TAFT TRIP OF 13,000 MILES.

President Outlines Itinerary for Fall Visit to West and South.

President Taft has made public a tentative outline of the trip he will take through the South and West this fall. The big trip will be a swing around practically the entire United States, embracing a journey approximating 13,000 miles—as long as the cruise of the battleship fleet from Hampton roads, through the Straits of Magellan to San Francisco Bay.

The President, accompanied by Secretary Fred W. Carpenter, Captain Archibald W. Butt, his military aid; several White House attaches, and perhaps a guest or two for various parts of the trip, will travel in a private car attached for the greater part of the time to regular trains, but running "special" frequently. It will be a "White House on wheels." The President will start from Boston on Sept. 15, his fifty-second birthday.

Following is the itinerary as outlined:

Sept. 15—Boston.
Sept. 16—Chicago.
Sept. 17—Madison and Portage, Wis.; Winona, Minn.
Sept. 18—Minneapolis, Minn.
Sept. 20—Des Moines, Iowa; Omaha.
Sept. 21—Denver, Colo.
Sept. 22—Colorado Springs and Pueblo, Colo.
Sept. 23—Glenwood Springs and Montrose, Colo.
Sept. 24—Salt Lake City, Utah.
Sept. 27—Butte and Helena, Mont.
Sept. 28—Spokane, Wash.
Sept. 29—North Yakima and Seattle, Wash.; Alaska-Yukon exposition.
Oct. 2—Portland, Ore.
Oct. 4—Sacramento, Cal.
Oct. 5—Oakland, Berkeley, and San Francisco, Cal.
Oc. 7, 8, 9—Yosemite valley.
Oct. 10—Fresno, Cal.
Oct. 11—Los Angeles, Cal.
Oct. 14—Grand canyon, Ariz.
Oct. 15—Albuquerque, N. M.
Oct. 16—El Paso, Texas; meeting with President Diaz.
Oct. 17—San Antonio, Texas.
Oct. 18—Corpus Christi, Texas.
Oct. 23—Houston and Dallas, Texas.
Oct. 25—St. Louis, Mo., and East St. Louis, Ill.
Oct. 26—Cairo, Ill.; Hickman, Ky.
Oct. 27—Memphis, Tenn., and Helena, Ark.
Oct. 28—Vicksburg, Miss.
Oct. 29—New Orleans, waterways convention.
Nov. 1—Jackson, Miss.
Nov. 2—Columbus, Miss., and Birmingham, Ala.
Nov. 4—Macon and Savannah, Ga.
Nov. 5—Charleston, S. C.
Nov. 6—Augusta, Ga.
Nov. 8—Columbia, S. C.
Nov. 9—Wilmington, N. C.;
Nov. 10—Richmond, Va.
Nov. 10—Washington, D. C.
Nov. 11—Middletown, Conn.
Nov. 19—Norfolk, Va.
Nov. 20—Hampton, Va.
Nov. 21—Washington, D. C.

The final return to Washington completes the President's 13,000 mile tour. Then he will start putting the finishing touches on his annual message.

FAMOUS "BLUE LAWS" KILLED.

Liberal Views Defeat 1722 Statute—Sunday Baseball Now Possible.

Both houses of the Connecticut Legislature Wednesday passed a bill repealing the so-called "blue laws" relating to Sunday observance, which forbid almost every form of recreation and secular activity. The laws, which have been seldom enforced, are relics of 1722. One law specifically repealed provides for a fine of $4 on each person who shall attend a concert or entertainment on the Lord's day. The new Sunday bill is short. It defines the Sunday and prohibits all sports and secular activities "except such as are demanded by necessity and mercy, and such as are for the general welfare of the community." The penal section provides both fines and imprisonment for violation. Under the words "general welfare of the community" Sunday baseball is probably permitted, and the advocates of the bill admit that the courts must interpret the wording in several places.

United States Senator G. H. Clay, of Georgia, has been re-elected by the Georgia Legislature. His term will expire in 1915.

President Taft's faith in the corporation tax measure is unshaken. He will accept no substitute for the measure and will not modify it.

The women suffragists of Colorado are to make an effort to send one of their own sex to Congress two years hence. They are agreed that Mrs. Sarah Platt Decker is to be the candidate.

The Democratic congressional committee, one year in advance of the usual time for such action, has elected officers and mapped out the course for capturing the House in the next congressional elections.

Speaker Cannon has decided that if he threw down all the insurgents in the matter of committee assignments it would have the effect of reviving the opposition to Cannonism and the House rules. For that reason the heads of two or three of the insurgent leaders will be laid on the blocks, while the others will be permitted to retain the assignments they held in the former Congress.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

The sustained improvement in business is emphasized by a high aggregate of payments through the banks, smaller trading defaults, and widening demands upon productive capacity and transportation facilities. Tariff revision as an accomplished fact removes some uncertainties and the way is made easier to decide upon new projects. Iron and steel conditions have entered upon a most encouraging outlook, and the success of that industry imparts strength to many other industrial branches.

Factory outputs begin to approach the best previous records. The aggregate of new demands for finished products assures increasing employment of facilities and labor, although the subject of adequate profits may for a time cause some hesitancy in commitments. Movements of commodities are seen to be steadily expanding and high temperatures cause widespread supplementary buying in the leading retail lines here and at the interior.

An expected advance in some costs has brought increased activity in wholesale lines of general merchandise, the attendance of visiting merchants being far above the numbers usual at this season. Crop reports remain uniformly good, particularly as to corn, and this prospect of an unprecedented addition to the purchasing power is construed as favorable to capital investment and renewed enterprise in commercial channels. Freight movements both east and west now draw more exhaustively upon available equipment, and grain marketings are exceptionally large and promise to continue so for months.

Bank clearings, $257,815,620, exceed these of the corresponding week in 1908 by 21.2 per cent.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 22, against 29 last week, 21 in 1908 and 24 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 6, against 4 last week, 4 in 1908 and 4 in 1907.—Dun's Weekly Review of Trade.

NEW YORK.

With the advent of August the new tariff has become an accomplished fact, the leading crops are assuming more tangible form with some tempering of earlier exuberant estimates of yield; high premiums on old supplies of farm products are disappearing and the usual fall buyers' excursions are bringing purchasers to leading markets. There is also noted this year what was absent for two preceding years—a growing scarcity of labor.

On the other hand, there are some features of the trade and the industrial situation not as yet clearly defined. High raw material cost makes for caution in placing orders in some lines of cotton goods and the advance in the prices of some lines of finished iron and steel is claimed to have discouraged some new business.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with Aug. 5 were 184, against 223 last week, 205 in the like week of 1908, 157 in 1907, 137 in 1906 and 166 in 1905. Canadian failures for the week number 27, which compares with 34 last week and 19 in the corresponding week of 1908.—Bradstreet's.

CHAPTER XXI.

The night wind of the plain blew cold in their faces as they stepped out upon the Great River platform. There was a hint of storm in the air and clouds rode swiftly overhead. The voices of the trainmen and the throb of the locomotive, resting for its long climb mountainward, broke strangely upon the silence. A great figure muffled in a long ulster came down the platform toward the vestibule from which the trio had descended.

"Hello," called Raridan, cheerily, "there's only one like that! Good morning, Bishop!"

"Good morning, gentlemen," said Bishop Delafield, peering into their faces. The waiting porter took his bags from him. "Has the boy been found yet?"

"No."

"I should have gone on home to-night if I had known that. But what are you doing here?"

Raridan told him in a few words. They were following a slight clue, and were going over to the old Poindexter place, in the hope of finding Grant Porter there. Saxton was holding a colloquy with the driver of the station hack who had come in quest of passengers, and he hurried off with the man to get a buckboard.

The conductor signaled with his lantern to go ahead, and the engine answered with a doleful peal of the bell. The porter had gathered up the bishop's things and waited for him to step aboard.

"Never mind," the bishop said to him; "I won't go to-night." The train was already moving and the bishop turned to Raridan and Wheaton. "I'll wait and see what comes of this."

"Very well," said Raridan. "We won't need our bags. We can leave them with the station agent."

Wheaton stepped forward eagerly, glad to have something to do; he had not slept and was grateful for the cover of darkness which shut him out from the others.

When Wheaton went into the station, the agent eyed him curiously as he looked up from his telegraphing and nodded his promise to care for the bags. He remembered Saxton and Wheaton and supposed that they were going to Poindexter's on ranch business. Saxton drove up to the platform with the buckboard.

"All ready," he said, and the three men climbed in, the bishop and Wheaton in the back seat and Raridan by Saxton, who drove.

The road proved to be in better condition than Savton had expected, and he kept the ponies at their work with his whip. The rumble of the wagon rose above the men's voices, and they ceased trying to talk. The bishop rode with his head bowed on his breast, asleep; he had learned the trick of taking sleep when and where he could.

Wheaton felt the numbing of his hands and feet in the cold night air and welcomed the discomfort, as a man long used to a particular sensation of pain welcomes a new one that proves a counter-irritant. He reviewed again the grounds on which he might have excused himself from taking this trip. Nothing, he argued, could be more absurd than this adventure on an errand which might much better have been left to professional detectives. But it seemed a far cry back to his desk at the bank, and to the tasks there which he really enjoyed. In a few hours the daily routine would be in progress. The familiar scenes of the opening passed before him—the clerks taking their places; the slamming of the big books upon the desks as they were brought from the vault; the jingle of coin in the cages as the tellers assorted it and made ready for the day's business. He saw himself at his desk, the executive officer of the most substantial institution in Clarkson, his signature carrying the bank's pledge, his position one of dignity and authority.

But he was on William Porter's service; he pictured himself walking into the bank from a fruitless quest, but one which would attract attention to himself. If they found the boy and released him safely, he would share the thanks and praise which would be the reward of the rescuing party. He had no idea that Snyder would be captured; and he even planned to help him escape if he could do so.

They went forward slowly. The clouds were more compactly marshaled now and the stars were fewer. Suddenly Saxton brought the ponies to a stand and pointed to a dark pile that loomed ahead of them. The Poindexter house stood forth somber in the thin starlight.

Saxton gave the reins to Raridan and jumped out. "You stay here and I'll reconnoiter a bit," he said. He walked swiftly toward the great barn which lay between him and the house. There was no sign of life in the place. He crept through the barb-wire fence into the corral. He had brought with him a key to a rear door, and he started around the house to try it and to make sure that the house was not occupied.

At the corner toward the river, glass suddenly crunched under his feet. The windows were deeply embrasured all over the house, and he could not determine where the glass had fallen from. The windows were all intact when he left, he was sure. He drew off his glove and tiptoed to the nearest panes, ran his fingers over the smooth glass, and instantly touched a broken edge. As he was feeling the frame to discover the size of the opening, the low whinny of a horse came distinctly from within.

He stood perfectly quiet, listening, and in a moment heard the stamp of a hoof on the wooden floor of the hall. He backed off toward the drive way, which swept around in front of the house, and waited, but all remained as silent and as dark as before. He ran back through the corral to the other men, who stood talking beside the blanketed ponies.

"There's something or somebody in the house," he said. He told them of the broken window and of the sounds he had heard. "Whoever's there has no business there and we may as well turn him out. You two watch the corners of the house," he continued, indicating Raridan and Wheaton; "and you, Bishop, can stand off here, if you will, and watch for signs of light in the upper windows. The big front doors are barred on the inside, and my key opens only the back door."

The door opened easily, and John stepped into the lower hall. The place was pitch dark. He remembered the position of the articles of furniture as he had left them on his last visit, and started across the hall toward the stairway, using his lantern warily. When half way, he heard the whinny of a horse which he could not see. A moment later an animal shrank away from him in the darkness and was still again. Then another horse whinnied by the window whose broken glass he had found on the outside. There were, then, two horses, from which he argued that there were at least two persons in the house. He found the doors and lifted the heavy bar that held them and drew the bolts at top and bottom. As the doors swung open slowly Raridan ran up to see if anything was wanted.

"All right," said Saxton in a low tone. "They're mighty quiet if they're here. But there's no doubt about the horses. You stay where you are and I'll explore a little."

The horses stamped fretfully as he went toward the stairway, but all was quiet above. He felt his way slowly up the stair-rail, whose heavy dust stuck to his fingers. Having gained the upper hall, he paused to take fresh bearings. His memory brought back gradually the position of the rooms. In putting out his hand he touched a picture which swung slightly on its wire and grated harshly against the rough plaster of the wall. At the same instant he heard a noise directly in front of him as of some one moving about in the chamber at the head of the stairs. The knob of a door was suddenly grasped from within. John waited, crouched down, and drew his revolver from the side pocket of his coat. The door stuck in the frame, but being violently shaken, suddenly pulled free. The person who had opened the door stepped back into the room and scratched a match.

"Wake up there," called a voice within the room.

Saxton crept softly across the hall, settling the revolver into his hand ready for use. A man could be heard mumbling.

"Hurry up, boy, it's time we were out of this."

The owner of the voice now reappeared at the door holding a lantern; he was pushing some one in front of him. The crisis had come quickly; John Saxton knew that he had found Grant Porter; and he remembered that he was there to get the boy whether he caught his abductor or not.

The man was carrying the lantern in his right hand and pushing the boy toward the staircase with his left. As he came well out of the door, Saxton sprang up and kicked the lantern from the man's hand. At the same moment he grabbed the boy by the collar, drew him back and stepped in front of him. The lantern crashed against the wall opposite and went rolling down the stairway with its light extinguished. Saxton had dropped his own lantern and the hall was in darkness.

"Stop where you are, Snyder," said Saxton, "or I'll shoot. I'm John Saxton; you may remember me." He spoke in steady, even tones.

The lantern, rolling down the stairway, startled the horses, which stamped restlessly on the floor. The wind whistled dismally outside. He heard Snyder, as he assumed the man to be, cautiously feeling his way toward the staircase.

"You may as well stop there," Saxton said, without moving, and holding the boy to the floor with his left hand. He spoke in sharp, even tones. "It's all right, Grant," he added in the same key to the boy, who was crying with fright. "Stay where you are. The house is surrounded, Snyder," he went on. "You may as well give in."

The man said nothing. He had found the stairway. Suddenly a revolver flashed and cracked, and the man went leaping down the stairs. The ball whistled over Saxton's head, and the boy clutched him about the legs. A bit of plaster, shaken loose by the bullet, fell from the ceiling. The noise of the revolver roared through the house.

"It's all right, Grant," Saxton said again.

The retreating man slipped and fell at the landing, midway of the stairs, and as he stumbled to his feet Saxton ran back into the room from which the fellow had emerged. He threw up the window with a crash and shouted to the men in the darkness below:

"He's coming! Get out of the way and let him go! The boy's all right!"

He hurried back into the hall where he had left Grant, who crouched moaning in the dark.

"You stay here a minute, Grant. They won't get you again," he called as he ran down the steps. One of the horses below was snorting with fright and making a great clatter with its hoofs. From the sound Saxton knew that the fleeing man was trying to mount, and as he plunged down the last half of the stairway the horse broke through the door with the man on his back.

"Let him go, Warry," yelled Saxton with all his lungs.

The horse was already across the theshold at a leap, his rider bending low over the animal's neck to avoid the top of the door. Raridan ran forward, taking his bearing by sounds.

"Stop!" he shouted. "Come on, Wheaton!" Wheaton was running toward him at the top of his speed; Raridan sprang in front of the horse and grabbed at the throat-latch of its bridle. The horse, surprised, and terrified by the noise, and feeling the rider digging his heels into his sides, reared, carrying Warry off his feet.

"Let go, you fool," screamed the rider. "Let go, I say!"

"Let him alone," cried Wheaton, now close at hand; but Raridan still held to the strap at the throat of the plunging horse.

The rider sat up straight on his horse and his revolver barked into the night twice in sharp succession, the sounds crashing against the house, and the flashes lighting up the struggling horse and rider, and Raridan, clutching at the bridle. Raridan's hold loosened at the first shot, and as the second echoed into the night, the horse leaped free, running madly down the road, past Bishop Delafield, who was coming rapidly toward the house. Wheaton and Saxton met in the driveway where Raridan had fallen. The flying horse could be heard pounding down the hard road.

"Warry, Warry!" called Saxton, on his knees by his friend. "Hold the lantern," he said to Wheaton. "He's hurt." Raridan said nothing, but lay very still, moaning.

"Who's hurt?" asked the bishop, coming up. Saxton had recovered his own lantern as he ran from the house. It was still burning and Wheaton turned up the wick. The three men bent over Raridan, who lay as he had fallen.

"We must get him inside," said Saxton. "The horse knocked him down."

The bishop bent over and put his arms under Raridan; and gathering him up as if the prone man had been a child, he carried him slowly toward the house. Wheaton started ahead with the lantern, but Saxton snatched it from him and ran through the doors into the hall, and back to the dining-room.

"Come in here," he called, and the old bishop followed, bearing Raridan carefully in his great arms. The others helped him to place his burden on the long table at which, in Poindexter's day, many light-hearted companies had gathered. They peered down upon him in the lantern light.

"It was another—another of my foolish chances," said Warry faintly and slowly, the words coming hard; but all in the room could hear. He looked from one to another. "The boy's safe and well. We got what we came for. Just once—just once—I got what I came for. It wasn't fair—in the dark that way——" His voice failed. He lay very still for several minutes.

"I never—quite arrived—quite—arrived," he went on, with his eyes on the old bishop, as if this were something that he would understand; "but you must forgive all that." He smiled in a patient, tired way.

"You have been a good man, Warry, there's nothing that can trouble you."

"I was really doing better, wasn't I, John?" he went on, still smiling. "You had helped—you two"—he looked from his young friend to the older one, with the intentness of his near-sighted gaze. "Tell them"—his eyes closed and his voice sank until it was almost inaudible—"tell them at the hill—Evelyn—the light of all—of all—the year."

The wind sweeping across the prairie shook the windows in the room and moaned far away in the lonely house. The bishop's great hand rested gently on the dying man's head; his voice rose in supplication—the words coming slowly, as if he remembered them from a far-off time:

"Unto God's gracious mercy and protection we commit thee." Saxton dropped to his knees, and a sob broke from him. "The Lord bless thee, and keep thee. The Lord make his face to shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee." The old man's voice was very low, and sank to a whisper. "The Lord lift up his countenance upon thee and give thee peace, both now and evermore."

SAVED IN SPITE OF HERSELF

How Fortune Sidetracked a Very Bad Social Break.

"That reminds me——" said Mrs. Baxter; but the sewing society was in full swing, and no one noticed.

"Ahem!" she persevered. "That lady must have been something like——" Once more her voice was submerged.

"I knew a girl——" she almost shouted, without causing so much as a ripple on the waves.

It was annoying. She had been there an hour without uttering a complete remark. Not that her voice was needed; but in her former church home Mrs. Baxter had been a recognized factor, and she did not intend that these ladies should regard her, after this first meeting with them, as a person with nothing to say.

Accordingly, when the shifting talk reminded her of an old family anecdote about a girl who had left her home town as Mary Ann Burney, and had been heard of in the city shortly after as Marie Annetta Bournee, she determined to be heard.

"What you were saying a minute ago," she tried for the fourth time, "makes me think of——" but it was useless and by this time the current had carried the chatter so far away from the subject that the story was stranded.

With a warm face Mrs. Baxter gave it up and applied herself to her sewing, when, presto! back surged the conversation to the same point, and here was a better chance than ever to float her story.

"I shall have to tell you, ladies," she spoke up, in tones calculated to still a multitude, "about a girl who was always a synonym for silly affectation in my old home. I don't remember her myself,—she left Barraboo when I was quite small,—but——"

"Barraboo! Are you from Barraboo?" a lady sitting next her broke in. "That's my old home, too. You may have heard of me by my maiden name—Marie Annette Bournee."

"Oh!" gasped Mrs. Baxter. "Y-yes, I have." And while the lady from Barraboo gave herself up to voluble reminiscence, Mrs. Baxter, chastened in spirit, thankfully allowed the billows of talk to roll on without her story.—Youth's Companion.

Miss Tabasco—Yes, a pleasure to you and a pleasure to your acquaintances.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

It has been over five weeks since there has been a prisoner in the County Jail at Greenfield and the anti-saloon people suggest this fact as one of the results of a "dry" town.

Owing to the fact that the farmers and their wives are busily engaged in harvesting, the butter supply in Decatur has been exhausted, and the citizens are clamoring for butter. Farmers' wives are making only enough for their own use.

William, the 4-year-old son of Nathaniel Squibb, junior member of the W. P. Squibb Distilling Company, of Lawrenceburg, was operated on for appendicitis and is recovering. A small pearl button that had been accidentally swallowed by the child, was found in the appendix.

Near the home of Thomas Knight, north of Owensville, two quail, a male and a female, are sitting on separate nests of eggs and the probability is that both birds will hatch a family of little ones. The nests are located about fifty feet apart. The quail do not fly away when any one approaches.

While rendering the play "A Wasted Life" in the County Hall at Mitchell the leading man in the Shaler Mack Company was accidentally stabbed between the shoulders. It was at first thought he would be off the stage for the evening, but he went through with the play. It is not thought the injury will prove serious.

Mrs. Mary Freeland, 94 years old, died at her home in Bloomfield after an illness of about three weeks. She was a pioneer of the county and few citizens were better known throughout the county. She had been hale until recently. Her family is noted as a long-lived one. A sister died about a month ago at the age of 91.

Superintendent of Public Instruction Aley has prepared a course of study for Indiana schools for the next year. He advises the teachers to pay less attention to minor matters and to begin a campaign of education against the use of slang. He also outlines a course of hygiene to supplement work that is being done by the State Health Board.

The head of 3-year-old Harold Ladig, son of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Ladig, of New Haven, Allen County, was crushed under an ice cream freezer in front of his home. His death was instantaneous. The father is a driver for the Hartzell ice cream factory and while he was stopping at his home the boy crawled on the wagon, causing the horse to run away.

Mrs. Martha A. R. Matthews, widow of ex-Governor Claude Matthews, is critically ill at the home of Miss Belle Campbell, a friend in Clinton. Mrs. Matthews is suffering from a nervous breakdown and her condition alarms her relatives. Physicians have been summoned from Indianapolis and Terre Haute to consult with local physicians regarding her illness.

Walter Reeves, of New Albany, is confined to his home suffering from concussion of the brain resulting from a blow on the head received during a meeting of the Ohioah tribe of Red Men. Members of the order denied that an initiation was in progress, and declared that Reeves was injured in a scuffle. Physicians were called to the lodgeroom and found Reeves in an unconscious condition.

Suffering from the hallucination that he is a candidate for Mayor, W. L. Clement, 50 years old, escaped from his home at 1923 Holloway avenue, Indianapolis, and the police have been asked to look for him. Clement has been reading politics exclusively the last few days, and told relatives he intended to get out and finish up the work of his campaign. They have been watching carefully, but he evaded them.

The bite of a flea may prove fatal to Mrs. Flora Nicholson, the wife of a prominent young farmer, living near Greensfork. Mrs. Nicholson felt a flea bite her ankle and she killed the insect. Within a few hours her ankle began to swell, and the leg became greatly enlarged to the knee. The wound soon became inflamed and symptoms of blood poisoning developed rapidly. While suffering greatly, Mrs. Nicholson was removed to the home of her parents in Hagerstown, where her condition is serious.

Miss Mary Carmany, 76 years old, for thirty years a teacher of music in the Pennsylvania Asylum for the Blind died at the Madison County Poor Infirmary, where she had been an inmate by choice for 11 years past. She was blind from nine months of age. After leaving the Pennsylvania Blind School and growing feeble Miss Carmany expressed preference to being a ward of the county rather than be supported by relatives. Her brother, William Carmany, a prosperous resident of Ovid, near Anderson, provided for the burial of his sister in Ovid cemetery.

Thinking that the yellow tufts on a brightly colored patent fly killer were flowers, Josephine, the baby daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Stump of Union City, pulled one of them and chewed it. She died in a few hours.

Colonel Clinton P. Ferry, formerly of Fort Wayne, who figured conspicuously in the development of Tacoma, Wash., and amassed immense wealth in buying real estate there, died suddenly at San Diego, Cal. He was 73 years of age.

While trimming trees at Bedford, Bert Lynn, aged 35 years, came in contact with a live electric light wire and was hurled to the ground, thirty feet below, striking on his head. He is badly injured.

Robert Earl, aged 14, was drowned last week while playing pranks in the water at a pond east of Terre Haute. The boy was missed in the dark. His body was found. He was a step-son of George Kean, a farmer.

Mrs. Nancy Toon, aged 103 years, of Linton, and who is probably the oldest person in Southern Indiana, fell, and broke her leg above the ankle. The attending physician says her recovery is doubtful, owing to her advanced age.

Oliver Clendenning, living near Bengal, has a valuable horse whose tail was torn off by a thrashing machine outfit owned by Herman Atwood. The animal, in switching his tail, got it caught in the cylinder pulley, pulling it out by the roots.

Wilson Carter, of Jonesboro, has a hen which is making a record. The industrious biddy was hatched in the spring of last year, began producing eggs last November and has continued since then without missing a day, having laid 270 eggs during the time, and showing no signs of discontinuing.

William Foster, aged 7 years, son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Foster, who live three miles northeast of Columbus, discovered a bumblebee's nest. Armed with a paddle he decided to exterminate the bees. He made a fierce lunge at the young stingers, when he lost his balance and fell. His left arm doubled under him and both bones were broken.

While Earl Wonegardner and his wife were rowing on the Wabash river in the vicinity of Kienly's Island, east of Logansport, two bass, each weighing over three pounds, jumped into the boat. Within the last week perhaps a half hundred bass have been captured by people along the river. Bass are plentiful because of the fact that there was no bass fishing this spring.

The rats are not content with eating cantaloupes and new wheat, but have displayed a sudden fondness for flowers that adorn a woman's headgear. Several pretty millinery creations have been ruined as a result of the appetites of rodents. In one instance a rat attempted to carry off a gayly decorated bonnet, but the timely arrival of the owner frightened the rat.

There is an epidemic of pink eye among the stock of the farmers in the vicinity of Bedford. Fletcher Johnson, who lives three miles east of the city, has a number of cattle that are afflicted with the disease, several having gone blind. Other stock in the neighborhood has contracted the malady, which is very contagious among horses and cattle. The pink eye rarely kills cattle, but when it appears among horses it is often fatal.

The funeral of the 3-weeks-old twin daughters of Mr. and Mrs. John Bruner took place last week from their home near Lawrenceburg. They were buried in one coffin in the Riverview cemetery. The babies when born weighed 3½ pounds each, and died at the same time. The mother, who has just reached her sixteenth year, is in a critical condition and her recovery is doubtful. The father is 20 years of age and is an employe of the Aurora Brick Company.

Celia Wade, little daughter of Floyd E. Wade, a well-known farmer near Oakland City, was attacked by an eagle while digging potatoes in the garden near her home. The child was suddenly swooped down on her. The little girl was brave and fought with all her strength. The eagle was driven away several times by the child, but would renew its attack when she attempted to leave the garden. Mrs. Wade finally heard her calls for help and succeeded in driving the eagle away. The child's clothing was torn by the eagle's talons, but she was not injured.

Mrs. Elizabeth Lux, who lives near Shelbyville, holds a record which is not equaled, probably, by any one in Indiana. About fifteen years ago her husband, John Lux, died. He owned a farm of almost 300 acres, but which had a mortgage of $7,000 on it. He also left ten children to be cared for. But this did not discourage Mrs. Lux. She took charge of the management of the farm until the mortgage was canceled. This was before any of her children had reached the age of 21 years. When the first one attained his majority she presented him with $1,000. She continued to do this until the last one, Edward, became of age. He has just received $1,000. Two years ago last Christmas she presented each of her children with $600. She recently sold her large farm to her son, George, for $19,675, George paying cash for it.

Charles Breese, a timber buyer of Newcastle, found a box turtle in the hundred-acre woods near Milton. The creature draws itself inside its shell until it forms a box, in which it is entirely enclosed. It is a land turtle.

Edward, 9 years old, son of Mr. and Mrs. David Spangler, of Peru, while dreaming of bathing, stood up in bed and dived over the footboard. He struck the floor with such force as to dislocate his shoulder and bruise his head.

SLAYERS OF PETROSINO TRACED

Two Men Now Under Arrest at Columbus in Italy at Time.

Inspector Oldfield in his report to the Postmaster General states that Antonio Marrfesi and Cologero Vicarlo, both of Dennison, O., who are in jail at Columbus awaiting action by the grand jury, were in Sicily at the time of the murder of Lieut. Petrosino, the New York detective. He says they returned to the United States after the assassination and furnished the theory that if the New York police should cooperate with the postal inspectors it is possible that connection can be traced between them and the society of the "Blackhanders" who are believed to have murdered the New York police lieutenant.

Nineteen money orders, each for $1,000, and one for $80 have been traced to Italy for the fund to protect from justice the slayers of Petrosino. The money was sent by Camilla Nunzieogi Lima, who is supposed to be either the sister or wife of Salvatore, the head of the organized society at Marion, O.

DROWN IN ACCIDENT TO LAUNCH.

Craft Carrying Passengers at Sunday School Picnic Strikes Piling.

Two bodies are lying at the Canton police station in Baltimore, and two others at the bottom of the Patapsco river, while sixteen persons who were their companions are alive and thankful that they were not also drowned, when a gasoline launch carrying them was wrecked. Mrs. Katherine E. Brown, aged 60 years; Frank Pryor, aged 19 years, and two children lost their lives. Pryor was acting as engineer of the launch. The others were attending the annual picnic of the Huntington Avenue Baptist Church Sunday School. Twenty persons had entered the launch for a short trip on the river. The craft had reached a point about a hundred yards from shore, when it struck some piling, the top of which was under water. The occupants were thrown into the water, which at that point is only about four feet deep. Rescue parties at once put out from shore and saved sixteen occupants of the launch.

RENDER 100 FAMILIES HOMELESS

Flames Cause Heavy Damage in South Chicago, Ill.

More than 100 families were made homeless, scores of remarkable rescues of panic-stricken women and children in imminent danger of being burned to death or suffocated were made by policemen and firemen and property valued at $50,000 was destroyed by flames that swept through a score of frame dwellings in Superior and Buffalo avenues, near 86th street, South Chicago, Ill., Tuesday. Reports that six persons were killed were pronounced unfounded. The fire, starting from an unknown cause on a rear porch of a building in Superior avenue, spread so rapidly that many of the residents only had time to flee to the street in night clothing.

FINAL LAND RUSH IS SMALL.

Registration for Western Indian Reservations Below Expectations.

With the closing of the notary's office at midnight Thursday night the last opportunity to apply for Flathead reservation lands passed. The final rush was not up to expectations, and it seems doubtful if the total of the applications will reach 300,000. The official statement issued by Judge Witten, superintending the opening, shows the following receipts of applications for the day, with totals: Cœur d'Alene, 4,307; total, 104,416. Kalispell, 1,420; total, 22,298. Missoula, 346; total, 50,994. Spokane, 4,573; total, 96,821. This may be increased another 20,000 by applications yet to be mailed, all of which must reach the land office before the drawing begins.

ROB NEBRASKA GOVERNOR.

Pickpockets Jostle Shallenberger in Crowd and Get $130.

Coming across Iowa the other day Governor Shallenberger of Nebraska stopped at Marshalltown. While sauntering around the waiting room there he got into a crowd and was jostled about for an instant. He thought nothing of the matter at the time, but shortly after getting on the train, pursuing his journey westward, he discovered that his pocketbook containing $130 was gone. Arriving in Omaha he had to borrow money to buy a ticket to Lincoln. The Governor feels certain that pickpockets were working in the crowd at Marshalltown and that he was one of the victims.

SALMON CATCH PROVES IMMENSE

Fish So Many That Washington Canneries Cannot Handle Them.

Countless thousands of salmon are being permitted to ascend to their spawning grounds without hindrance from fish traps, which have been lifted, says a dispatch from Bellingham, Wash. While the canneries are glutted with fish, dozens of scows are alongside loaded with salmon and tows are coming in with long strings of fish-laden barges. It is proving an impossibility to handle the catch. The price of sockeyes has fallen to 10 cents each.

Lightning Fire Kills Three.

Lightning struck the Liberty Bell mine near Telluride, Colo., and three miners, overcome by smoke that filled the mine after the bolt had set fire to the buildings, are dead. Four other victims of the smoke are in a serious condition.

A Piano at a Remarkable Price.

Chicago's largest music house, Lyon & Healy, announces a gigantic alteration sale of pianos. Nearly 1,000 splendid instruments are offered without reserve until all are sold. In this stock are a great many standard and well-known makes.

It is necessary to move this great stock of pianos in order to make room for carpenters who are replacing flooring.

In Upright pianos new instruments may be had as low as $145. This is an unprecedented opportunity and one that may not occur again. Any piano not proving entirely satisfactory may be returned at their expense.

Arrange a visit of inspection to their warerooms, corner Wabash Avenue and Adams Street, this week so as to avoid disappointment.

If a newsgatherer should meet 50 persons each day and should put the inquiry, "Any news?" 49 out of the 50 would reply, after a vigorous scratching of the head, "No-o-o, I guess not," when at the same time he might know of a number of interesting happenings that would help to make the paper just what everyone wishes it to be, a paper full of news of the community. So if the item of news which you expected to see in print is not there, it is your own fault—you failed to inform us of the fact.

The following were very royally entertained at the rural home of Morris Lothamer and wife, Thursday of last week,—Cora Maxwell and son Willard, Bertha Coburn, Flora Tustison, Minta Northrup, Mary Kain, Cordella Alton, Mary A. Scholes of Coburntown; Belle Ridgway and daughter Eva, and Lena Coburn of St. Joe; Mrs L. V. Dunn of Chicago, and Mae Noragon and Daisy DeLong of Butler. The ladies tied a comfort and joined a quilt. The hostess served a splendid chicken dinner which was thoroughly enjoyed. It was a day long to be remembered by those present. Lena Coburn rendered several piano solos.

We are in receipt of a program of the 44th Regt Ind. Inf. Vols., and it has been necessary to change the place for the meeting in the annual reunion from LaGrange to Ft. Wesley Mutzfeld received word Sunday of last week that his wife's father had been drowned at Toledo. Mr. Dill, together with several others, were in a launch on Maumee bay, 500 feet off the Casino, when the launch turned turtle from the weight of the party which had collected on one side. Mr. Dill was the owner of the boat and took out the party over the earnest appeal of his wife. One woman was in the cabin and was unable to get out, and she with two of the men sank in the channel. The body of Mr. Dill was not recovered until Tuesday when it was found floating about a half mile from where he was drowned. —Butler Herald.

Dysentery is a dangerous disease but can be cured. Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy has been successfully used in nine epidemics of dysentery. It has never been known to fail. September 20 is the date set for the opening day of the district schools in DeKalk county and County Supt. Coe announces that everything points to a very successful school year. The county teachers institute will be held in Auburn commencing Monday Aug. 23. A very interesting program will be carried out during the five days of the institute. Chas. H. Albert of Bloomsburg, Pa., instructor in pedagogy and Mrs. Julia Fried Walker of the Indianapolis training school are the regular lecturers for the week.

A state health officer, has got himself into a neat pickle at Fort Wayne, by attempting to force a dairy woman to give up a sample of milk, when she claimed she had only enough to satisfy her customers. Charges and counter charges have been flung back and forth and out of the smoke drifts two specific cases one in which Mrs. Nelson Craig the dairywoman, is charged with interfering with a health officer in the performance of his duty and the other an assault and battery charge against the officer. It seems that Dr. Gillie, the officer seized Mrs Craig's horse by the bridle when she started to drive on after refusing to sell him some milk, and that the woman then struck the animal and finally lashed Dr. Gillie. A number of influential people have interested them in the behalf of Mrs. Craig, claiming that the milk from her cows is clean and wholesome in spite of the finding of the health department that it is dirty and unfit for human consumption. The milk fight which is being waged in Fort Wayne at present seems to have assumed some delicate proportions, and a number of people are dissatisfied with the dictatorial policies adopted by the department. Mrs. Craig was no doubt next to the fact that he was an officer and refused him milk to avoid being caught, the milk should be examined anyway and no doubt will be.

Ordered New Cars

The Baltimore & Ohio railroad, carrying out recently-decided-upon increases of equipment, has closed contracts as follows:

1,000 composite gondola cars, 1,000 coke cars of 100,000 pounds capacity, 600 all steel hopper cars, 1,000 all steel coke cars, 45 passenger and 5 combined passenger and baggage cars, 10 baggage cars, 5 cafe and parlor cars, and 5 all steel postal cars.

In addition to the contarcts enumerated, others for 1,000 box cars, 500 refrigerator cars and 500 ventilated cars, sixty locomotives and two electric locomotives will be placed upon the completion of the negotiations now pending.

The company has also placed orders for large quantities of steel rails. Between six and seven million dollars are called for in the contracts already closed. The contracts pending will carry the total beyond ten million dollars.

SUMS LOST BY CARELESSNESS

Estimated That Half a Million Dollars in Greenbacks is Destroyed Every Year.

The secretary of the United States treasury estimates that about half a million dollars' worth of money is destroyed in our country every year by one means or another. The money disappears in very odd ways. For example, an Indiana woman complained of the loss of a $20 bill which had gotten into a dish of dandelion greens. It was chopped up and eaten by the unconscious family and the loss was discovered only when the corner of the bill was found among the greens left over in the dish.

A large quantity of greenbacks is eaten up every year by rats. Sometimes the rodents leave remnants so that the bills can be redeemed, but often they take the money in its entirety. One specially odd case reported was where a robin engaged in the laudable enterprise of nest building, flew into a window and bore away in its bill a $100 bill which had been left on a table, using the soft texture for the nest. Enough of the greenback was recovered to warrant its redemption.

'Twas A Glorious Victory.

A WHOLE YEAR FOR $1.00

That's what you can do for some friend—send him THE ST. JOE NEWS fifty-two times for only a dollar.

Better than a letter, because it gives ALL the home news each week; there is positively no token you could offer which would make a home so happy in your remembrance as this newspaper mailed to some distant relative or friend.

We are making it just as good as it possibly can be done for $1 00. In fact, lots of publishers have raised to $1.50 on not so creditable a paper as this—and we tell you frankly that when you plank down your dollar on our table for a friend, you'll get your money's worth. This is a good copy to start with. We'll save an extra one until Monday. Yes?

Peter Kensinger, an aged resident of Spencer township, was taken to the county infirmary, last Wednesday by his own request. Since breaking up housekeeping last fall, he has been staying among his relatives and his health has been very poor. He decided that he would have better care at the county home, so he asked that he be taken there, so he was. His son Ford, is in Wayne.

The greatly needed rain arrived here last Saturday and continued for about 18 hours of a steady down pour. Later in the night the wind arose and blew down the corn considerably but that will not hinder it from earing. The late potatoes will be greatly benefited and in fact all the later crops. In talking with one of the farmers Monday, he stated that it was the best rain he had seen for years, coming slow and easy, letting it all go into the ground.

The courthouse question is being adgitated by the Auburn papers. The county has a few thousand dollars in the treasury and some Auburn men are trying to have the county to spend it. A $250,000 building is asked for by Auburn and all Auburn is greatly in favor of it but how does the rest of the county feel. If that money is in the banks at Auburn it had better be spent or some individual will hook on to it. What do you think about it Mr. Taxpayer.

The Festive Cucumber

You know this is the time of year when the death-dealing cucumber is abroad in the land seeking whom it may double up and make sad. When a man goes home in the evening after a hard day's work he finds that he is the proud possessor of an apetite like a self-binder, and when he sits down to the table and sees before him the first cucumbers of the season he can hardly wait until he gets a quantity stored away under his base-ball belt. Under this belt said cucumbers quietly lay in wait until the eater had gone to sleep for the night. Then they get up on their feet, unbutton their vests, roll back their sleeves and proceed to business. At the first attack the sleeper only dreams that Hull has hit him in the vitals with a base-ball bat, but the cucumbers rapidly get warmed up and the victim's agonies increase. His dreams become more picturesque and he begins to snort and feels things like Lee and Frank dancing the Highland fling on his abdomen. The dancers gradually enter into the sport with more zest and reinforcements keep on arriving. Things get desperate and Drs. Shook and Kimes are telephoned for and instructed to bring their full-grown stomach pumps. At last, long about daybreak, the state militia, the city fire department and the Coburntown band appear on the scene and join in the terpischorean exercises. When the sleeper awakens in the morning the first thing he does is to feel of his stomach to see if it is still there. He finds the stomach there, also the cucumbers which the night before sat up and smiled so innocently at him. There are lots of people who are harvested before they are ripe simply because they absorb more cucumbers into their anatomy than their digestive apparatus can cope with.

MR. JURGLETON HAS NOTICED

No Man, Young or Old, in a Stovepipe Hat, Ever Seen Carrying a Baby, He Declares.

"Did you ever," said Mr. Jurgleton, "see a man in a silk hat carrying an infant child? Never, I venture to say.

"You do see plenty of fathers, young fathers, mostly, carrying their babies, and very willing to carry them, indeed proud of their offspring; but you never see such a father in a tall hat. They may wear forty-leven other kinds of hats—derbies, soft hats, straw hats, or as many kinds of caps; but no father carrying an infant ever wears a silk hat.

"Of course there can't be any fashion decree about this. Refraining from wearing a silk hat on such occasions must be due just to instinctive common sense; the baby is an extremely informal thing, liable to scream or cry or wriggle or squirm at any minute, to bear itself in many ways in a manner quite incompatible with high hat dignity; and even young fathers seem to know this, and so they leave their stovepipe tiles on the shelf at home when they go out with the baby. They seem to know what is fitting instinctively; but you never see a man in a stovepipe hat carrying a baby."

ART IN OLD ENGLISH HOUSES

Beautiful Carving and Paneling That Had Long Been Concealed Is Discovered.

When a low range of buildings at Little Horkesley, Essex, England, which for a century and a half had been let in five separate tenements, came into the market and was bought by an owner who, having an eye for things old and curious, had the walls stripped, surprising discoveries were made. It was found that all five were really parts of one old Tudor house. Behind the whitewash and plaster and common wall paper were brought to light beautiful carving and paneling of the Tudor period. The doors were found to be of oak heavily studded with nails.

During the last summer the village church at Doddington, Kent, underwent that process known as "restoration," which in too many cases has spelled destruction, and in the course of the work the removal of a quantity of plaster led to the discovery of an unexpected lancet window of the thirteenth century, which had been blocked up for many generations.

The splays were well preserved, and the discoverers were rewarded not only by finding the arch of the lancet beautifully decorated with stars and roses, all in excellent preservation, but by the revealing on one of the splays of a noble figure of a monk, nearly seven feet high, portrayed in the act of giving the benediction.

Popularizing the Potato.

One of the most remarkable menus ever drawn up must have been that of the feast in Paris to which Benjamin Franklin, Lavoisier (the founder of modern chemistry) and other distinguished men sat down as guests of Parmentier. Every dish at this banquet was made of potatoes, and even the brandy and liquors were the product of the same vegetable. This was Parmentier's final proof to his skeptical fellow countrymen that potatoes were not poison, as they persisted in believing. Louis XVI. himself was one of Parmentier's earliest converts, granted him land on which to grow his plants and did not disdain to wear the potato flower as a buttonhole. Then Parmentier cleverly posted guards round his potato fields by day and withdrew them by night, so that people were tempted to come then, steal, eat and be convinced. The all-potato banquet was the climax of the great campaign.

Didn't Express It.

"There are many points about our machine, Mr. Fosdick," the agent was saying, "that you don't find in typewriters usually. For example, the whole line, as you write, is visible—by the way, Mr. Fosdick, have you ever had a visible typewriter in your office?"

The merchant looked absent-mindedly at the red-haired young woman with the green gown who was hammering away industriously on the morning correspondence in the outer room.

"Visible?" he said. "We have one that's more than visible—she's conspicuous."

Seasoning Lumber.

A workman was packing salt about a pile of timber. "Seasoning timber with salt, eh? It sounds like a joke, doesn't it?" he said. "It is often done, though, especially in ship timber. Ships built of salt-seasoned timber get a better insurance rate. Some very rich woods are seasoned in boiling oil. That's an ancient and costly process. A new lodge is electrical seasoning. With strong electric shocks the sap is driven out of the wood and replaced by a solution of borax and resin. The scheme is cheap; not half as good as salt."

Belgian Coal Miners.

While coal is mined at a greater depth in Belgium than in most countries, the number of miners killed in accidents is less in that country than in any other. For the ten-year period from 1891 to 1900 the number of fatalities per 10,000 workmen was 16.84 per annum. In the metallic-ore mines the number of workmen who have been killed by accident is one-third that in the coal mines.

PRIDE OF AMSTERDAM JEWS.

Synagogue in That City, Built by Refugees, Is Easily the Finest in the World.

In the midst of the Jewish quarter stands the pride of Amsterdam Jews, the grandest synagogue in the world. It is "great" in everything, in its size, its proportion, its age and its traditions. There is no synagogue like it anywhere, and while it stands there cannot be anything like it.

The great temple in the Rue de la Victoire in Paris may perhaps be larger, the splendid synagogue in the Oranienburgerstrasse in Berlin may be more ornate, but the Portuguese synagogue in Amsterdam has a glory all its own. Its majestic columns, its solid oak, its noble ark and its lovely windows all speak eloquently of the type of Jew that sought the hospitality of Holland when the cruel and short-sighted policy of the Spain of those days drove the pioneers of the community into the hardy little northern country.

The history of the congregation is not, however, one unbroken record of peace and glory. Curiously enough, its early members, free themselves at last from persecution, seemed at times to make up for the persecution they had endured by their own internal intercommunal intolerance.

Their treatment of Uriel Acosta is a most painful chapter in their local history, and their attitude toward Baruch Spinoza was an error for which no compensation can ever be made. To the visitor to the synagogue is still shown the seat which Spinoza is supposed to have occupied, but the tradition is probably apochryphal.—Jewish Chronicle.

MALE "LADY OF THE HOUSE"

Not Uncommon for New York Boarding Places to Be Conducted by Men.

"A man acting as 'lady of the house' in a first-class boarding house was a distinct surprise to me," said a New York woman who has been trying to find a pleasant home for a friend from out of town. "In a single morning I came across two boarding houses where men were in charge. The first man was quite communicative and when I expressed my regret that I could not make arrangements with his wife instead of himself, he said:

"'Oh, I run the place now. My wife died three years ago and rather than break up I took charge of it myself. People wanted to stay and it was easier to let things go on in the old way.'

"The second man didn't have the same excuse, as he'd never had a wife. He'd been living in the same house for a good many years and when it was about to break up several years ago he took it over rather than give up his comfortable home. Incidentally he told me he was opening a small boarding house down at the seashore, which was easily reached by the elevated road, and that his guests could come down there for a week end and always feel at home. He laid no claims to being a hotel keeper—just a man who was playing 'landlady' in a boarding house."—New York Sun.

Where Church and Circus Meet.

"On one point at least the church and the circus touch common ground," said a clerk in the naturalization bureau. "Each member of a circus performer's family and each member of a country preacher's family claims a different birthplace. Very often families consisting of grown-up brothers apply for citizenship. In most cases they are poor people whose parents certainly could not afford to be globe trotters, and all the children were born in the same village or town. But once in a while I meet three or four or maybe five or six brothers each of whom has first seen the light in a different place. In a case of that kind my first question is:

"'Parents in the circus?'

"Usually they were. If not, I guess again.

"'Church?' I ask, and that time I hit it. Funny, isn't it, that of all institutions only the church and the circus produce professional wanderers?"

Melody on the Farm.

If you like music and pretty pictures, you can have them at your will by getting up early on the farm and listening to the songs of the birds and all the signs and sounds of nature's resurrection. You can hear the chickens, the cows and the hogs—the neighing horses as the farmer comes with their feed. You can hear the voices at the lot—as the boys or the hired hands draw water for the stock and make ready for the day. Then, as the first long golden lance of light strikes down across the silent fields, you can see all the life and bustle of another opening day. And all of it is sweet, and bringeth peace and joy—as we find out sometimes when we have left it and pine for it again.—Sylvania (Ga.) Telephone.

Cheering Up.

"When your work seems to be going wrong," says a woman who mixes practical philosophy with her work, "blow yourself to something nice. Go out and buy yourself a lovely dinner at a nice place, or get a new dress, or buy some flowers for your apartment. Yes, I know it will cost money, but the impetus it will give you in your work will amply reay you. When you see these things you will say to yourself: 'Well, I'm doing pretty well, after all, when I can afford to blow myself so,' and when you feel that you are doing well you will do well."

Proof Positive.

A western newspaper man visited Washington recently and told the following story on former Representative Amos J. Cummings of New York, who was once city editor of the Sun. One Saturday night it was announced that all the saloons were to be closed next day.

Cummings called his star reporter, Murray.

"Tom," he said, "go out to-morrow and find out if the saloons were selling liquor."

It was Thursday when Tom again appeared at the city desk.

"They were," he reported.—Success Magazine.

ITINERANT MONARCHS.

European Rulers Who Travel on Diplomatic Missions.

It may be true that there is no east nor west when two strong men meet. But the meeting of Czar and Kaiser only emphasized the points of the compass and the subdivisions of geography by national and racial lines, says Collier's.

In the middle of June, at Pitpikas, on the Finnish coast, Nicholas and Wilhelm chatted about the future of Europe. Knowing that the Czar was planning a series of visits to President Fallieres, to King Edward, to the pope and Victor Emmanuel, and to one or more of the northwestern countries, the Kaiser inserted a call at the beginning of the imperial tour. It is believed that the German Emperor desired by his urgency to weaken the fellowship of Russia with Great Britain and France.

King Edward of England recently completed a pacifying tour, where his infallible tact was never in better oiled condition.

The theory of sovereignty used to be the static. "I sit, I teach," said the New England sage. And it was the old-fashioned idea of Kings that they were immovable on a golden throne. Seated like Javey, they dispensed justice from the center of rest. But today, to stay at the same point, they sometimes have to run at the top of their speed. A modern King is a bit of a commercial traveler.

The Sultan is said to have caught the idea, and packs his grip for a jaunt through Europe in the autumn of 1909. He will call on England in December.

Three Dr. Cliffords.

An amusing adventure happened on one occasion to Dr. Clifford when he was conducting a series of services in Birmingham. Arriving a few minutes before the commencement, the doctor was refused admission by the policeman at the door.

"I want to go in," said Dr. Clifford.

"Are you a seat holder?" asked the official.

"No, I am not."

"Then you can't go in."

"I think," remarked the famous passive resister, "that there will be room for me in the pulpit."

"I am not so sure of it," retorted the other.

"But I am Dr. Clifford and I am due to preach in another minute and a half."

"O, are you?" said the incredulous policeman. "I have let in two Dr. Clifords already."—Woman's Life.

Don't dope yourself for every little pain. It only hurts your stomach. Such pain comes usually from local inflammation. A little rubbing with Hamlins Wizard Oil will stop it immediately.

"Then You'll Remember Me!"

George W. Coleman, the noted sociologist, discussed, during the recent sociological conference at Sagamore Beach, tips and tipping.

"I have a friend"—so Mr. Coleman concluded—"who belongs to an anti-tipping association. My friend, in obeying the rules of his society, has many quaint experiences. He went traveling in the west in the spring. He dined one night in a fashionable western restaurant and after paying his bill he gathered up the change that had been brought upon a silver plate, and dropped it into his waistcoat pocket. As he rose to depart the waiter said in a low, appealing voice:

"'Surely, you won't forget me, sir?'

"'No, no,' said my friend. 'I'll write to you.'"

"Never Can Understand."

Still, a woman can't understand why an eighteen inning base ball game should interest her husband more than a good hot supper.—Detroit Free Press.

IN AGONY WITH ECZEMA.

Whole Body a Mass of Raw, Bleeding, Torturing Humor—Hair All Fell Out—Hoped Death Would End Fearful Suffering—In Despair—Cured by Cuticura.

"Words cannot describe the terrible eczema I suffered with. It broke out on my head and kept spreading until it covered by whole body. I was almost a solid mass of sores from head to foot. I looked more like a piece of raw beef than a human being. The pain and agony I endured seemed more than I could bear. Blood and pus oozed from the great sore on my scalp, from under my finger nails, and nearly all over my body. My ears were so crusted and swollen I was afraid they would break off. Every hair in my head fell out. I could not sit down, for my clothes would stick to the raw and bleeding flesh, making me cry out from the pain. My family doctor did all he could, but I got worse and worse. My condition was awful. I did not think I could live, and wanted death to come and end my frightful sufferings.

"In this condition my mother-in-law begged me to try the Cuticura Remedies. I said I would, but had no hope of recovery. But oh, what blessed relief I experienced after applying Cuticura Ointment. It cooled the bleeding and itching flesh and brought me the first real sleep I had had in weeks. It was as grateful as ice to a burning tongue. I would bathe with warm water and Cuticura Soap, then apply the Ointment freely. I also took Cuticura Resolvent for the blood. In a short time the sores stopped running, the flesh began to heal, and I knew I was to get well again. Then the hair on my head began to grow, and in a short time I was completely cured. I wish I could tell everybody who has eczema to use Cuticura. Mrs. Wm. Hunt, 135 Thomas St., Newark, N. J., Sept. 28, 1908."

The Law's Delays.

"I understand that you called on the plaintiff, Mr. Barnes. Is that so?" questioned Lawyer Fuller, now Chief Justice.

"Yes," answered the witness.

"What did he say?" next demanded Fuller.

The attorney for the defense jumped to his feet and objected that the conversation could not be admitted in the evidence. A half-hour's argument followed, and the judges retired to their private room to consider the point.

An hour later the judges filed into the court-room and announced that Mr. Fuller might put his question.

"Well, what did the plaintiff say, Mr. Barnes?"

"He weren't at home, sir," came the answer without a tremor.—From Success Magazine.

Higher Education.

Little Willie—Say, pa, what is the higher education?

Pa—The higher education, my son, is one that teaches a young man that he must work in order to earn an honest living.—Chicago News.

Summer Travel.

Mrs. Goodhart—All the way from Chicago. Didn't you find it very hot traveling?

Dusty Trax—Not at all, madam, I always take a refrigerator car in the summer.—Life.

A Gob of Philosophy.

"Most men think they are good husbands."

"Well?"

"And most wives humor them in that belief."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

An Unfamiliar Taste.

Regular Summer Boarder — The drinking water doesn't taste as sweet as it did last year.

Farmer Overalls—I reckon not; ye see, we cleaned out th' well this spring.

Adamless Eden.

Unda Towe—I see by the weather reports that we are in a region of low pressure.

Dolly Swagger — I should say we were. I've been here since the season opened, and I haven't felt any pressure yet.—Judge.

The Old Adam.

"I wonder why three-fourths of the stenographers in business offices are women?"

"I guess it is because men like to feel that there is at least one class of women whom they can dictate to."—Baltimore American.

Of Course.

First Summer Girl—My physician told me never to go into the water after a hearty meal.

Second Summer Girl—Most people know that much without being told. When I want a hearty meal I hope I know enough to go into a restaurant after it.

One Man's Wisdom.

Mrs. Nagge—John, have you read this magazine article entitled "How to Be Happy, Though Married?"

Nagge—Of course not. I know how without reading it.

Mrs. Nagge—Well, how?"

Nagge—Get a divorce.

Local Item.

"Since the price of flour has acquired the airship habit," wrote the village editor, "only the wealthy can afford to eat pie with an 'upper crust.' The poor must go back to the single-decked squash and custard."

Her Idea of Farming.

Husband—Well, I went out to see that little country place we saw advertised, and I've made up my mind to buy it.

Wife—Oh, then, we'll move away from the hateful old city for good?

Husband—Yes. It's a fine place, but there's only two acres of ground and half of that is covered by a pond of water.

Wife—Say, that will be nice. We can raise pond lilies and watermelons in it.

Much the Same.

"No," said the first dear girl, "I've no use for those summer young men. They remind me of Dresden china dolls."

"Because they are so beautiful?" queried dear girl No. 2.

"No," answered No. 1. "They get broke so easily.

Better Still.

"Madam," said the agent, addressing the lady who had opened the door in answer to his ring, "I am introducing the greatest household invention of the twentieth century. It is a combination tool in compact form, comprising a corkscrew, a can opener, a paper cutter, a bodkin, a nut pick and a shoe buttoner—and the price is only 25 cents."

"I haven't any use for it," replied the woman. "I bought a 5-cent package of hairpins yesterday."

Up to Her.

"Anyway," she said, "your heart is in the right place."

"Well, I hope it is," he rejoined. "By the way, where did you put it?"

High Flyers.

Gunner—What social plane do the Van Alberts travel on?

Guyer—Very high.

Gunner—H'm! Must be sort of an aeroplane, eh?

Another Knock.

Mrs. Stubb—It's queer, John, that you don't hear of any women going trout fishing.

Mr. Stubb—Not at all, Maria. You know in trout fishing you can't speak a word for hours at a time.

No Cause for Alarm.

Mrs. Newpop—John, dear, do you think so much bread and molasses is good for the baby?

Newpop—Sure it is. Bread is the "staff of life," you know.

Mrs. Newpop—Oh, I suppose the bread won't hurt him—but so much molasses——

Newpop—But he doesn't eat the molasses, my dear; he leaves that on the chairs and door knobs.

Not Gentle Enough.

Enpeck—I'd like to buy a nice, gentle driving horse.

Dealer—I've got just the horse you want. He is so quiet and gentle a woman can drive him.

Enpeck—But I want one to drive myself. Is that the gentlest you have?

A Romance—Her Assurance.

Young Cadson—Will you remember me when we are apart?

Beach Belle—Yes; you will always be "fresh" in my memory.

Withering Glances.

"I generally read the paper on my way to and from the office," said the importantly busy young man.

"I used to myself," said the old-timer, "before I got hardened to the looks of the girl strap-hangers."—Kansas City Times.

Sure for Once.

Van Antler—I think we are sure of a good dinner to-night. You know my new English butler does the entire catering for the household.

Grubb—Can you rely on him to——

Van Antler—Not always, but this evening I requested him to send up something from the kitchen table.—Puck.

Why He Repented.

Teddy—I wish I hadn't fought Jimmy Brown this morning.

Mamma—You see now how wrong it was, don't you, dear?

Teddy—Yes, 'cause I didn't know till this afternoon that he was going to give a party.—Kansas City Journal.

Had on the Wrong Coat.

Not long ago a young couple entered a railway carriage at Sheffield and were immediately put down as a bridal pair. But they were remarkably self-possessed, and behaved with sang froid that the other passengers began to doubt if their first surmise was correct after all.

As the train moved out, however, the young man rose to remove his overcoat, and a shower of rice fell out, while the passengers smiled broadly.

But even that did not affect the youth, who also smiled, and, turning to his partner, remarked audibly:

"By Jove, Mary! I've stolen the bridegroom's overcoat!"—Tatler.

"Dark Knights of the Road."

"Please, mister, I ain't got no home, an'!"

"What! Come right along with me to my office, and let me show you what we are offering in bungalows at one dollar down and a dollar a month!"

Swet Things.

Pearl—Freddy really thinks he is the candy kid.

Ruby—Gracious! Is that the reason the girls are always giving him taffy?

Striking Higher.

Young Poorman—Will you be my wife?

Miss Peachley—No, thank you. I'm opposed to labor unions.

Two Different Causes.

"Oh, dear," sighed the pretty heiress, "I'm so awfully miserable!"

"Why are you miserable?" queried the maid who was both homely and penniless.

"I'm afraid some one will marry me for my money," answered the pretty heiress.

"And I," rejoined the poor girl, "am miserable because I'm afraid no one will marry me because I haven't any money."

What She Hoped.

Miss Cayenne—Why, I thought you were to sail for Europe yesterday?

Callowit—That was me—aw—intention, doncher know, but I—aw—changed me mind at the lawst moment.

Miss Cayenne—Glad to hear it—and I hope you got a better one in the exchange!

As It Should Be.

"Things are not evenly balanced in this world," remarked the thoughtful thinker.

"How's that?" queried the dense party.

"There should be more leisure for men of business and more business for men of leisure," answered the t. t.

O, Stop!

She—I'm afraid these new shoes of mine aren't going to look a bit nice.

He—Why, are they so very comfortable?

Poverty.

"She has no friends to speak of."

"Good heavens! What does she talk about?"

As Usual.

He—What did you discuss at your debating club this afternoon?

She—Nothing. We just talked.

SAVED BY HIS CAMERA.

The gray timber wolf is a powerful and savage beast, not pleasant to meet in the wilds when one is unarmed. In "Wild Life on the Rockies" E. A. Mills tells of an encounter with a pair of these beasts, when he had nothing but a light ax and a camera for defenses. He had come upon the two wolves unexpectedly; in fact, they had been asleep in the sun when he disturbed them.

"I realized the danger, and was alarmed, of course; but my faculties were under control, were stimulated, indeed, to unusual alertness, and I kept a bold front and faced them without flinching.

"Their expression was one of mingled surprise and anger, together with the apparent determination to sell their lives as dearly as possible. I gave them all the attention which their appearance and their reputation demanded. Not once did I take my eyes off them. I held them at bay by looking at them. I still have a vivid picture of terribly gleaming teeth, bristling backs and bulging muscles in savage readiness.

"They made no move to attack. I was afraid to attack, and dared not run away. I recalled that some trees I could reach behind me had limbs that stretched out toward me, yet I felt that to wheel, spring and swing up beyond their reach could not be done quickly enough to escape those fierce jaws.

"Both sides were of the same mind, ready to fight, but not at all eager to do so. Under these conditions our nearness was embarrassing. My mind worked like lightning, and I thought of several possible ways of escaping. I considered each at length, found it faulty and dismissed it. Something had to be done.

"Slowly I worked the small folding ax from its sheath, and with the slowest of movements placed it in my right-hand coat pocket with the handle up, ready for instant use. I kept on staring. Then, looking the nearer of the two wolves squarely in the eye, I said to him: 'Well, why don't you move?' as if we were playing checkers instead of the game of life.

"He made no reply, but the spell was broken. I believe that both sides were bluffing. In attempting to use my camera while continuing the bluff I brought matters to a focus—literally.

"'What a picture you fellows will make!' I said aloud, as my right hand slowly worked the camera out of the case which hung under my left arm. Still keeping up a steady fire of looks, I brought the camera in front of me and then touched the spring that released the folding front.

"When the camera, mysteriously, suddenly opened before the wolves, they fled for their lives. In an instant they had cleared the grassy space and vanished into the woods. I did not get their picture."

BELIEF IN WITCHCRAFT.

Professor Sumner Thinks It May Break Out Again.

Belief in witchcraft is not dead. It is latent, and may burst forth anew at any moment, says Prof. William Graham Sumner in the Forum. "The difference (from age to age) is not so much in the amount of credulity as in the direction it takes." At the present day it is in politics. Lecky thought that the cause of persecution was the intensity of dogmatic opinion. That may be a cause. No man is tolerant about anything about which he cares very much, and in regard to which he thinks that he has "the truth." Struggles for political power, however, cause even intenser rage. It is political factions which in the future may return in violent repression of dissent. In the history of city after city we meet with the intensest rancor between classes and factions, and we find this rancor producing extremes of beastly cruelty, when interest seems to call for it. The cases of the Van Artevelde of Wullenweber in Lubeck, of the democrats in Ghent, in 1839, as well as the proceedings of the committees of safety against tories in the American revolution, may suffice as examples. Socialism is, in its spirit and program, well capable of producing new phenomena of despotism and persecution in order to get or retain social power. Anarchists who are fanatical enough to throw bombs into theaters or restaurants, or to murder kings and presidents just because they are such, are capable of anything which witch judges or inquisitors have done, if they should think that party success called for it. If bad times should come again upon the civilized world through overproduction and an unfavorable economic conjuncture, popular education would decline and classes would be more widely separated. It must then be expected that the old demonism would burst forth again and would reproduce the old phenomena.

Otherwise Occupied.

"Why don't you devote some attention to the preservation of your magnificent American forests?"

"It's worth thinking about," answered Mr. Cumrox. "Some of us men of wealth haven't given the subject due thought owing to our interest in furnishing the financial props for Europe's genealogical trees."—Washington Star.

$1000.00
SOLID GOLD & SILVER AWARD
For the Best Ear of Corn
To be Known as the W. K. Kellogg National Corn Trophy
To be Awarded at the
National Corn Exposition, Omaha, December 6 to 18, 1909.

Over one hundred thousand million (100,000,000,000) ears of corn were grown in the United States last year. Over a billion dollars were paid for them. More than a million and a quarter extra dollars went into the pockets of the farmers for corn this year than they received for the previous year's crop.

The reason for this may be found in the fact that the people of the United States are beginning to learn how delicious corn is and to realize its full food value.

Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes has placed corn among the indispensable items of daily fare.

The makers, therefore, are interested in the development of the King of Cereals, and have decided to award a beautiful trophy for the man, woman or child who can produce the best ear of corn in two different seasons.

Professor Holden, of the Iowa State College, the greatest authority on corn in the world, will award the prize at the National Corn Exposition, to be held at Omaha, Neb., December 6th to 18th, 1909. Two single rules will govern the plan, and they are:—that you send your best ear of corn to the National Corn Exposition, Omaha, Neb., before November 27, 1909; and that you are a member of the National Corn Association. Full particulars regarding which can be had by writing to National Corn Exposition, Omaha, Neb. Tie a tag securely to your specimen and word it, "For the Kellogg Trophy Contest," and write your name and address plainly. If yours is judged the best, you will get the trophy for 1910. If you succeed again next year or the year following, the trophy will become your property for all time. In other words, you must produce the best ear of corn two different years.

There will be no restrictions. Any man, woman or child belonging to the Association can enter. It will be open to every state in the Union. Professor Holden will judge the corn particularly on the basis of quality. The growing of more corn per acre is one object of the award, but the main purpose of the founder of the trophy is for

A nobleman was once showing a friend a rare collection of precious stones which he had gathered at a great expense and enormous amount of labor. "And yet," he said, "they yield me no income."

His friend replied: "Come with me, and I will show you two stones which cost me but five pounds each, yet they yield me a considerable income." He took the owner of the gems to his grist mill and pointed to two gray mill-stones, which were always busy grinding out grist.—Success Magazine.

DISCOURAGED WOMEN.

A Word of Hope for Despairing Ones.

Kidney trouble makes weak, weary, worn women. Backache, hip pains, dizziness, headaches, nervousness, languor, urinary troubles make women suffer untold misery. Ailing kidneys are the cause. Cure them. Mrs. Irene Tudor, 118 N. Clagg St., Bellefontaine, Ohio, says: "I thought my trouble incurable, as I suffered so long with kidney complaint. I had sharp, agonizing pains and serious urinary trouble. I was tired and depressed and nothing seemed to help me. Finally Doan's Kidney Pills brought relief and soon effected a complete cure."

Sugar Instead of Alcohol.

Indeed, the role and importance of sugar as a rapid reliever of fatigue is one which we are only just beginning to appreciate, and which goes surprisingly far already. It has been incorporated into the most hard-headed, cold-blooded, matter-of-fact diet on earth, the German army rations, especially the "forced-march" emergency ration. No other food of its bulk can take its place. It is the belief of careful observers of men, particularly in the tropics, that the larger the amount of sugar and sugar-containing foods they are supplied with the less alcohol and other stimulants they will crave. For instance, the United States Government now buys the best and purest of candy by the ton, and ships it to the Philippines, to be supplied to the canteens and messes, finding that its use diminishes the craving for native brandy; and it has long been a matter of comment from thoughtful observers that the amount of drunkenness of a race or class is in inverse ratio to the amount of sugar it consumes.—From Success Magazine.

BAD DREAMS

Caused by Coffee.

"I have been a coffee drinker, more or less, ever since I can remember, until a few months ago I became more and more nervous and irritable, and finally I could not sleep at night, for I was horribly disturbed by dreams of all sorts and a species of distressing nightmare.

"Finally, after hearing the experience of numbers of friends who had quit coffee and were drinking Postum, and learning of the great benefits they had derived, I concluded coffee must be the cause of my trouble, so I got some Postum and had it made strictly according to directions.

"I was astonished at the flavor and taste. It entirely took the place of coffee, and to my very great satisfaction, I began to sleep peacefully and sweetly. My nerves improved, and I wish I could wean every man, woman and child from the unwholesome drug—ordinary coffee.

"People really do not appreciate or realize what a powerful drug it is and what terrible effect it has on the human system. If they did, hardly a pound of it would be sold. I would never think of going back to coffee again. I would almost as soon think of putting my hand in a fire after I had once been burned.

"A young lady friend of ours had stomach trouble for a long time, and could not get well as long as she used coffee. She finally quit coffee and began the use of Postum and is now perfectly well. Yours for health."

THE POPULAR PULPIT

KEPT IN PERFECT PEACE.

By S. T. Willis, LL.D.

Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee, because he trusteth in Thee.—Isaiah 26: 3.

It is to be noted that man does not keep himself in peace, for in the sense of this grace that would, in fact, be impossible. But it is a gift. Jesus said, "My peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth give I unto you."

It is also to be noted that it is a perfect peace, for, indeed, God's peace could be nothing less, and it passes all human understanding. Like the gracious God by whom it is imparted, it is incomprehensible even to him who experiences it. It is perfect in its nature and perfect in its work, imparting a divine calmness and serenity of soul and a sweet, heavenly rest that the world can never give nor take away.

This peace does not occupy the world of material things; its realm is in the hearts and minds of men. He is kept in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on God. The world promises only tribulations, persecutions and afflictions, disappointments, heartaches and death. Its sweetest smiles are delusive, its trusted friendships bring danger, and its brightest hopes are fraught with evil. But God does not leave alone and unaided the soul that is stayed on Him. He is an ever present help in the time of trouble. He gives and sustains such peace of mind and composure of soul in the thickest of the fight that one can say: "The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?" For greater is He who abides in the trusting heart than all the combined forces of the world, the flesh and the devil. The soul kept in perfect peace can say when it comes to the valley of shadows, "I fear no evil, for Thou art with me."

And what is the secret of this sweet peace, the gift of God's love? It is all summed up in one word—trust—"because he trusteth in God; faith that takes Him at His word. It is that condition of mind that lays hold on God and yields all unto Him in perfect confidence. This giving up of all to God and the staying of the mind on God means three things—prayer, obedience and happiness. This giving up of all to God and the staying of the mind on God means three things—prayer, obedience and happiness. There is no hour so free from care or so exempt from temptations and ills that will not be brightened and sweetened if we direct our thought in faith to God, looking through what may seem to be a "frowning Providence" to the "smiling face" of divine love and mercy beyond. Listen to this infallible and all comprehensive prescription for human happiness: "In nothing be anxious; but in everything by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known to God. And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and your minds in Christ Jesus." Here is prayer, including supplication and thanksgiving. The hand of faith stretched out in earnest prayer relieves the heart from worry and anxious care and brings sweet peace and contentment—that calm, trustful, responseful prayer that believes in God's love and that lays the soul down upon His bosom, that in Him it may find rest.

It goes one step further in faith, rendering unquestioning obedience. God is yearning to bestow this grace in lavish abundance. Hear Him: "Oh, that thou hadst hearkened unto my commandments. Then had thy peace been as a river, and thy righteousness as the waves of the sea." Peace as a river—that is, abundant, free, full, living and never failing. It includes all other divine gifts, and the mind that is so stayed on God, through trust in Him, is kept in security and happiness, for deep down in the soul, far beyond any disturbance from any earthly enmity or ill, there flows from the throne of God, an eternal and gladdening river of peace.

EDUCATION AND LIFE.

By Henry F. Cope.

"They go from strength to strength."—Psalms 84:7.

Education is the duty of everyone. Many will be quite unable to withdraw from business and spend years in studious seclusion; necessity will drive them forth to the shop and the store, but life will never permit them to cease to grow or forgive them if their powers lie dormant and undeveloped. They must either grow or die.

No accidents of birth or place make this law less binding on us; each according to his powers must seek larger powers, each according to his world must make a larger world. The more talents life places in our hands the more will the universe demand of us at last, but never will less than was given be demanded nor even as much be sufficient.

The saddest sin of all is failure here, to stagnate in life, to cease to grow and to begin to die, to fall back into the animal and almost into the vegetable kingdom. Death is already the lot of those who will not seek more life. To become merely a machine in the shop or a cash box in the office is to miss your chance in life, to fail utterly at living, no matter how much you may succeed at being a dead piece of business machinery.

The great message of religion is just here; it is ever saying to a man, you have values that are not in things, you have possibilities and powers that cannot be measured in terms of things. Life is yours; all things and circumstances are but its tools and agencies. Learn to live, not for the tools that perish, but for the real self, that which is eternal.

Salvation is growth, sin is failure to grow, missing our possibilities, turning aside from life's true and high aims and permitting that which dulls the fine faculties, sears over-sensitiveness to the things of the soul, and prevents the life from finding its fullness.

This is the real joy of living, to know more, feel more, see more, to enter into a larger universe, to be able to do more and to be able to give more of the self and of one's service to our day. Greatness comes from such growth, and such greatness lies within the power of all. Few may climb the pedestals of fame, but all may open the heart and the imagination to the wealth of life about them.

The great writers, musicians, preachers, thinkers, are great because they are our teachers; they open up new worlds to us, they aid us to enrich our lives. But elements of greatness lie about us in the common things of life. Our nearest neighbors have something for us; every man is a soul; in each man we may, as we will, find either the great and the inspiring or the trivial and life destroying.

In every circumstance of life lies either enriching or impoverishing, just as we may approach it; its content is for us to determine. Daily duties may be seen as a part of great and glorious service for all the world or may be as treading at the devil's mills. He who drives a nail into a packing case may see that he is serving the universe and so reach his life out into its great breadth, or he may see himself as a slave at a soul-dwarfing task.

The test of every day and of every life is just here; is a man so living as to make life mean more and to make his life worth more? No dreams of heavenly bliss can set us free from this obligation to gain more life, and no speculations about the worth of our own soul can set us free from the obligation to live so as to have a life worth giving to our world and efficient powers with which to serve our day.

He who has found the joy of the life that goes from strength to strength, that treats of the food of the spirit, that companions with the great of all ages, that finds more life and rejoices in being able to give more life, he who finds life more abundant springing up within at every step of the way, has no fears as to life beyond; the potency of the present is the promise of the future.

Somehow in the life that thus grows, that finds in all about it the sources of strength and the avenues of service, there comes a sense of a larger, all-embracing life, the life of a father of spirits, the fullness of a power and affection toward which one presses, in which is found the hope and aim of all life, the source and end of being and in that sense of life all living finds unity and reason.

The Same, but Different.

Most lawyers take a keen delight trying to confuse medical experts in the witness box in murder trials, and often they get paid back in their own coin. A case is recalled where the lawyer, after exercising all his tangling tactics without effect, looked quizzically at the doctor who was testifying and said:

"You will admit that doctors sometimes makes mistakes, won't you?"

"Oh, yes, the same as lawyers," was the cool reply.

"And doctors' mistakes are buried six feet under ground," was the lawyer's triumphant reply.

"Yes," he replied, "and lawyers' mistakes often swing in the air."

Catch Your City Young.

This is the advice of Franklin Clarkin, writing in Success Magazine.

Three or four Iowans settled on a sandy beach in Texas to experiment with a city without taxes. As others joined them, the settlement formed a legal corporation—quite as the ancient Romans in Britain did—for the purpose of regulating domestic policy and administering powers of government; and as a means of checking up government by public opinion, the initiative and referendum was instituted.

After fourteen years Fairhope is thriving happily. Land is owned by the corporation, which is the community, and is leased to individuals for ninety-nine years. When one has paid into the communal treasury the annual ground rent of, say, $25 for his leasehold, $50 down for installing a telephone (if he wants one)—that is all the government exacts.

And in return for it there are three free schools; a water system without rates; a public dock; a library that is free without a Carnegie foundation; a telephone system with absolutely no charges within the county.

All these were established out of the surplus from ground rent, after paying the State and county taxes, and the cost of administration and improvements.

You see, according to this, there would be really nothing supernatural or miraculous about dividend-paying cities. Only an extreme sort of practicality. The main desideratum would seem to be that you must catch your city young, and thereafter protect it from private exploitation.

Carrying Bundles.

Everybody carries bundles, and everybody, according to a West Side philosopher who spends half his time in deducing traits of character from deeds performed and the manner of their performance, carries them in his own way.

"A man of cautious disposition," he said, "carries a bundle clutched tightly in his left hand. If it is too large to be carried that way he doesn't carry it at all, but has it sent home in the delivery wagon. Such a man is not only cautious, he is stubborn, and painfully slow of speech and thought; but he is home-abiding and of unquestionable probity. The man who carries a bundle in his right hand has all those qualities, but in a modified degree.

"A man who stumbles up the stairs of the elevated station with a package tucked under his arm inclining backward and downward at a decided angle is good natured, but rather pessimistic, and he might, if things went against him too hard, take refuge in drink. If the bundle tilts up he takes a more optimistic view of life and likes to tell stories.

"The man who carries a bundle hugged up close to his coat front is jealous and inclined to be stingy. Still, he can be managed, and if his wife has the knack of winding him around her finger she can easily be the best dressed woman in the block, because he has the money to do it with.

"The man who ties the bundle he has to take home with a heavy string and goes along swinging it by the loop made for that purpose is the most lovable chap of all, but he is also the most unreliable, because he is a spendthrift, and is so prodigal of his affections that the many women whom he is sure to make love to are apt to pass through some mighty uncomfortable days and nights before they find out where they are at."

A Grove Meeting.

The ten Churches of Christ of DeKalb county will hold their regular yearly meeting this year in Bartles grove which is the first grove north of the B. & O. Railroad on the east side of the first highway running north just east of Garrett. The meeting was put off one week on account of the grove being in use the 22nd., of August. The grove is a beautiful one and almost ideal for a religious gathering. Those driving from different points in the county will find plenty of shade and good water for their horses.

There will be both a forenoon and afternoon session. The Bible School will be at 9:30 in the morning and the preaching service at 10:45. The afternoon service will begin at 2:15. The communion service will be first and after this the sermon by J. D. Hull of Mishawaka, Ind., who will be the principal speaker of the day. The church at Kendallville where he was pastor will be at the meeting in the afternoon. The Kendallville minister and the ministers of the attending churches will participate in the services of the day.

All are urged to make a special effort to be at the splendid up-to-date Bible School service in the morning. The classes will be arranged according to the regular departments. The regular teachers of the Garrett school will teach in all departments except the adult.

As has been the custom heretofore the basket dinner will be in the grove. Those who have to come on the train Saturday evening will be entertained by the Garrett people if they are informed of their coming. Names can be sent to minister at Garrett. The evening service will be held in the Garrett church and the sermon will be by a visiting minister.

The minister and congregation at Garrett extend a cordial invitation to the other ministers and their congregations of the city to be present at the grove meeting especially in the afternoon. The hour service on the T & C will make it convenient for all to attend this meeting. The cars stop at the road leading to the grove.

Celebrate Anniversary

The Tri-State college at Angola will this year celebrate its twenty-fifth anniversary holding sessions parts of two days, Aug. 24 and 25. In the evening of the 25th a large banquet will be given by the two societies of the college, together with the alumni. Hundreds of alumni and old students are looked for, and the occasion promises to be a most enthusiastic and enjoyable affair. Committees of alumni and others are carefully planning programs, with a view to making the occasion a grand success. The Tri-State college, under the new law, is now accredited Normal, and is rapidly growing in numbers and influence. Several young people from St. Joe and vicinity have attended college there, and those who have attended there love to return, being assured of a kindly welcome. The citizens of Angola are arranging for special attractions on this anniversary occasion. Make arrangements to attend.

Rough on Nicolai

(Labor Times Herald, Ft. Wayne.)

Take the case of Frank Nicolai of Auburn, assistant cashier of the City National bank, for instance. He is such a nice young man. Unmarried, of course, but just too sweet for anything. Swell dresser and "expensive tastes," but with no one to keep but himself, and couldn't get along on his salary. Wasn't driven to thievery by necessity, but became a thief from choice so he could keep on cutting a wider swath than he could afford. Let the bank stand it, said he, and immediately he set about falsifying his books and stealing his employers' money. He was caught at it and the town was shocked. Not so much at the crime as the fact that he was caught at it and would probably be punished. He had bought a revolver and left a note and the town was in tears lest he had suicided. Such a pity that such a nice young man should shoot a hole through where his brains should have been, said society, and wept again and wrung its hands.

Nicolai didn't shoot, though. He was too big a coward, so he crawled back and appeared dazed. He said he was hungry and thirsty and was taken in and fed and watered and cuddled up in bed and watchers sat up all night lest his little tootsie-wootsies should get out from under the cover, and next morning the sheriff was informed of his return. The sheriff was invited to come around just the same as though he was being invited to a reception and when the thief was finally placed under arrest an "Oh?" of horror escaped the grand-dames and it was hoped Dear Frankie would not be placed in a horrid jail. Meanwhile he confessed and said he had been carrying on his thievery for a long time and really did not know how much it amounted to; didn't really have time to bother with such trifling details, you know. He was brought to this city to appear before the United States commissioner and a car load of sympathetic, sniveling friends accompanied him, eager to have the honor of going on his bond. That feat accomplished, Nicolai was escorted back to Auburn, where it was announced that he would immediately "accept" a position in a store at Ashley, pending his trial, which, it is hoped will not terminate too harshly. And so the incedent closes.

The case of young Detzer in this city was not quite so much of an outrage on common decency. Detzer was promptly arrested when his crime became known, the bank officials demanded immediate restitution; bail was secured with more or less difficulty; friends deplored the young man's fall, to be sure, but there was little affection and immediately the defaulter removed from the city.

But the real fact of it all is that a thief is a thief in spite of his clothes and his friends and the less the provocation the greater the crime, and in the case of Nicolai there was no provocation at all, and if he gets his deserts he will suffer the extreme penalty of the law.

STORE NEWS

We are making preparations to make this store better for your fall buying this year than it has ever been before We want our St. Joe and Spencerville friends and those residing in that vicinity to feel that this is a home trading place when they are in Hicksville. Further than that, we are always glad to meet and greet our St. Joe and Spencer ville friends whom we have known for years and whose friendship and loyality we have aimed to appreciate and value most highly, whether you buy here or not. When you are in Hicksville we want to see you, we want you to feel you have a welcome here at all times. It has been almost eleven years since we left St. Joe and it numbers many new residents since then that we should be glad to get acquainted with. If you are from that vicinity don't be backward about making it known at this store. We shall appreciate it and be glad to know you personally. Our store plans this season have been thoroughly mapped out and are already getting in shape for the fall season. School time will soon be here and the wants of the children can be well supplied from this store. Our suit department for ladies is now very complete and is attracting much attention. The shoe section is ready with its full quota of new styles. Dress goods in the new weaves are now being shown in the new fall effects. Carpets, rugs, mattings, linoleums are here now for your selection. May we have the pleasure of showing you the new goods in the next few days.

3rd. Annual Commencement

The Johnston School of Music has graduated five young ladies as the result of the past years work. Already three commencements have been given since the establishing of the school and a total of seven graduates has successfully completed the course as perscribed by Mr. Johnston. The entire course takes from four to six years for completion and in such course is found the National Graded Course, Gradus, Adparnassum, Masons Touch and Technic and Schumann's Symphonic Etude and if necessary some studies for extra work is given to strengthen certain points that are weak. The success attained by Mr. Johnston has been remarkable but when one is in touch with his rules it is easier to see why his time is so taken up. He is a thorough teacher and if a pupil fails to practice they are dismissed from his enrollment One cannot fail if they practice the time required by the teacher. In order for a scholar to graduate and receive a diploma they must memorize at least ten concert pieces and make one appearance in public. These requirements are similar to those of our graded schools.

Chastine Johnston
Of the Johnston School of Music

Two organ graduates have been sent from school, namely, Jessie Headley, '08 and Altha Ethel Houser, '09. Five piano graduates namely, Esther Hallabaugh, '07, and the Misses Lola Nimmons, Gladys Barney, Bessie Hart and Opal Vern Miller, '09. The commencement exercises were held this year in the M. P. Church, Friday evening, August 20, to a fair sized crowd and to say the least the exercise was the best ever given. Each graduate had their selections well memorized and everything went off smoothly.

During the past year Mr. Johnston refused about fifty students as his time was all occupied, this shows that the people are pleased with his work. The future work of Mr. Johnston is being watched with interest, as it is his intention to make a central point and have the students come to him for their lessons. The people should encourage him in his work as he is spending all his time and money upon this one thing.

Mr. Johnston uses his own piano for all his recitals as no such results could be derived from any other. He has a Knabe parlor grand.

Walter Reunion.

The Sixth Annual reunion of the Walter family assembled together at the home of B. F. Walter and family, on West Main Street, Saturday, August 21. The Walter family consists of eight children and they were all present except Mrs. Hatfley, who was detained on account of ill health. In all there being thirty-eight immediate relatives besides a number of other relatives and friends numbering sixty-six in all. A bounteous dinner was served under canvas in the yard to which all did ample justice. The business session was opened after a social hour following the feast and the report of last year's meeting was read after which bills were allowed for $2 75 for necessary expenses. The president, Mr. George Walter, of near Grabill, gave a short early history when three brothers and a sister came from Pennsylvania in 1784 and settled in Columbiana County, Ohio, and lived and died there with the exception of one boy who moved to Jay County, Ind., southeast of Wayne. At this time the nearest market place for the Ohio people was Pittsburg, a distance of 68 miles overland. A letter was read from Clarence, Dale and Arthur Walter of Casmopolis, Wash., but as we are outdone by the fire this week, the article will appear in the next issue. The next place of meeting selected was at Henry Walter's, the last Saturday in August, 1910. The officers for the ensuing year are: President, Geo. W. Walter; Secretary, Miss Fern Walter; Treasurer, Mrs Kate Davis. The meeting was adjourned to meet in one year. John Tustison took a photo of the bunch.

A Big Blaze

The town of St. Joe was in an awful uproar last Monday night. While everyone was slumbering, about 12:30 the cries of fire were sent from one end of town to the other and the citizens were aroused all excited with men, women and children hollowing to the top of their voices. Mrs. H. W. Krabill was aroused from her sleep by the cat and she glanced out the south window and saw the Curie restaurant on fire. She immediately called her husband and the central boy was awakened and phoned to the different homes and tried to arouse the citizens. By this time Mr. Krabill had summoned help and began to send out word to all. Within a short time a great crowd of people had gathered on the scene and it was soon realized that the building was beyond control and as THE NEWS office is only 4 feet from the restaurant it was a question as to whether it could be saved or not. The bucket brigade began to fight for the protection of our office and every means were used to save it. At times chances looked rather slim for us but they stayed by us and our property was saved. Had the fire got beyond control the entire block would have been licked up by the flames and thousands of dollars worth of property lost. The restaurant building had iron shutters on and it is thought that it is the only thing that saved the entire block. The brick walls were not damaged very much on the front and rear ends. The building was two stories high and there remains today only the high black walls. The entire building was gutted from one end to the other and not one thing was removed of any consequence. The building and contents were insured. The Lutheran church was not damaged much only being a few feet away.

THE NEWS office was entirely moved out with the exception of the machinery, it being too heavy for moving in such short notice. We desire to thank the citizens and all others who so kindly assisted in saving our property and if we can do you a favor we would be only too glad to do so. It is impossible for us to express our gratitude to the public. The adjoining business men are truly thankful to you. There seems to be some little trouble in getting the buckets and tubs back to their original owners and if you have gotten the wrong one return it and we will see if you can't find your own. Several have been left entirely without a bucket.

Cucumbers for canning. Phone J. W. Sherer, St. Joe, Indiana

J. W. Dills and wife of Hicksville, were St. Joe visitors one day last week.

Dr. Geisinger, the Health Officer of Auburn, was in town Friday on business

The first crop will pay the cost of a good fertilizer. Curie sells bradley's.

J. D. Leighty and wife returned home Monday from their western trip, and report a very fine time.

Harold and Kenneth Jenkins of near Waterloo, are spending a few days with relatives at this place

Charlie Koch and family came home from Cold Springs Sunday to visit Mrs. Koch's aunt and uncle, Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Royer, they returned in the evening.

St. Joe and Newville crossed bats Sunday on the Beeks Erick farm, south of town and resulted in St. Joe getting cleaned up proper. We are notified that hereafter no ball games will be allowed on that farm The score was too much for publication.

Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Royer of Orville, Ohio, are the guests of the former's sister, Mrs. Chris Curie and husband, south of town. Mr. Royer will be remembered by many of our readers, as a school teacher, having taught the first term of school in the old Hallabaugh building. He is now practicing law at the above named place. They returned home Monday.

The Rev. J. N. Scholes, of Newark, Ohio, a former St. Joe boy, will preach the forenoon sermon at the yearly meeting of the Churches of Christ of DeKalb county in Bartle's grove near Garrett, on next Sunday, August 29. The singing during the day will be led by an Evangelist of the brotherhood and that part of the service promises to be a treat. The grove is almost ideal for such a meeting and it will be a treat for everyone who attends.

Sechler Reunion

The nineteenth annual reunion of the Sechler family was held at the home of Henry Sechler at Butler last Wednesday, August 18. Thirty-eight of the members were present and twenty guests from Butler making a total of fifty-eight The forenoon was spent in visiting in a good old fashioned way. At the noon hour all were called around well filled tables which they greatly enjoyed. A program was given in the afternoon, the election of officers after which the host and hostess served ice cream and cake. At a late hour all departed to their many homes declaring they had had a day well spent. The reunion will be held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Kinsey next year.

PAST AND PRESENT

AS IT COMES TO US FROM ALL CORNERS OF THE EARTH.

Telegraphic Information Gathered by the Few for the Enlightenment of the Many.

Wealth of Farms Has Increased.

During the last twelve years, the period covering the administration of Secretary of Agriculture James Wilson, the agricultural balance of trade in the United States increased from a yearly average of $234,000,000 to $411,000,000, or 75.7 per cent., according to the department's year book just made public. This wonderful development is only in keeping with the progress that has been made along all lines of agricultural activity. At the same time, it is stated, many conditions affecting the lives of the farmers of the country have advanced in even greater ratio until many of the undesirable features of farm life have been eliminated.

Pere Marquette Train Is Wrecked.

The west-bound Pere Marquette passenger train which left Detroit, Mich., with Cincinnati and Detroit sleepers for Grand Rapids and Petoskey was wrecked two miles east of Grand Lodge, Mich. Engineer Bradley and his fireman, whose name has not been learned, are thought to have been killed. Several passengers are reported to have been injured, and there may have been some killed. Reports say the locomotive boiler exploded.

$100,000 Baby Is Dead.

The 3-weeks-old daughter of J. F. and Clementine Deshon, the "$100,000 baby," is dead at their home in the country near Jeffersonville, Ind. It was the birth of this child which saved to Mrs. Deshon and Mrs. Clark, nieces of the late James A. Holt, the $100,000 farm, which was to have gone to the Clark Masonic Lodge of Jeffersonville, if they died without issue. Lawyers say that the Lodge can have no claim on the property.

The G. A. R. Standard Stolen.

A dispatch from Salt Lake City, Utah, says: The standard of the Grand Army of the Republic, which has been carried for the past twenty years by the commander-in-chief of the Grand Army, and has been the official banner of every encampment since 1889, has been missing since the parade of the veterans August 11, and it is feared it has been stolen. When last seen it was floating over the reviewing stand.

Roosevelt Trophies Arrive New York.

Twenty casks and nine cases containing specimens, trophies of the hunt, collected by the Roosevelt expedition in South Africa have arrived in New York on the steamer Provincia from Marseilles. The specimens, representing twenty different kinds of animals, will be forwarded to the Smithsonian institution at Washington.

Hetty Green's Son to Buy Airship.

Hetty Green's son, E. H. R. Green, who runs a railroad system, a cattle ranch, a cotton plantation and a life insurance company in Texas, is in New York to buy an aeroplane. Politics, power boat and automobile racing have long been his diversions, but now, although he weighs 300 pounds, he wants to go in for aviation.

Shot Dead On Own Doorstep.

Michael Hall, 80 years old, and nearly blind, was shot dead on his own door step in the village of Walsh, Ont. His aged wife was shot four times but is still alive and may recover. A lad named Shelley, who is said to have quarreled with the old man, has been arrested.

Boy Killed By Base Ball.

Benson Smith, 14 years old, was killed at Chicago, Ill., by a base ball striking him on the right ear. He was catching in a game and as he turned to leave his post the pitcher, Martin Bailey, let another ball go. The boy died before a physician could be called.

Deposed Shah Assailed His Son.

According to advices from Teheran, Persia, the recent attempt of the young Shah to commit suicide was really an attempt to assassinate the boy made by his father, the deposed Shah, who struck his son with a poniard.

$200,000 Fire at Fort Worth.

Fire in the business district of Ft. Worth, Texas, caused a loss of $200,000. Among the losers are the Nash Hardware Company, J. Goldstein's clothing store and two restaurants.

Many Miners Killed in Mexico.

A score of miners are reported to have been killed by the fire which is destroying the Camelia mine at Real Del Monte, in the State of Hidalgo, Mexico.

STREET CAR MEN AGREE TO TERMS IN CHICAGO

Presidents of Two Traction Companies Make Offer Which Union Leaders Call Good.

GAIN OF $1,000,000 IN WAGES

That Much Additional Pay for Employes in Three and a Half Years of Contract.

The wage dispute between Chicago's 10,000 street car employes and the surface traction companies, which a week before resulted in a vote to strike, was practically settled in a big joint conference of traction officials and union leaders Friday night, apparently to the satisfaction of everybody concerned.

John M. Roach and Thomas E. Mitten offered a wage scale to the men which representatives of the union said they would recommend to their respective organizations for acceptance. It was in the nature of a compromise agreement, applying to the employes of the Railways, City, Calumet and South Chicago and Consolidated companies.

Traction representatives, in company with Walter L. Fisher, representing the city, who was credited with the pilotage of the negotiations estimated in round figures that the offer represents an aggregate additional expenditure in wages of $1,000,000 during the next three and a half years—the term of the proposed contract.

Terms of Proposed Contract.

The contract will run three and a half years, dating from Aug. 1, 1909, and to all old men who have served one year at 27 cents per hour—the old maximum scale—it will grant an immediate increase to 28 cents for the first year of the contract, 29 cents for the second year, and 30 cents for the last eighteen months.

To men who have been in the service less than one year the rate of pay proposed is the same as at present (23 cents for six months, 25 cents for six months, and 27 cents for one year) until they have served a year at 27 cents, when they will begin the climb which the old employes will start as soon as the contract is completed.

New men will progress at the maximum more slowly than at the present. The first six months of employment they will receive 23 cents; the second six months, 24 cents; the second year, 25 cents; the third year, 26 cents, and the last six months, 27 cents.

BANK ROBBERS KILL AND WOUND

Surprised in Oklahoma Town, They Slay Marshal, Injure Cashier.

Two robbers, surprised while looting the State Bank at Kiefer, Okla., Monday night, shot and killed City Marshal Inford and probably fatally wounded Cashier Calmer Wobling. They escaped. A posse was quickly organized and hurried in pursuit. Cashier Wobling, who lives over the bank, was awakened by a noise in the bank shortly after midnight. Upon investigation he saw by the dim light burning in the rear two men at work on the vault door. Hastily summoning Marshal Inford, he procured a revolver. The marshal and cashier entered the bank by the front door while the robbers were busily engaged in drilling the safe door. A slight noise made by the city marshal attracted the attention of the robbers. The next moment they extinguished the light and then opened fire. After half a dozen shots had been exchanged Inford sank to the floor with a bullet through the head. The next moment Wobling also fell, shot through the chest. Then both robbers hurried for the door and fled. The men had just succeeded in drilling the safe and were preparing to pour in nitroglycerin when surprised at their work.

GROWS EGYPTIAN LOTUS.

Calumet River and Historic Nile Only Streams that Can Do It.

The Egyptian lotus is flourishing in the Calumet river three miles east of Hammond, Ind. Thousands of the gorgeous flowers are in bloom. The Nile and Calumet rivers are said to be the only streams in the world where this flower grows in a state of nature. The flower is five or six inches in diameter and is of a delicate yellow tint tipped with green. It is open during the day and closed at night. Old settlers of Hammond have no account of the importation of the plant from Egypt and believe it is indigenous to the Calumet as well as to the Nile river.

FIVE PERISH IN BURNING HOUSE

Occupants Lose Lives While Asleep in Dwelling at Hancock, Mich.

Five lives were lost in a fire in a dwelling in Hancock, Mich., Thursday night. The dead are Mrs. John Dionne; Edward Dionne, 8 years old; Peter Dionne, an infant; Aminia Dionne, 12 years old, and a girl named Racine. The fire started when the family was asleep. Mrs. Dionne got out of the house, but, returning to rescue a child, perished in the flames. Her body was found with the infant clasped in her arms.

A RECORD BREAKER.

CALLS INHERITED RICHES EVIL.

Aged Millionaire with Large Family Leaves Wealth to Church.

Theodore Harris, the aged banker who died a few days ago in Louisville, leaving more than $1,000,000, left practically his entire estate to the Baptists of Kentucky. He left comparatively few cash bequests to his family, which is large. His blood heirs will have a life tenure in certain portions of his estate, enough to net them an income of $150 a month each.

In his will, written and signed on April 15, 1907, he provides further that should the beneficiaries he names die or become otherwise disqualified, the portion set aside for them shall revert to the estate as a whole and be paid eventually into the hands of the Baptist Church organizations.

The discrepancy between his bequests to the church and those to his own children he explains by saying: "The observations of a long life have taught me that inherited wealth is seldom useful to the one inheriting it, while, on the other hand, with the blessings of God, these benefactions will do good to thousands yet unborn."

ODDS & ENDS OF SPORT

Country Jay, the 13-year-old trotter, in the grand circuit races at the State fair at Detroit, reduced his record from 2:11 to 2:07¼. The old gelding was not considered in the betting and sold in a $12 field in pools of $492.

Harry G. Legg, of the Minikahda Club, Minneapolis, won the trans-Mississippi golf championship by defeating Bernard G. Guinand, of the Wavel Club, of Des Moines, 10 to 8 to play in the final match at the Des Moines Golf and Country Club.

The Glidden tourists, while in the Twin Cities, were entertained at M. W. Savage's stock farm by a race in which Dan Patch and Minor Heir paced a dead heat. It was a magnificent race, the time being variously figured at from 2:06⅝ to 2:06¾.

Fifteen Russian racing horses of the famous Orluff breed from the imperial racing stables of Moscow are to be exhibited in America this fall at various State fairs to determine whether or not there is sufficient interest in this class of animals to warrant importation for sale.

SON SLAYS RICH FATHER.

Quarrel Because Victim Doesn't Pay for Child's Funeral.

John G. Ostby, a grocer in Duluth, Minn., was murdered by his eighteen-year-old son, Bjorn, in a quarrel relative to the payment of the funeral expenses of one of the children of the family, who died a week ago. The father, who was wealthy, was slow in paying the funeral bill and received a note from the undertaker, threatening suit. This agitated Mrs. Ostby. She reproached her husband and left the house. The father and son quarreled. Ostby's daughter went to the room in which they were and found the door locked. A few minutes later there was the report of a rifle. She ran to alarm neighbors, but before any one arrived the police were on the scene, the boy who had just slain his father having telephoned for them.

ALABAMA TO BE DRYEST STATE.

House Passes Bill Prohibiting Sale or Shipping of Liquor.

In almost a frenzy the House members of the Alabama Legislature on Friday made a violent assault on the sale of intoxicants of all kinds, passing the Fuller bill, beyond question the most drastic ever offered in the South. By its provisions no liquors may be sold; no advertisement of liquors may appear in any paper or upon any billboard, and no train may leave a car that contains liquor upon any track. No place of selling any sort of goods may be called a saloon. Officers may raid any place under suspicion and destroy goods found. The presence of an internal revenue license, whether liquor is found or not, is prima facie evidence of guilt and the proprietor may be arrested.

CARS DEADLY IN CHICAGO.

Fifteen Adults and Seven Children Killed Last Month.

Mayor Busse of Chicago, aroused by numerous fatal street car accidents recently, has determined to take drastic measures to insure greater safety to pedestrians and vehicles. The Mayor called for statistics on the subject from the City Attorney and received a report that during the last month twenty-two persons had been killed and 253 persons injured in 284 accidents. This is an average of nearly eight accidents a day. Seven of the twenty-two persons killed were children.

KILLS RELATIVE AS THIEF.

Kentucky Man Also Shoots at Sister Who Is Guest at His Home.

Believing they were burglars trying to break into his house at Fulton, Ky., George Speed shot and instantly killed his brother-in-law, Abe Vinson, and fired upon but missed his sister, Vinson's wife. Mr. and Mrs. Vinson were guests at the home of Speed. Because of the heat they went out on the balcony to sleep for a while. When they were returning they were discovered by Speed, who fired without making an investigation.

Argentine Admits American Cattle.

Cattle from the United States hereafter will be allowed importation into Argentine, the president of that country having rescinded the embargo against such entry. The action of Congress in putting hides on the free list is believed to have influenced Argentina to take this step.

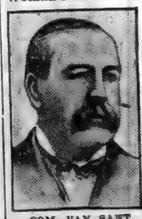
NEW HEAD OF G. A. R.

Samuel R. Van Sant Elected Commander in Chief.

Former Governor Samuel R. Van Sant of Minnesota was elected commander-in-chief of the G. A. R. Thursday in Salt Lake City, over Judge William A. Ketcham of Indiana by a vote of 587 to 156. In addition to Commander Van Sant, the following officers were elected:

Senior Vice Commander—W. M. Bostaph, Ogden, Utah.
Junior Vice Commander—Judge Alfred Beers, Bristol, Conn.
Surgeon General—W. H. Lemon, Lawrence, Kan.

Mrs. Jennie L. Berry of Des Moines won the national presidency of the Woman's Relief Corps on the third ballot over Mrs. Belle Harris of Kansas by a vote of 213 to 90. The Flying Squadron Naval Association elected all its new officers by acclamation. For commander John C. Black was re-elected, and lieutenant commander H. N. Rounds, of Rock Island, Ill. The army nurses, composed of survivors of the nurses who labored during the Civil War, elected as president Mrs. Mary T. Lacy, Salt Lake City, and as guard Mrs. Elizabeth Chapman, Illinois.



COM. VAN SANT.

The encampment ended at night with a fireworks display on Ensign peak.

By the close vote of 307 to 293 Atlantic City was chosen over St. Louis as the place for the next encampment, after a spirited fight.

The annual parade, the feature event of the encampment, gave Salt Lake City a martial aspect Wednesday. The Fiftieth Infantry, U. S. A., from Fort Douglas, took the lead. It was followed by the Utah National Guard and the carriages of the commander-in-chief and distinguished guests. Illinois led the States. Then came Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, Ohio and the rest. The veterans marched down a street 132 feet in width past cheering thousands of spectators. At one point 1,200 school children in red, white and blue robes and caps formed a human flag. The flag joined the parade and followed the veterans to the starting place, where they passed in review before Henry M. Nevius, commander-in-chief.

FROM FOREIGN LANDS.

An explosion of fire damp occurred in one of the mines at Clermont, Ferrand, France, which resulted in the death of twelve miners.

All the members of the cabinet of President Gomez of Cuba, except the Secretary of Justice, resigned to enable the president to reconstruct it in accordance with popular demands.

The South Australian government has purchased 1,600 acres of land for the purpose of encouraging and demonstrating the best methods of dairy farming. A government expert is to have charge of the farm.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

The developments continue entirely favorable to increasing activity throughout the industries. The important basis is the strength derived from the rise in new demands for factory outputs and wider disposition to enter into commitments for future needs. Iron and steel production in this district now compares favorably with the best previous records. Construction plans denote considerable accumulation for railroads, manufacturers and mercantile houses.

The government crop report was as important a factor as expected, and its effect has created great encouragement throughout the productive and distributive branches. High absorption of breadstuffs and provisions is a notable feature, but live stock markets are yet without adequate supplies for packing.

Transportation returns show further recovery in freight handling by both rail and lake.

Money is slightly dearer and in strong request at the advance, rates for choice commercial paper being now quoted at 4½ to 5 per cent. Sales of local securities are double the volume at this time last year.

Dealings reflect much improvement in the cash markets for leading grains and flour, the buying being influenced by easier values and necessary replenishment after a long period of very conservative absorption. The total movements of grain at this port, 11,067,547 bushels, compares with 9,329,187 bushels last week and 9,828,205 bushels a year ago. Compared with 1908, increases appear in receipts 15.4 per cent and in shipments 9.3 per cent.

Bank clearings, $253,606,195, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1908 by 21.7 per cent and compare with $224,174,169 in 1907.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 29, against 22 last week, 16 in 1908 and 22 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 7, against 6 last week, 3 in 1908 and 4 in 1907.—Dun's Weekly Review of Trade.

NEW YORK.

Improvement is more manifest in general trade and industry this week, but there is still present the feeling of conservatism hitherto noted, which makes for small and frequent, rather than heavy individual sales. Developments have been largely favorable, chief among these the increased arrivals of buyers in most markets, a greater disposition to take hold for fall and spring delivery, a very favorable government crop report, the continuance of the marked strength in security markets, the growing firmness of the time money market.

The railroad situation is improving and idle cars are disappearing on the western lines as the winter wheat movement enlarges. Industries are active, iron and steel leading, with railroads reported buying freely of rails, cars and locomotives.

Collections show a little improvement, but as yet do not reflect the influence of new crop marketing, possibly because of the farmers being busily engaged. Building is active and trades catering to this line note rather more doing.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with Aug. 12 were 219, against 184 last week, 249 in the like week of 1908, 146 in 1907, 143 in 1906 and 147 in 1905.

Business failures in Canada for the week number 24, against 27 last week and 31 last year.—Bradstreet's.

CHAPTER XXII.

There was much to do, and John Saxton had been back and forth twice between the ranch house and the village before the sun had crept high into the heavens. The little village had been slow to grasp the fact of the tragedy at its doors which had already carried its name afar. There was much to do and yet it was so pitifully little after all! Warry Raridan was dead, and eager men were scouring the country for his murderer; but John Saxton sat in the room where Warry had died. It seemed to John that the end had come of all the world. He sharpened his grief with self-reproach that he had been a party to an exploit so foolhardy; they should never have attempted a midnight descent upon an unknown foe; and yet it was Raridan's own plan.

Saxton had ministered to the boy Grant with characteristic kindness. Grant knew now of Warry's death, and this, with his own sharp experiences, had unnerved him. He clung to Saxton, and John soothed him until he slept, in one of the upper chambers.

Wheaton stood suddenly in the door, and beckoned to Saxton, who went out to him. They had exchanged no words since that moment when the old bishop's prayer had stilled the room where Warry Raridan died. Through the events of the morning hours, Wheaton had been merely a spectator of what was done—Saxton had hardly noticed him, and glancing at Wheaton now, he was shocked at the look of great age that had come upon him.

"I want to speak to you a minute—you and Bishop Delafield," said Wheaton. The bishop was pacing up and down in the outer hall, which had been quietly cleaned and put in order by men from the village. Wheaton led the way to the room once used as the ranch office.

"Will you sit down, gentlemen?" He spoke with so much calmness that the others looked at him curiously. The bishop and Saxton remained standing, and Wheaton repeated, sharply, "Will you sit down?" The two men sat down side by side on the leather-covered bench that ran around the room, and Wheaton stood up before them.

"I have something to say to you, before you—before we go," he said. Their silence seemed to confuse him for a moment, but he regained his composure. He looked from Saxton to the bishop, who nodded, and he went on:

"The man who killed Warry Raridan was my brother," he said, and waited.

Saxton started slightly; his numbed senses quickened under Wheaton's words, and in a flash he saw the explanation of many things.

"He was my brother," Wheaton went on quietly. "He had wanted money from me. I had refused to help him. He carried away Grant Porter thinking to injure me in that way. It was that, I think, as much as the hope of getting a large sum for the boy's return."

A great quiet lay upon the house; the two men remained sitting, and Wheaton stood before them with his arms crossed, the bishop and Saxton watching him, and Wheaton looking from one to the other of his companions. Contempt and anger were rising in John Saxton's heart; but the old bishop waited calmly; this was not the first time that a troubled soul had opened its door to him.

"Go on," he said, kindly.

"My brother and I ran away from the little Ohio town where we were born. Our father was a harness maker. I hated the place. I think I hated my father and mother." He paused, as we do sometimes when we have suddenly spoken a thought which we have long carried in our heart but have never uttered. The words had elements of surprise for James Wheaton, and he waited, weighing his words and wishing to deal justly with himself. "My brother was a bad boy; he had never gone to school, as I had; he had several times been guilty of petty stealing. I joined him once in a theft; we were arrested, but he took the blame and was punished, and I went free. I am not sure that I was any better, or that I am now any better than he is. But that is the only time I ever stole."

Saxton remembered that Warry had once said of James Wheaton that he would not steal.

"I wanted to be honest; I tried my best to do right. I never expected to do as well as I have—I mean in business and things like that. Then after all the years in which I had not seen anything of my brother he came into the bank one day as a tramp, begging, and recognized me. At first I helped him. I sent him here; you will remember the man Snyder you found here when you came," turning to Saxton. "I knew you would not keep him. There was nothing else that I could do for him. I had new ambitions," his voice fell and broke, "there were—there were other things that meant a great deal to me—I could not have him about. It was he who assaulted me one night at Mr. Porter's house two years ago, when you," he turned to the bishop, "came up and drove him away. After that I gave him money to leave the country and he promised to stay away; but he began blackmailing me again, and I thought then that I had done enough for him and refused to help him any more. When Grant Porter disappeared I knew at once what had happened. He had threatened—but there is something—something wrong with me!"

These last words broke from him like a cry, and he staggered suddenly and would have fallen if Saxton had not sprung up and caught him. He recovered quickly and sat down on the bench.

"Let us drop this now," said Saxton, standing over him; "it's no time——"

"There's something wrong with me," said Wheaton, huskily, without heeding, and Saxton drew back from him. "I was a vain, cowardly fool. But I did the best I could," he passed his hand over his face, and his fingers crept nervously to his collar, "but it wasn't any use! It wasn't any use!" He turned again to the bishop. "I heard you preach a sermon once. It was about our opportunities. You said we must live in the open. I had never thought of that before," and he looked at the bishop with a foolish grin on his face. He stood up suddenly and extended his arms. "Now I want you to tell me what to do. I want to be punished! This man's blood is on my hands. I want to be punished!" And he sank to the floor in a heap, repeating, as if to himself, "I want to be punished!"

There are two great crises in the life of a man. One is that moment of disclosure when for the first time he recognizes some vital weakness in his own character. The other comes when, under stress, he submits this defect to the eyes of another. James Wheaton hardly knew when he had realized the first, but he was conscious now that he had passed the second. It had carried him like a high tide to a point of rest; but it was a point of helplessness, too.

"It isn't for us to punish you," the bishop began, "and I do not see that you have transgressed any law."

"That is it! that is it! It would be easier!" moaned Wheaton. John turned away. James Wheaton's face was not good to see.

"Yes, it would be easier," the bishop continued. "I can see that in going back to Clarkson many things will be hard for you——"

"I can't! Oh, I can't!" He still crouched on the floor, with his arms extended along the bench.

"But that is the manly thing for you. If you have acted a cowardly part, now is the time for you to change, and you must change on the field of battle. I can imagine the discomfort of facing your old friends; that you will suffer keen humiliation; that you may have to begin again; but you must do it, my friend, if you wish to rise above yourself, and you may depend upon my help."

The old man had spoken with emphasis, but with great gentleness. He turned to Saxton, wishing him to speak.

"The bishop is right. You must go back with us, Wheaton." But he did not say that he would help him. John Saxton neither forgot nor forgave easily. He did not see in this dark hour what he had to do with James Wheaton's affairs. But the Bishop of Clarkson went over to James Wheaton and lifted him up; it was as though he would make the physical act carry a spiritual aid with it.

"We can talk of this to better purpose when we get home," he said. "You are broken now and see your future darkly; but I say to you that you can be restored; there's light and hope ahead for you. If there is any meaning in my ministry it is that with the help of God a man may come out of darkness into the light again."

There was a moment's silence. Wheaton sat bent forward on the bench, with his elbows on his knees and his face in his hands.

"They are waiting for us," said Saxton.

A special train was sent to Great River, and the little party waited for it on the station platform, surrounded by awed villagers, who stood silent in the presence of death and a mystery which they but dimly comprehended. Officers of the law from Clarkson came with the train and surrounded Bishop Delafield, Wheaton and Saxton as they stood with Grant Porter by the rude bier of Warry Raridan. The men answered many questions and the sheriff of the county took the detectives away with him. Margrave had sent his private car, and the returning party were huddled in one end of it, save John Saxton, who sat alone with the body of Warry Raridan. The train was to go back immediately, but it waited for the west-bound express which followed it and passed the special here. There was a moment's confusion as the special with its dark burden was switched into a siding to allow the regular train to pass. Then the special returned to the main track and began its homeward journey.

John sat with his arms folded, sunk into his great-coat, and watched the gray landscape through the snow that was falling fast. The events of the night seemed lyike a hideous dream. It was an inconceivable thing that within a few hours so dire a calamity could have fallen. The very nearness of the city to which they were bound added to the unreality of all that had happened. But there the dark burden lay; and the snow fell upon the gray earth and whitened it, as if to cleanse and remake it and blot out its color and dread. The others left Saxton alone; he was nearer than they; but late in the afternoon, as they approached the city, Captain Wheelock came in and touched him on the shoulder; Bishop Delafield wished to see him. John rose, giving Wheelock his place, and went back to where the old man sat staring out at the snow. He beckoned Saxton to sit down by him.

"Where's Wheaton?" the bishop asked.

John looked at him and at the other men who sat in silence about the car. He went to one of them and repeated the bishop's question, but was told that Wheaton was not on the train. He had been at the station and had come aboard the car with the rest; but he must have returned to the station and been left. John remembered the passing of the west-bound express, and went back and told the bishop that Wheaton had not come with them. The old man shook his head and turned again to the window and the flying panorama of the snowy landscape. John sat by him, and neither spoke until the train's speed diminished at a crossing on the outskirts of Clarkson. Then suddenly, hot at heart and with tears of sorrow and rage in his eyes, Saxton said, so that only the bishop could hear:

"He's a coward!"

The Bishop of Clarkson stared steadily out upon the snow with troubled eyes.

CHAPTER XXIII.

Porter insisted that Margrave should not have the Traction Company at any price, though the general manager of the Transcontinental was persistent in his offers. As Margrave did not care to deal with Porter, who was not, he complained, "an easy trader," he negotiated with Fenton and Saxton. After several weeks of ineffectual effort he concluded that Fenton and Saxton were almost as difficult. He called Saxton a "stubborn brute" to Saxton's face; but offered to continue him in a responsible position with the company if he would help him with the purchase. He still wanted to control the company for political reasons, but there was also the fact of his having invested the money of several of his friends in the Transcontinental directorate, prior to the last annual meeting.

These gentlemen had begun to inquire in a respectful way when Margrave was going to effect the coup which, he had been assuring them, he had planned. They had, they were aware, no rights as against the bondholders; and as Margrave understood this perfectly well, he was very anxious to buy in the property at receiver's sale for an amount that would satisfy Porter and his allies, and give him a chance to "square himself," as he put it. This required additional money, but he was able to command it from his "people," for the receiver had demonstrated that the property could be made to pay. While these negotiations were pending, Saxton and Fenton were able to satisfy their curiosity as to the relations which had existed between Wheaton and Margrave. Margrave had no shame in confessing just what had passed between them; he viewed it all as a joke, and explained, without compunction, exactly the manner in which he had come by the shares which had belonged to Evelyn Porter and James Wheaton.

When Saxton came back from Colorado, Porter was ill again, and Fenton was seriously disposed to accept a price which Margrave's syndicate had offered. Margrave's position had grown uncomfortable; he had to get himself and "his people" out of a scrape at any cost. His plight pleased Fenton, who tried to make Porter see the irony of it; and this view of it, as much as the high offer, finally prevailed upon him. He saw at last the futility of securing and managing the property for himself; his health had become a matter of concern, and Fenton insisted that a street railway company would prove no easier to manage than a bank.

Porter was, as John had said, "a peculiar brick," and after the final orders of the court had been made, and Saxton's fees allowed, Porter sent him a check for five thousand dollars, without comment. Fenton made him keep it; Porter had done well in Traction and he owed much to John; but John protested that he preferred being thanked to being tipped; but the lawyer persuaded him at last that the idiosyncrasies of the rich ought to be respected.

Porter felt his burdens slipping from him with unexpected satisfaction. He grew jaunty in his old way as he chid his contemporaries and friends for holding on; as for himself, he told them, he intended "to die rested," and he adjusted his affairs so that they would give him little trouble in the future. The cottage which he had bought on the North Shore was a place they had all admired the previous summer. Porter had liked it because there was enough ground to afford lawn and flower beds which he cultivated with so much satisfaction at home. The place was called "Red Gables," and Porter had bought it with its furniture, so that there was little to do in taking possession but to move in. The Whipples were their first guests, going to them in mid-July, when they were fully installed.

The elder Bostonians whom Porter had met the previous summer promptly renewed their acquaintance with him. He had attained, in their eyes, a new dignity in becoming a cottager. The previous owner of "Red Gables" had lately failed in business and they found in the advent of the Porters a sign of the replenishing of the East from the West, which interested them philosophically. Porter lacked their own repose, but they liked to hear him talk. He was amusing and interesting, and they had already found his prophecies concerning the markets trustworthy. The ladies of their families heard with horror his views on the Indian question, which were not romantic, nor touched with the spirit of Boston philanthropy; but his daughter was lovely, they said, and her accent was wholly inoffensive.

So the Porters were well received, and Evelyn was glad to find her father accepting his new leisure so complacently. She and Mrs. Whipple agreed that he and the general were as handsome and interesting as any of the elderly Bostonians among their neighbors; and they undoubtedly were so.

Reparee.

Madame—Jules, we have been married six months, and you no longer love me.

Monsieur—My dear! I——

Madam—Oh, it's no use attempting to deny it. You should have married a stupidier woman than I to make such a denial convincing.

Monsieur (a little huffy)—Well, it's not my fault. I couldn't find one.—Le Rire.

She'd Mind Him.

Hope was three years older than her baby brother, and felt herself equal to assuming the responsibilities of big sisterhood. When, therefore, her mother asked her to "keep an eye" on the baby and see that he didn't fall out of bed, Hope answered:

"Yes, mamma, I'll mind him; an' if he falls, I'll call you the minute he hits the floor."—Harper's Magazine.

The Trouble.

The post sat staring at the blank sheet of paper on the table before him.

"What is the matter, dear?" asked his sympathetic better half, as she passed her cool hand over his troubled brow. "What is on your mind?"

"Nothing," answered the poet, gloomily; "nothing, I assure you. That's the trouble."

Then He Got Busy.

Him—What would happen if I were to attempt to kiss you?

Her—It would scare me awfully.

Him—And would you scream?

Her—Oh, no. Fright always renders me speechless.

One Explanation.

"I wonder what produces that tired feeling in spring?"

"I guess it's thinking about the summer vacation."—Baltimore American.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

George L. Dunbar has been made manager of the gas plants at Auburn, Garrett and Kendallville.

Joe Simons, painter at Huntington, was painfully hurt in tumbling from a house on which he was at work.

O. G. Soice has been elected a members of the School Board at Plymouth, succeeding the late Theodore Cressler.

Pickpockets at Elkhart got $68 from Ira G. VanTilburg, 72 years of age, as he was boarding a street car in Elkhart.

Miss Kittie Smith, the armless girl at South Whitley, has become financial secretary for the Home for Crippled Children at Woodburn, Ill.

Curtis Johnson, in jail at Decatur on charges of larceny, is employing his time by inventing a skate sharpener and a non-refillable fruit can.

Charles Ashley, a Huntington barber, was fined $1 and costs for striking County Treasurer Fast when the latter called to collect delinquent taxes.

John Studabaker, Sr., the veteran Bluffton financier, is critically ill and symptoms of gangrene have developed. Mr. Studabaker is 92 years of age.

Lew Kline, of Wabash, has a turtle captured in Little Lake at Warsaw. The monster weighs thirty-six pounds and measures thirty-six inches lengthwise and eighteen inches crosswise.

William Reed, aged 30 years, was caught by the collapsing of a shed in the rear of the plant of the Crawford & McCrimmons Company, machinists, at Brazil and was seriously injured. It is feared his skull is fractured. He is married.

Eleven-year-old Willie Richie, of Indianapolis, and Harry Rickabaugh, 10 years old, of Louisville, Ky., were found by the police of Vincennes near the Union Station. The boys, who are inmates of the St. Vincent's Orphan Asylum, say they escaped from a band of gypsies, who kidnapped them.

Mrs. Johanna Loer, a pioneer of New Castle, has the distinction of having lived to witness and patricipate in the golden wedding anniversary of her daughter. Mrs. Loer is past 90 years of age. She has spent nearly all of her life in New Castle and vicinity. The daughter in whose golden anniversary celebration she participated is Mrs. Harvey Davis.

Mrs. Abner Carnahan, six miles south of Auburn, was driving the team used to elevate oats from the wagon to the haymow by means of block and tackle when the floor pulley broke and struck her in the face, lacerating it in a frightful manner. The injury is not dangerous, but it was necessary for surgeons to take twelve stitches in closing the wounds.

Mayor C. A. Rigdon, of Warsaw, will share with Joseph Furay in drawing ticket No. 1 in the Flathead reservation lands. Furay lives in Warsaw, but is traveling most of the time for a Kentucky distillery. He dropped into Warsaw some time ago and went to Mayor Rigdon. "Here," he said, "let's take a chance on this drawing. I am unlucky and never got anything. If I have a lucky man with me I feel in my bones that I can win. You are the lucky man; let's give it a whirl?" They signed an agreement and Furay left for the West, taking three numbers for the Mayor. The winning will be divided equally between the two.

William O. Weldele, of Terre Haute, township trustee, whose foot was amputated in the hope of checking blood poisoning caused by the scratching of the skin of his foot by a piece of the brass setting of a shirt stud which slipped into his shoe, died from the shock of the surgical operation. At first he was in good spirits, and said he would soon be in his office. He was elected last November. Some years ago he served in the City Council, and he had been a candidate for other offices. He was elected as a Democrat. He was known throughout the city some years ago as perhaps the heaviest man in town, but in later years he had got rid of much flesh.

Patents have been issued to Indiana inventors as follows: R. Cook, Indianapolis, marking device; H. A. Duliiski, Muncie, coupling; E. R. Dye, Monticello, heater; O. Grimwood, Owensville, loader and unloader attachment; D. J. Hauss, Aurora, electric magnet; C. F. Hyatt and E. W. Messmer, Indianapolis, horseshoe; B. J. Knapp, Evansville, nose glasses; W. F. Schacht, Goshen, rubber elastic force cup; J. K. Sharpe and C. N. Leonard, Indianapolis, motor vehicle; J. C. F. Sprankle, Fort Wayne, fire escape apparatus; J. M. Stafford, Petersburg, focusing light producer; B. H. Stewart and J. C. Henickel, Staunton, combined rotary harrow roller and cutter; T. Thornburg, Hammond, waterback for furnaces; E. E. Towle, Richmond, corn planter; H. B. Turner, Linton, stepladder; C. O. Wiley, Delphi, post-molding machine.

Carl Smiley, aged 20 years, of Washington, died of a wound inflicted by a playmate nine years ago, when the latter pointed a rifle at his head and did not know it was loaded.

Vetal Bouchie, who observed his ninety-ninth birthday last February, and who is the oldest man in Vincennes, enjoyed an automobile ride a few days ago. He was a guest of Major William Penn Gould. The aged man expressed himself delighted with automobiling.

John N. Munter has been assigned permanently to Fort Wayne as Postoffice Inspector.

Virgil A. Eberly, of West Lafayette, has been appointed a civil engineer student in connection with the Department of Agriculture.

The gross postal receipts of the Indianapolis postoffice for July were $81,231.10, which was an increase of $4,671.36 over the same month one year ago.

While workmen were grading a country road in Washington they unearthed a skeleton believed to be that of Claud McAlpin, who disappeared some years ago.

Fred Landis, former Representative in Congress of the Eleventh Indiana District, was married last week to Miss Bessie A. Baker, daughter of Dr. L. L. Baker, of Logansport.

Frederick Keil, veteran of the Civil War, editor of the Gazette, postmaster under President Harrison's administration, died at his home in Fort Wayne several days ago.

Miss Margaret Frick, of Evansville, was bitten a few days ago on the ankle by a mosquito, and Dr. George W. Varner, who has been called in on the case, says Miss Frick's condition is serious and that blood poisoning is threatened.

Twelve squares of streets in Mitchell have been oiled this summer to keep down the dust and they have proved so satisfactory that an additional car of oil has been ordered. Several more streets will be improved within a few weeks.

Poison infecting a finger of John M. Ganzer, an Evansville jeweler, from a wire with which he had pricked a giant tarantula he had on display in his show window threatens the loss of his hand. The hand has swollen to twice its normal size, and the attending physician fears that amputation may be necessary.

A. C. Trentman, aged 66 years, a retired wholesale grocer of Fort Wayne, died at a hospital in Philadelphia, Pa., where he had been for the last nine weeks taking treatment for a neck growth. He was attacked with appendicitis last week and his constitution was too far drained to withstand that disease.

At the annual meeting of the Madison County Council on September 7th the County Commissioners will ask the Council for an appropriation of $32,000 for voting machines. Elections in Madison County cost about $6,000 under the Australian ballot system. The Commissioners think voting machines would reduce the cost to $2,000.

Moses Myers and John Heiny, pioneer residents of Cambridge City, are examples of thrift to many of the younger generation. The former is 81 years of age, the latter, 72 years of age. These men, despite their age, worked shoulder to shoulder, all of last week in a field, pitching and stacking hay with but little complaint of fatigue.

Sherman Martin, the 3-year-old son of Thomas Martin, who was shot at the country home west of Columbus by John Martin, his brother, aged 6 years, is still in a critical condition. The boy who did the shooting still refuses to tell how it happened, and the parents of the children do not yet know whether the shooting was accidental or premeditated.

On his arrival at his home in Lafayette from the Philippine Islands, where he has been stationed as an army surgeon for four years, Dr. Lewis R. Thompson found a communication from the government authorities offering him a promotion to the rank of captaincy with an increase of $500 a year in salary. Dr. Thompson now ranks as first lieutenant.

"I'm stung!" cried John Weatherow, of Owensville, after he had taken a mouthful of watermelon. Those who were near him thought Weatherow had reference to the flavor of the melon. When he ceased to dance about, however, he explained that two honey bees had stung him on the tongue. Weatherow could not utter a word five minutes later, his tongue being swollen twice its natural size. Weatherow did not notice the bees clinging to the piece of melon which he had been enjoying.

Cases of animals adopting other than their natural offspring are often reported, but a case far out of the ordinary is that of a mare taking a calf and raising it as her own. In the pasture land of John Campiln, near North Salem, is a mare and her colt and a spring calf. The calf, not satisfied with the lacteal fluid supplied by the farmer, gets an extra portion by robbing the colt of its just share. The mare at first resisted the calf by kicking it, but later became reconciled, as the nervy calf became more insistent. The mare, colt and calf are now living in the pasture on the best of terms.

Peter M. Stiver, a wealthy farmer near Goshen, was kicked in the stomach by a horse in his barn, one mile west of Millersburg. His wife found him unconscious three-quarters of an hour later. He will die.

Ora Cox, employed in the cement plant at Stroh, fell from the upper floor of the building and only an intervening scantling prevented him from landing in a vat of boiling cement. His injuries are severe, but not fatal.

DEATH TAKES DR. H. W. THOMAS

Founder of the People's Church, Chicago, Expires in Florida.

One of Chicago's most noted clergymen of days gone by has been claimed by death. The Rev. Hiram W. Thomas died Thursday night at De Funiak Springs, Fla., where he had lived recently because of his feeble health. The body was taken to Chicago for burial. Jenkin Lloyd Jones of All Souls' Church conducted the funeral services.

Dr. Thomas ranked with Prof. David Swing as one of the most noted preachers of the West when both were tried and convicted of heresy nearly a generation ago. Theological opinions have changed since then and many orthodox clergymen now accept and preach the same doctrines which caused the expulsion of Thomas and Swing from their respective denominations.

After the expulsion of Dr. Thomas from the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1879, he established the undenominational People's Church, which held regular services in McVicker's Theater. In 1901 he resigned as pastor and was succeeded by the Rev. Frank Crane.

Hiram Washington Thomas was born in Hampshire County, Va., on April 29, 1832. He was converted at the age of 18 and at once began to prepare to become a clergyman. He took a private course of study and afterwards attended Cooperstown Academy and Berlin College. He came West and joined the Iowa conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1856, having married Miss Emmeline C. Merrick of Pennsylvania the preceding year. For three years he was chaplain of the Iowa penitentiary, which position he left to become pastor of Park Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church in Chicago in 1869. Later he was pastor consecutively of First Methodist Episcopal Church, Chicago. First Church at Aurora and Centenary Church, Chicago. While pastor of this church he was accused and convicted of heresy.

REV. DR. H. W. THOMAS.

His first wife died on Jan. 5, 1896. They had seven children, the only surviving one being Dr. Homer W. Thomas of Chicago. Early in 1899 the Rev. Dr. Thomas met Miss Vandalia Varnum, a lecturer on liberal religion and ethics. They married several months later, and she was ordained soon afterwards as assistant pastor of People's Church.

7,000 STRIKERS IN RIOT.

McKee's Rocks Workmen Take Possession of Street Cars.

Goaded to fury by the threat of eviction from their homes, 7,000 workmen who have been on strike at the big plant of the Pressed Steel Car Company of McKees Rocks, Pa., broke into a riot Wednesday night. The rioters took possession of all street cars running in the neighborhood of the plant and refused to permit any man who is not a striker to ride. They also compelled the motormen to haul them about and would not pay fares.

The State troopers were forced to fire volley after volley over the heads of the strikers, who threw stones in return. At least a dozen persons were struck with missiles and three were wounded by glancing bullets. Scores were clubbed by the troopers, who rode into the crowd on the gallop. Twenty men were arrested and marched in a hollow square to the box car prison within the stockade.

The first fatality growing out of the strike occurred early Thursday, when Steve Harvat, one of the strikers, was shot and killed by Major Smith, a negro, whom a crowd of two score striking foreigners had attacked by mistake for a strike breaker.

HANGS HIMSELF NEAR HOARD.

Economical Husband Whose Wife Left Him Had $2,119 in Garret.

When Albert Burt's wife left him several weeks ago she said he was so economical that she could not stand it any longer, and in a few days he committed suicide. Mrs. Burt has returned to their home at Mineola, L. I., and has just found $2,119 hidden in the rafters of the garret where her husband hanged himself. With the expectation of finding much more money she has begun a systematic search of the house.

BODY HANGS THREE MONTHS.

Pittsburg Suicide Is Long Unnoticed Where Hundreds Pass Daily.

After hanging for about three months to a tree within a few feet of a public road, along which hundreds of persons passed daily, the body of an unknown man, apparently about 70 years of age, was found near Pittsburg, Pa., by berry pickers. No clew as to the identity of the supposed suicide was found on the body.

He is dealing extensively this year in cucumber pickles and orders came thick and fast by placing an ad in our paper. As soon as he caught up with orders he came back with another ad. You try it once if you want to buy or sell something. Some few weeks ago we received an ad from Auburn stating that a ladies gold watch was lost at the Fairview picnic and in a short time the watch appeared. It pays to advertise in THE NEWS

Nervous or Sick Headache will yield quickly to the influence of Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills. 25 doses 25 cents.

Another real estate transaction occurred last Friday. E E. Berry had successfully sold the James Rickett farm of 80 acres to Daniel Hersey of Newville township. Mr. Rickett expects to locate some place where the climate is more favorable, as he has the asthma very bad.

An organization was perfected in Auburn Thursday by the temperance element preparatory to holding a local option this fall. DeKalb county is now dry by remonstrance, and the drys are taking no chances. Butler first remonstrated out the saloons, and the remonstrance expires Jan. 31. It was to hinder the wets getting a foothold there, that the step was taken at this time. Rev. N. C. Shirley was present and addressed the meeting and officers were elected.

As the result of his Strenuous exercise on the Auburn baseball diamond Thursday afternoon, where, as the shortstop, he was one of the mainstops of the "fat" team, Dan Herrick was laid in bed Friday afternoon while Mrs. Herrick kept watch with the arnica bottle at hand. Dan wouldn't admit he was knocked out, but his stiff limbs failed him and he hurried off to his bed chamber while nobody was looking Friday night he treated both the "fats" and "leans" to ice cream at Reed's restaurant.—Press-Tribune.

'Twas A Glorious Victory.

There's rejoicing in Fedora, Tenn. A man's life has been saved, and now Dr. King's New Discovery is the talk of the town for curing C. V. Pepper of deadly lung hemorrhages. "I could not work nor get about," he writes, "and the doctors did me no good, but, after using Dr. King's New Discovery three weeks, I feel like a new man, and can do good work again." For weak, sore or diseased lungs, Coughs and Colds, Hemorrhages, Hay Fever, LaGrippe, Asthma or any Bronchial affection it stands unrivaled. Price 50c. and $1.00. Trial Bottle free. Sold and guaranteed by H. Milliman.

Nervous Collapse

"I have traveled for thirty years continually. I lost a great deal of sleep, which together with constant worry left me in such a nervous state that finally, after having two collapses of nervous prostration, I was obliged to give up traveling altogether. I doctored continually but with no relief. Dr. Miles' Nervine came to my rescue—I cannot describe the suffering which this Nervine saved me. Whenever I am particularly nervous a few doses relieve me." A. G. C. LIBBY, Wells, Me.

There are many nervous wrecks. There is nervous prostration of the stomach, of the bowels, and other organs. The brain, the kidneys, the liver, the nerve centers are all exhausted. There is but one thing to do—build up the nervous system by the use of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. Its strengthening influence upon the nervous system restores normal action to the organs, and when they all work in harmony, health is assured. Get a bottle from your druggist. Take it all according to directions, and if it does not benefit he will return your money.

FELT REPARATION WAS DUE

Impulsive But Repentant Cowboy Would Respect Last Wishes of the Deceased.

A young Bostonian went to Texas and turned cowboy. He rapidly caught the spirit of the country and as rapidly shook off the outward semblance of tender-footed eastern habit. Rough-bearded, leather-clad, sombrero as wide as the widest, 42-caliber Colts on his hips, he was as wild as the wildest. Yet within his bosom still burned the flame of Boston culture and refinement. One day he was riding with a stranger across the prairie. Turning his head suddenly (he was slightly ahead) he saw his companion make a suspicious motion toward his hip-pocket. Without hesitation he drew his revolver and shot him. The stranger dropped like a log. The cowboy dismounted and looked at the body of his victim. "I wonder if he was really going to shoot me?" he soliloquized; "I'll see." Turning the body over, he discovered a flask of whisky protruding from the pocket. "Poor fellow!" he said, in a tone of regret; "I've made a mistake. I've killed an innocent man and a gentleman at that. He wasn't going to shoot me; he was going to invite me to have a drink. Well," he sighed, drawing his sleeve across his mouth, "the last wishes of the deceased shall be respected."

CASNOW &

Gorrell Family Reunion.

The Seventh Annual reunion of the Gorrell family, according to previous announcements, was held in the Railroad Park at this place, Thursday, August 19. Early in the day members of the clan began to arrive and the only thing done during the forenoon was for the secretary to see that every person had registered. About noon, Editor J. J. Gorrell of Winamac, Ind., called the meeting to order and Rev. G. F. Zeuber led in prayer after which the secretary read the report of the 1908 meeting, which was held at Robison Park, August 20. By this time the 12:40 B. & O. passenger train had arrived and the tables were spread for the feast of good things. The tables were laden with the choicest of the farm and about 112 persons feasted for about an hour. After the dinner hour a short program was rendered.

Tustison and Zimmerman were on the grounds with their cameras and several pictures were taken. The business part of the meeting was next and the date set for holding their next reunion was set for the third Thursday in August, 1910. The entire meeting seemed to be pleased with the park Mr. Kees had arranged for them and was decided by a unanimous vote that the St. Joe, (Ind.) Railroad Park should be named the place for holding the next reunion. The officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows:—President, Milo J. Gorrell; Vice Pres., H. H. Kees; Secretary, Wm. F. Gorrell; Historian, J. J. Gorrell, Winamac, Indiana.

A vote of thanks was tendered Mr. Kees for his kindness in preparing for the comfort of the association and making it such a success. Mrs. Post of Chicago, favored the meeting with a very fine solo, Mrs. S. B. Dustman of New Haven; and Mrs. Lora E. Leighty of this place, each rendered a pleasing instrumental piece. Master Keith Gorrell comes in for his share of praise for having given a very pleasing recitation. In looking over the secretary's book we found that friends and relatives to the number of 112 and that the different towns represented were Hicksville, New Haven, Garrett, Woodburn, Winamac, St. Joe, Muncie, Grabill, Bryan, Ohio; Auburn, Newton, Iowa, Harlan, LaOtto, Chicago, Spencerville, Waterloo, Ossian and Concord. J. J. Gorrell gave a few remarks regarding their ancestry as found in the library at Chicago Several visitors were present. We desire to thank the association for extending to us such a cordial invitation and we enjoyed meeting the many strange faces and we further hope that more of us may be able to meet together next year.

Hurrah for the Cleveland judge who ruled that a man need not wash the dishes! If he had only included house cleaning—but then, maybe he will touch on that later on.

That's what you can do for some friend—send him THE ST. JOE NEWS fifty-two times for only a dollar.

Better than a letter, because it gives ALL the home news each week; there is positively no token you could offer which would make a home so happy in your remembrance as this newspaper mailed to some distant relative or friend.

We are making it just as good as it possibly can be done for $1.00. In fact, lots of publishers have raised to $1.50 on not so creditable a paper as this—and we tell you frankly that when you plank down your dollar on our table for a friend, you'll get your money's worth. A very serious accident might have occured last Wednesday noon when Argyl Beams was going to take Miss Mink and Alda Elson to the train. He drove to Zehners after Miss Iva and Miss Mink and had started to Goldsmiths for Miss Elson, when Mrs. Will Miller came driving from the depot in good speed, never noticing Beams rig. Beams gave the whole road and drove as close to the fence as possible. It seems Mrs. Miller's horse made a straight dive for the other rig run into it and tore the shaft off of both rigs, tore the harness all off of the Miller horse and threw Mrs. Miller out over the dash board. It was thought she was hurt. Dr. Shook was called but found her to be just stunted. He took the young ladies to the train in his automobile.

WORTH MOUNTAINS OF GOLD

During Change of Life, says Mrs. Chas. Barclay

Graniteville, Vt. — "I was passing through the Change of Life and suffered from nervousness and other annoying symptoms, and I can truly say that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has proved worth mountains of gold to me, as it restored my health and strength. I never forget to tell my friends what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me during this trying period. Complete restoration to health means so much to me that for the sake of other suffering women I am willing to make my trouble public so you may publish this letter." — MRS. CHAS. BARCLAY, R.F.D., Graniteville, Vt.

No other medicine for woman's ills has received such wide-spread and unqualified endorsement. No other medicine we know of has such a record of cures of female ills as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

For more than 30 years it has been curing female complaints such as inflammation, ulceration, local weaknesses, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion and nervous prostration, and it is unequalled for carrying women safely through the period of change of life. It costs but little to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and, as Mrs. Barclay says, it is "worth mountains of gold" to suffering women.

Handsome at Eighty-four.

The anniversary of the death of the Prince Imperial the other day was kept in solemn devotion by his mother, the Empress Eugenie. Of all figures in modern history there is none so tragic as that of the widow of Napoleon III. Now in her eighty-fourth year, Empress Eugenie, as Queen Victoria persisted in calling her, always dresses in deep mourning and the stately figure and sad face would compel any stranger unaware of her identity to look at her twice as she walks along, leaning heavily on her stick. In spite of her age she is in remarkably good health and takes an active interest in everything around her.

Of Scotch and Spanish extraction, the Empress Eugenie, in spite of the series of dramatic events which have clouded her life, is still a remarkably handsome woman, and she still has much of the charm that stirred the admiration of the spectators of her marriage in Notre Dame, the Boston Evening Transcript says. There are still people living in Paris who remember her good work during the cholera epidemic that raged through the city some forty-five years ago. Once, herself suffering from a severe cold, she spent the whole day visiting the cholera patients in the hospitals.

Knew When to Stop.

The shrewd lawyer knows when to stop questioning, and none is more shrewd than the one who, conducting a case of bribery, questioned a man the other day, who is rated high in the business world.

"Have you yourself ever refused a bribe?" he asked.

"No, but——"

"That is all," said the lawyer.

At a latter time he was asked why he had dismissed the witness so soon.

"Because," he replied, "I knew by the 'but' that he was going to tell me no one had ever attempted to bribe him."

THREE REASONS.

Each with Two Legs and Ten Fingers.

A Boston woman who is a fond mother writes an amusing article about her experience feeding her boys.

Among other things she says: "Three chubby, rosy-cheeked boys, Bob, Jack and Dick, aged 6, 4 and 2 years respectively, are three of our reasons for using and recommending the food, Grape-Nuts, for these youngsters have been fed on Grape-Nuts since infancy, and often between meals when other children would have been given candy.

"I gave a package of Grape-Nuts to a neighbor whose 3-year-old child was a weazened little thing, ill half the time. The little tot ate the Grape-Nuts and cream greedily and the mother continued the good work and it was not long before a truly wonderful change manifested itself in the child's face and body. The results were remarkable, even for Grape-Nuts.

"Both husband and I use Grape-Nuts every day and keep strong and well and have three of the finest, healthiest boys you can find in a day's march."

Many mothers instead of destroying the children's stomachs with candy and cake give the youngsters a handful of Grape-Nuts when they are begging for something in the way of sweets. The result is soon shown in greatly increased health, strength and mental activity.

"There's a Reason."

Look in pkgs. for the famous little book, "The Road to Wellville."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Smiles of The Day

Two Different Things.

A long-winded, prosy counselor was arguing a technical case recently before one of the judges of the Superior Court. He had drifted along in such a desultory way that it was hard to keep track of what he was trying to present, and the judge had just vented a very suggestive yawn.

"I sincerely trust that I am not unduly trespassing on the time of this court," said the lawyer, with a suspicion of sarcasm in his voice.

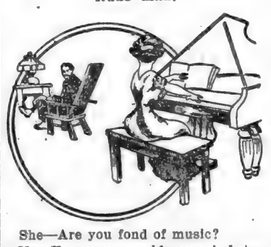
"There is some difference," the judge quietly observed, "between trespassing on time and encroaching on eternity." New York Times.

Cause and Effect.

"What a sweet disposition your wife has—and with all those children, too."

"Yes. She used to be cranky, but the kids have got her so she minds all right."—Cleveland Leader.

Rude Man.



She—Are you fond of music?

He—Yes, very; would you mind stopping?

Coincidence.

On the notice board of a church near Manchester the other day the following announcements appeared together: "A potato pie supper will be held on Saturday evening. Subject for Sunday evening: 'A Night of Agony.'"—Manchester Guardian.

A Camera's Joke.

"Just the same, it's no snap," remarked the man who seemed to be thinking aloud.

"What's no snap?" queried the innocent bystander who had overheard.

"Making a time exposure with a camera," explained the noisy thinker.

Too Late.

"I'm introducing a brand-new invention—a combined talking machine, carpet sweeper and a letter opener," said the agent, stepping briskly into an office.

"Got one already," answered the proprietor, "I'm married!"—The Bohemian.

Womanlike.

Madge—You must have managed to console the poor girl, for she stopped crying.

Marjorie—That wasn't the reason. She stopped when she found that she hadn't another handkerchief.—Puck.

A Suburban Test.

"Are your neighbors, the Huxters and Panroves, good friends?"

"Well, I guess! Why, they even praise each others' lettuce!"—Puck.

The Soft Answer.

Mr. Blower—Your automobile hit me, but I got its number, all right!"

Fair Occupant—So nice. It will make a capital decoration for your den.—Puck.

His Wish.

Little Willie—I hate to have my face washed.

Little Bobby—So do I. I wish I was a big man and could wear whiskers.—Philadelphia Record.

Joyful Thought.

He—Just think, Henrietta, in fifteen more years we kin git married.

She (ecstatically)—Oh, Jimmie!

Practical Idea.

Mrs. Long—Here's an invitation to Mr. Short's wedding. What on earth can we send the happy couple?

Long—I have it. Short borrowed $10 of me nearly two years ago. I'll send him a receipted bill.

Wrong Diagnosis.

Gyer—There goes a man who is afraid to think for himself.

Myer—Why doesn't he get married?

Gyer—That's the trouble—he is married.

By Way of Diversion.

"Say," queried the summer boarder, "what can a fellow do to kill time around here?"

"Waal," drawled the old farmer, "mebby yew kin coax th' ole woman tew let yer whitewash th' chicken house."

Mary At It Again.

Mary had a chicken small,
And she thought it immense
When the waiter banded her a check
For a dollar ninety cents.

Fractions.

Teacher (giving a lesson on fractions)—Here, children, is a piece of meat. If I cut it in two, what shall I have?

Class—Halves.

Teacher—And if I cut it again in two, what do I get?

Class—Quarters.

Teacher—And if I again do the same?

Class—Eighths.

Teacher—And if I continue in the same way?

Class—Sixteenths.

Teacher—Good! And if we cut our pieces once more in two, what then shall we have?

Tommy (after a long silence)—Please, miss, mincemeatt—Answers.

Time Saving.

"So you think that pictures serve a more important purpose than literature?"

"Yes. Nearly everybody would rather send a post card than write a letter."—Washington Star.

His Title.

An old darkey in Kentucky signs himself Col. Henry Clay Jones. When asked why he should prefix that title to his name, as he had no right to it, he replied:

"Yes, I has, sah."

"But you're not a Colonel."

"Dat don' mean Colonel, boss; dat means colored."—Exchange.

His News.

"The only news I have to tell you," wrote the Billville citizen, "is that the river has riz an' drowned all yer cattle, an' yer uncle has broke jail; likewise the widder woman you wuz a-goin' ter marry has runned off with a book agent. Outside of these here things, we air all doin' well."—Atlanta Constitution.

Familiar Taste.

Farmer Ryetop—You seem to enjoy those fresh vegetables?

Summer Boarder—Yes, it is an acquired taste. You get them from the same store up in town that we do.

Expected Back.

Prisoner—Can I speak with the convict Smith for one moment?

Jailer—No, he has just left after finishing his time. But ask me again in about a week.

Alas, Poor Man!

Alice—I suppose Isabel is completely reconciled to the loss of her first husband, isn't she?

Emily—Oh, yes, but they say her second husband probably never will become reconciled to it.

A Deceptive Figure.

"Won't you sit down, Mrs. Fortystone?"

"Thank you, but I am."—London Opinion.

More of Pa's Wisdom.

Little Willie—Say, pa, what is a philosopher?

Pa—A philosopher, my son, is a man who can generate a dozen good and sufficient reasons why other people ought to be perfectly satisfied with their lot in life.

Could Stand the Whalings.

"Gracious, Tommy," said the startled visitor, "I never saw a lad get as many spankings as you do. Why, it seems to be a continuous performance down in the woodshed."

"Oh, I can stand it," laughed Tommy, with a wink.

"You can stand it?"

"Sure! When dad spanks me ma feels so sorry she gives me candy on the sly. Then when ma spanks me dad feels so sorry he gives me a quarter and takes me out to see the ball game."

The Real Thing.

"I suppose," remarked the village grocer, "that your son acquired a liberal education at college?"

"Yore supperstition air 'bout right," answered Farmer Geehaw. "It cost me more'n 'leven hundred dollars, by grass!"

On the Contrary.

"An artist friend of mine," said the garrulous party, "once painted a banana peel on the sidewalk so naturally that the first man who came along slipped and fell over it."

"Huh!" rejoined the contrary person. "It couldn't have been very natural if the first man that came along tumbled to it."

Sandy's Retort.

The Lady—Ah, my poor man, what brought you to this?

Sandy Pikes—Me feet, mum. Yer didn't think I was wealthy enough to hire a taxicab, did you?

Preferred Modern Methods.

The Court—Six years' hard labor. You'll get a chance to learn a trade, my man.

Burglar—Couldn't I be permitted to learn it—er—by correspondence?

The Age of a Chicken.

Teacher—Johnny, can you tell how the age of a chicken is determined?

Johnny—Yes'm. By the teeth.

Teacher—Why, chickens have no teeth.

Johnny—No'm; but we have.

THE POPULAR PULPIT

MAN'S HERITAGE OF REST.

By Rev. A. M. Hubly.

The Sabbath was made for man," Mark ii: 27.

How much man was in need of the Sabbath only the all-loving Father knew. As we study the Bible, with a view to know and do the will of God, we come to see and understand more of His outpouring benevolence toward the children of men, and reasons as to why the Creator of men, supreme in wisdom, power and love, made for us a Sabbath multiply. Apart from the Divine revelation, many reasons for a day of rest may be given from a merely carnal physical viewpoint.

As a citizen of this world, and of the earth altogether earthly, my enjoyment of temporal blessings, my health of body, my usefulness to my fellowman, demand a periodic pause in the wear and tear of life.

Rest to the human body is as important as nourishment. Physical science has declared, and investigation by practical experience has proven, that the human body and mind need not only the rest of a night for every day, but one full day's rest in every seven, in order to be in the best condition for meeting life's obligations, even in this lower sphere of our existence.

But "the Sabbath was made for man" on a higher ground of reasoning than the foregoing; yea, as transcendent as the thought of God is to the thinking of man. Isaiah lv., 8, 9.

Man's spiritual life needs the weekly Sabbath repose, for sacred interests and leisure for religious meditation and for the worship of God.

The high and holy One whose right it is to reign, and by righteous ruling call forth the adoration of the creatures of His hand, knew how difficult it would be for mankind, amid the press of business, the cares of office, the sweating toil, with chisel, ax or hoe, to find time for soul culture and to breathe the life-breath of heaven. He met the need of man's higher life by appointing one day of every seven on which the great doors of His world-wide temple should be thrown open, "that in every nation he that feareth Him" might enter in and find the holy joy of worship in praising Him for His "mercies, new every morning," and for "His faithfulness every night," and might learn to "call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable."

The loving Father knew how impossible it would be for His sons and daughters, in the race of life, to keep the heart fresh and young, the vision clear and the conscience tender, and to pass, day after day, Satan's subtle devices to tempt them from the way of holiness; and therefore He made them a Sabbath, a day in which His children might gather in his presence and acquaint themselves of His all-gracious love and tender solicitude for their every-day safety and happiness.

"The Sabbath was made for man," that the way back to the "Father's house" might be made easier for any of the family who, having "spent their all" in the "far country," have come to themselves in tattered garments and in company with swine. On this day the door of the old home stands open. The Father comes forth to meet the prodigal returning; to put about him the arms of mercy; to press his cheek with the kiss of loving welcome; to replace his swine-soiled clothes with robes of salvation and "garments of praise." "This is the day that the Lord has made. He calls its hours His own." And He calls His people to share with Him the joy of its hallowed moments. He knew how difficult it would be for His blood-washed people, amid the fretting worries, temptations and babble of world-voices, together with cares and crosses incidental to business, social and family life, to keep the Christian spirit in a frame of true devotion to Him and His cause, and thus continue in the ministry of His grace, that alone can assure them the "crown of life" in the great day of his triumph. This day that He has made for us we can gather about Him, sit at His feet, and, like Mary, find and appropriate the "one thing needful," the "good part," the fellowship of the Spirit, and the ministry of His Word.

Jerusalem, the scene of Jehovah's sanctuary, the beautiful sanctified temple, rose on Zion, at one time glorified by the divine Shekinah. To this sacred edifice the land sent up her worshiping people; yet all her sanctuaries were brought to desolation, all the fragrance of her sacrifices became a loathsome abomination to Jehovah, because her people "kept not the Sabbath of the Lord."

Black silence and loneliness fell upon the hallowed scenes of a land most favored with religious and secular privileges and prosperity. Where temporal and spiritual blessings abounded came a barren waste and desolation for both body and soul.

Is not the desecration of the Sabbath and neglect of its religious privileges and blessings in this our day, turning many fragrant, fruitful soul-gardens into barren wastes? Religious sloth on the Sabbath, indifference to the holy voices calling men to leave the valley of Baca and dwell in the mount of holy fellowship and prayer, of praise and worshipful meditation, are often followed by open Sabbath desecration.

The evening of Life's day, when the cup of pleasure, purchased at the cost of well-spent Sabbaths, holds naught but bitter dregs, has its analogy in the history of Israel's desolation, the soul exiled from sacred scenes and Sabbath privileges. The loss of all the benefits of the glorious heritage constituted in a "Sabbath made for man"—a weekly day of rest and communion with God, for the cultivation and development of the higher life, this loss is simply the operation of God's law of requital, expressed in the solemn words of Jesus: "Whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that he hath." Indifference to religious things, neglect of worship, and contempt of the heavenly messages, makes the Sabbath, although it was made for me, and given to me, as though I have it not, and by the Divine law of requital, it shall be taken away from me. O Thou, who hast made the day, sanctify it to us, and us to Thee. Give us grace to be ever in the way of Thy commandments, but on this day we wait for Thee, to hear Thy voice, and to receive the gracious messages which come from Thy heart, and to feel Thy touch lifting us up into a better life.

THE EASY YOKE.

Text.—"Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke unto you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light."—Matt. 11: 28, 29, 30.

If the words of Jesus be true, why is there so much complaint about the hardness of the way? We seem to be a family of complainers, and yet professing to be believers in a gospel which proclaims rest to the weary and relief for the heavy laden. There is rest in coming to Jesus and there is rest in taking his yoke. Surely he hath not laid heavy burdens on his beloved, for he invites them to lay their heavy burdens down and to let not their hearts be troubled, but to cast all their cares upon him for he careth for them. The grace of God sufficient in time of need; the Comforter in time of sorrow; and the promise never to leave or forsake, are calculated to ease the heart and inspire courage for the journey of life.

Perhaps we are carrying our sorrows and labors to the wrong place to lay them down. We get our sorrow and labors mostly from the world, and when we carry them to the world to lay them down we only come away with a heavier load, and the heart more gloomy than ever. But Jesus says, "Come unto me."

Yes, it is the truth that his yoke is easy and his burden is light. There is not a single unnecessary duty, nor a privilege that will not prove a blessing. Do we but sing one of the songs of Zion the lion of our flesh slinks away and hides in shame while for the time the glory of Zion throws its light upon our way. Do we sit in the house of God under the preaching of the gospel our minds for the time contemplate the sovereign grace of God, the suffering and death of Jesus and the blessed inheritance of saints and seem immersed in the ocean of love. Do we but give a cup of cold water in the name of a disciple the Lord's blessing lights in unction on him who gives, and a peace flows into the heart that the world can neither give nor take away.

The sweetness of Christ's presence can light every dark place, lift every heavy burden, make every way smooth, and give rest to every weary soul. Sweet and inviting the call of love, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." And how encouraging to take up the profession and life of a Christian—"Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy and my burden light."

Your pains and aches from KIDNEY, LIVER, BLADDER OR STOMACH TROUBLE will begin to disappear the first day you take GOLD MEDAL HAARLEM OIL CAPSULES.

Holland Medicine Co., Scranton, Pa.

Dear Sirs: In writing you this, I am doing something that I have never done before, voluntarily. Several weeks ago I saw your coupon in the "Times-Star," and as a last resort I thought I would try your Haarlem Oil Capsules. You sent me the coupon, and to make a long story short, I am now on my second box. I am, or was suffering from what I supposed was kidney trouble, caused by an over-indulgence of beer, and the pain I suffered at night was excruciating, and left me feeling bad all next day. I have since then stopped drinking beer, thinking that would allay the pain, but without any good results. But your capsules have given me so much ease. I felt that not to write you would be doing you an injustice, hence this letter. I am going to continue their use indefinitely. Thanking you for your generous kindness in sending a coupon, I am,

Yours very sincerely,

English Difficult to Pronounce.

The difficulty of English for strangers does not lie in its orthography, but in its pronunciation. Abroad, people will constantly say that they can read and write English readily while unable to utter a word or to understand a word of the spoken language; as, of course, vice versa, a great many English and Americans can read and write French long before they can understand, or make themselves understood; the other languages are just as difficult for them to pronounce as English is for others. The only difference is that English stands alone with its system or lack of system, of pronunciation. When a Frenchman knows how to write German, he is at the same time able to speak the language, if not beautifully, at least so as to be understood; the same holds for a German speaking French.—Prof. Albert Schinz, in the North American Review.

PROVED BY TIME.

No Fear of Any Further Trouble.

David Price, Corydon, Ia., says: "I was in the last stage of kidney trouble—lame, weak, run down to a mere skeleton. My back was so bad I could hardly walk and the kidney secretions much disordered. A week after I began using Doan's Kidney Pills I could walk without a cane, and as I continued my health gradually returned. I was so grateful I made a public statement of my case, and now seven years have passed, and I am still perfectly well." Sold by all dealers. 50c. a box. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

LET NOT LOVE GO, TOO.

Now the purple night is past,
Now the moon more faintly glows,
Dawn has through thy casement cast
Roses on thy breast, a rose.
Now the kisses are all done,
Now the world awakes anew;
Now the charmed hour is gone—
Let not love go, too.

When old winter, creeping nigh,
Sprinkles raven hair with white,
Dims the brightly glancing eye,
Laughs away the dancing light,
Roses may forget their sun,
Lilies may forget their dew,
Beauties perish, one by one—
Let not love go, too.

Palaces and towers of pride
Crumble year by year away;
Creeds, like robes, are laid aside;
Even our very tombs decay!
When the all-conquering moth and rust
Gnaw the goodly garments through,
When the dust returns to dust,
Let not love go, too.

Kingdoms melt away like snow,
Gods are spent like wasting flames,
Hardly the new peoples know
Their divine, thrice-worshiped names!
At the last great hour of all,
When thou makest all things new,
Father, hear thy children call—
Let not love go, too.
—Alfred Noyes.

Morocco Bound

Mustapha Ali, kadi or chief of the tribesmen of Ben Hassan—robber and gentleman—sat in his spacious tent, sheltered from the glare of the tropical sun, slowly deciphering a letter that an envoy had just brought him from Rabat.

"'Tis well! He consents to pay the ransom for the girl. Two hundred pounds," he said aloud, when he had mastered the contents of the document. "Bring the maiden to me, Mulai."

The turbaned Moor, who had been standing like an ebony statute awaiting his chief's commands, salaamed and withdrew, returning in a minute with a pretty, vivacious English girl of 18.

The tent was ill-lighted, and, coming from the brilliant sunshine, it was a few seconds before the girl made out the figure of the Moorish chieftain seated on some cushions, smiling blandly upon her.

"HAS HE SENT THE MONEY FOR MY RANSOM?"

"Oh! you're there, Kaid," she said, when her eyes had grown accustomed to the gloom. Then, noticing the letter he held in his hand: "Ah, I see you've some news for me. You've heard from dad? Has he sent the money for my ransom?"

"No, but it is arranged. The governor of Rabat's headsman will be here at sundown with it, and then you will be free."

"What a pity," said the girl, with a sigh, sinking on to an old but gorgeous divan near Mustapha. "You seem in a terrible hurry to get rid of me."

"You prefer bondage?" The Kaid smiled. "Bismillah! Though an infidel, you are truly a woman."

"Yes. I prefer this bondage—if you can dignify my holiday here with such a name—to the real bondage my father wishes to impose on me—marriage. Marriage with a man I've never seen—just because he's a lord."

"You are not obedient to your father?" The Kaid frowned and shook his head. He did not approve of disobedience—in women. "If I were your father, I should——"

"If you were, that would put a different complexion on the matter," laughed the girl. "But you're not, Kaid, luckily—for you. Oh! I say, I suppose you thought yourself rather clever in capturing me, didn't you? Well, you weren't a bit. I got myself captured."

The chief of Ben Hassan smiled incredulously and shook his head.

"What, don't you believe me! It's true. Listen. The lordling was coming to Rabat on a visit to meet his prospective bride—me—you know. Well, I didn't want to see him, and I told dad so, and we had a row about it, and he said nasty things to me. Feeling desperate, and having heard you spoken of in Rabat as most gentlemanly, I determined to come to see you for a holiday. So, after inquiring the way, rode out to you, and here I am. But I did hope you'd keep me prisoner at least a fortnight. You're most inconsiderate. I've only been here three days, and now I'm to be sent back to Rabat, and shall have to meet that lordling after all. Can't you keep me a bit longer—till—till he's gone?"

"I fear that cannot be. I have sworn by Allah to deliver you up to-night, and——"

"Yes, yes, I know—you wouldn't mind robbing a man, or killing one for that matter, but you won't break your word. Well, I'll have to go, I suppose, but I won't marry that lordling. I'd marry a nigger sooner—or even you."

"That may not be. A true believer may not wed with an infidel, like you."

"Excuse me, you're the infidel, at least, so I've been taught to believe. But then every religion treats a rival like the pot does the kettle."

"And you are not fat enough to marry."

"Ah! I'd forgotten. You fatten your girls for marriage as we do our turkeys for Christmas. I shall have to look elsewhere for a husband."

"I have another captive—an Englishman, who is at your disposal. If you really want a husband."

"That's very kind of you, Kaid. Do you make a practice of giving men away? If so, I've a heap of spinster friends at home who'll be glad of an introduction to you. What's the man like—old and ugly?"

"No, he is young, but a most blasphemous infidel. He called our prophet a rotten impostor. I should have killed him on the spot, only your English government makes a great fuss about such matters. Still, he shall suffer—I will marry him to you."

The girl laughed heartily at the Moor's unconscious humor.

"You're really too cruel," she said. "No, I can't lend myself for such an awful chastisement. Besides, I don't want a husband, I only want an excuse for refusing the lordling. If I married your captive, he might want to follow me home. I'd like to see him, though. Where is he?"

The Kaid clapped his hands, an attendant entered, and the captive Englishman was sent for.

"Don't let him know I'm English, Kaid. Say I'm French," said the girl, arranging the mantilla she was wearing so that it partly hid her features.

"As you will," replied Mustapha, as the Englishman, his arms bound with stout cords, and struggling in the grip of three brawny Moors, was thrust roughly into the pavilion.

Half choking with suppressed rage at the treatment he received, the man strode across to where the Kaid was sitting, and, putting his face close to the Moor's, hissed out between his teeth:

"Look here, you Kaffir, if there's anything of the man about you, take off these cords and I'll fight you and any two others of your gang with any weapons you like."

"That's splendid," murmured the girl. Then, speaking aloud, with a foreign accent, she added: "Oh, monsieur, you say—a bad word before me."

"I beg your pardon, mademoiselle, I didn't see you. But this old rogue here would provoke a saint."

"I have found so Kaid charmant."

"Have you? Well, you must have very queer taste." Then, turning to Mustapha, he demanded: "What have I been sent for now?"

"This Frankinsh maid has need of a husband. Will you wed her?"

"I?"

"If you agree, she will pay the ransom for your freedom," continued the wily Moor, with a leathery grin at his own astuteness.

"Eh?" exclaimed the girl sharply.

"It is but £50, my daughter."

"Oh!" And she nodded acquiescence.

The rites were performed according to the ritual of the church. A slight hitch occurred when the priest asked the bride her name. She at first declined to give it, then, finding she must do so, she said 'twas Julie Francaise.

"Es? Ah, capital!" cried the Englishman. "We'll make it an international union. My name's John Bull."

The priest smiled, but made no demur. He was to be well paid, and their real names were not his concern.

"And so you're going away to try to find her?"

"No. I thought of doing that several times before I met you. Now it's all changed." He came and leaned over her chair. "Oh, Nell, it's wrong, I know, to say it, but it will out. I love you. I love you as I never dreamed I could love a woman. So madly, so passionately, so vainly, too. Forgive me, Nell, I ought not to have told you. I'll go—good-bye." He turned abruptly from her chair and moved off quickly.

"Bob! Stop a minute. I've something to tell you," she cried, rising and going to him. "I've let you fall in love with me, when I knew all the time you were married. You can't escape from her, Bob; she has your signet ring, with your crest on it. What have you to identify her by?"

"Nothing."

"Kiss me, Bob."

She was facing him now; her right hand was on his shoulder; her happy, willful face, with pursed-up lips, was offering itself to him. She held her left hand before his eyes, and he saw upon the third finger his signet ring. "Here is my right to your kisses. See!"

"Why, it's—it's my ring, and you Oh! my dear! you are my wife!"—Frederick ..., in M. A. P.

The Southern Pest.

A tall yellow man urged his mule along the dusty road. At the edge of town he overtook an old negro.

"Hold up, Sam," said the old man, "what's dis fuss at St. Joe? I seen a mighty big crowd in town, and started down to find out what's de matter."

"Boll weevil," answered the yellow man.

"What's dat?"

"It's a bug," the hurrying rider called behind him.

The old negro stopped and grunted in utter disgust: "Did you ebber hear de beat o' dat? Makin' all dat fuss over a bug."

St. Joe was in a ferment over a bug; not a common ordinary bug, but that greatest enemy of agriculture, the boll weevil.

This destructive insect comes from Mexico, the only free-list importation that enters the South. Mr. Weevil does not masquerade as an article of consumption, being pre-eminently a consumer himself. The daintiest of all epicures, he eats nothing but cotton, and selects only the choicest bits. He does not injure the plant itself, destroying only the fruit. The field grows tall and gloriously green, but when the weevil gets through with it, 100 acres may not yield a single bale. —Success Magazine.

Mermaid for Breakfast.

A stranger meal than any ever partaken by Frank Buckland or the most hardened and cosmopolitan traveler is described by Juan Francisco de St. Antonio, in his account of his travels and adventures in the Philippine Islands, published at Manila in 1738. In this curious little work the author tells us that he once breakfasted off a mermaid, and he further gravely describes its flavor as being like fresh fat pork.

Obituaries

Caroline McNall, the subject of this sketch was born in Penn., October, 29 1827, departed this life Saturday, August 21 1909 at the advanced age of 81 yrs. 9 mo. and 22 days. As the morning came on and the gates of another day were swung open without a creak or jar, our beloved sister departed for the gates had been swung open that she might have a sweeping entrance into that city not made with hands but eternally fixed in the Heavens, whose maker and builder is God. On leaving her native state her parents went to Ohio and soon journeyed to Indiana settling close to Spencerville. In 1846 on her birthday she was united in marriage to William McNall. To this union were born eight children, five have gone to receive their reward, two daughters and one son remain, to mourn the loss of a mother, besides seven grand children eightgreat grand children and a host of friends and neighbors. Her husband preceded her to the better land sixteen years ago last February. This being her home for many years. She is well known by all the old settlers.

She remembered the word of God as saying—'Remember me in thy youth', and when but sixteen year old gave her life into the care and keeping of God and united with the M. E. church from which she never withdrew but remained faithful until her membership was transfered to the Church Triumphant. She was faithful to her trust and did her duty well. It was not expected she would leave us so soon yet our Father knows best and after one and a half years of ailing she was suddenly called and slept away a sweet happy rest in the arms of Jesus. The funeral was held in the M. E. church at Spencerville with Rev. D. A. J. Brown pastor in charge.

The Children.

was born at Wateringbury, Kent England, March 13 1847, and died August 17 1909, aged 62 yrs. 5 mo. and 4 days She was one of thirteen children of whom one brother and three sisters survive, all residing in England. She was married to James Munn, June 3 1872 and came with him to America the following year. She was a devout christian woman uniting with the Wayne Street M. E. church during the partorate of Bro. McKaag, was transferred to Spencerville church about 5 years ago remaining there until she was transferred to her Heavenly Home. She leaves to mourn their loss besides her husband two nephews and three neices in this country besides a host of friends and neighbors. It was her custom on returning home of an evening to sit down and read God's word and I believe it is nine times she read it through and again to 2 Samuel 20th chapter. Certainly she will be missed from church where her loving and Christ-like life won for her the admiration and friendship of all. She was faithful and her reward will be sure. Sister Munn has changed her membership from our church to the church Triumphant. Rev. M. P. Barton of Economy, D. A. J. Brown pastor in charge.

The time was spent in social chat until the noon hour when about ninety guests did ample justice to the excellent dinner served by the ladies At 1:30 the meeting was called to order by the president, Mr. D. A. Miller. After the business, a short but pleasing program was given by the young people, followed by short voluntary talks from distant relatives and old time friends. The meeting closed by singing "Blest be the Tie that Binds".

An Interesting Letter

Written by Miss Lela Shilling of Vancouver, Wash. Is engaged in taking in the many sights of the far west.

Dear Parents:

Having a little spare time will write you a more and better description of my trip. I only had a few minutes to wait in Wayne until I started for Warsaw. We started the next day Friday, July 9, from Warsaw and arrived in Chicago about 4 o'clock. Little of interest happened and could not see much outside the car on account of the smoke and dust. Left Chicago about 6:30 over the Burlington Route for St. Paul and arrived at 7 the next morning. Passed the best part of the scenery of the Mississippi River during the night and did not see anything special only the river and bluffs. At St. Paul we had to wait three hours for the next train so we walked around the city some. From the center of one of the large bridges which spans the river, we obtained a very good view of the city part of which is built on the bluffs.

At 10:30 A. M. we left St. Paul on a Canadian Pacific through train for Seattle and did not change cars again. The most interesting passengers that got on here were four couples with a canary bird going north and west to take up a homestead. We just stopped at Minneapolis a few minutes After leaving there we crossed the Mississippi two or three times and passed several large lakes. The only difference in the country was that it is more hilly, the trees are smaller and less plentiful, and only a few houses.

North Dakota is similar to Minnesota until about the middle of the state, when we passed through some extremely high hills after which we came out on what seemed to be an endless plain, not a tree nor house to be seen for miles. People have large farms Some one man will have a hundred acres or more in wheat and not a fence on a farm of six or seven hundred acres. We passed only a few small towns, one of the prettiest being Valley City, built in a valley and on the sides of the surrounding hills. After leaving the hills some distance the conductor came through the car and said we were at, Portal, the boundary of the U. S. A. and Canada. Here we had to have our baggage inspected but after they learned we were merely passing through Canada the Inspector was not so particular about our belongings. The first day in Canada was Sunday and the rain poured down all day and we saw nothing but plains until late in the evening when we got into the foot hills. At Medecine Hat, a town in the foot hills we saw a number of Indian tents. On account of the rain we only saw a couple of Indians outside the tents.

At Spokane we noticed the time scedules on the bulletin board and saw our train was due 17:35 and on time, this, of course, seemed peculiar and amusing to the passengers who were unaccustomed to the twenty-four hour scedule. One old man, evidently of German descent, caused everyone in our car to laugh by making funny remarks about everything we passed and especially about the manner of reckoning time in Canada. Darkness came on and we had a good night's rest but were up at 3 o'clock in time to see the sun rise. We had the advantage of having a clear day, the only clouds in sight was a little mist around the tops of the highest mountains. It is very interesting to watch the mountains as the sunlight first appears on the highest peaks, some of them many miles away and the tops covered with snow. One can see for great distances on a clear day some mountains forty or fifty miles away look to be in easy walking distance. The train followed the Elbow River for many miles and we could often see the engine and rear cars at the same time from our window as the train followed the windings of the river. It was very difficult for us to tell in what direction we were going as the sun would appear first on one side of the train and then on the other. There were high mountains on both sides of the river, some looking like huge barren rocks with crevices near the top filled with snow and others being partially covered with grass and small fir trees.

There are many queer formations of rocks. Cathedral Rock has the appearance of being an irregular stone building on the top of a high mountain. After leaving the Elbow river almost at its source we passed up a steep incline almost to the top of the mountain to what is called "The Great Divide". This is where two little streams are divided by only a few feet of land and the water in one goes to the Hudson and Mississippi while the other one goes to the Pacific Ocean. The place is marked by a large rustic arch with the words "The Great Divide". From here the train wound around among the mountains until it reached the Kicking Horse River and followed it for many miles. When we first saw this river it was a very small stream falling down the mountain side so rapidly that it looked like a mass of white foam. On both sides of the river there are snow covered mountains and so high they go above the clouds. The railway crosses the river several times and goes through many tunnels.

We stopped at several famous summer resorts and had thirty minutes at Field and also at Glacier B. C., the time being allowed for meals as the dinner had been taken off before we got into the mountains. At Glacier the station is on the side of a mountain covered with a large glacier which looks with easy walking distance. Guides and ponies could be obtained here to go up to the glacier and around the mountain.

After crossing the Great Divide the mountains seem very high and many streams fall down the sides. One place the train was so far up on the side of a mountain and in order to get down in the valley we crossed a canyon

Small Boy Rescued.

Little Harry Kincade came near being drowned Wednesday. He swam too near the dam and when turning to swim back he was too nearly exhausted and could not swim. He was in about ten foot of water when his father came to his rescue.

Instantly Killed

The life of Monroe Swihart, a farmer living 6 miles north of St. Joe, was crushed out instantly, Monday noon by an east bound freight train about 10:38. He and his wife had drove to town early that forenoon with two children who were bound for Wenona, Ill., their home after making an extended visit in this family. As it happened Mr. Swihart had tied his team behind the depot until the train went. The passengers had passed to the north side of the track preparatory to get on the train. Mr. Swihart hesitated but his wife insisted on him crossing to bid the children good-bye, so he did. As the train drew near they stopped at the creek bridge, east of the depot, to allow a freight train to pass the station, the noise frightened the horses and he was afraid they would break loose, so he started across the tracks to watch them, and as soon as he stepped upon the south track the freight train struck him, throwing him about twenty feet, head long taking his life instantly. Mr. Swihart and wife were mutes and of course no noise would arouse them. Mr. Monroe stated that he saw the man start across the tracks and he hollowed at him and run towards him but he was too late to save the man from the approaching danger. He further stated that the man looked west just as the train struck him and his face was severely cut up on the right side, his legs and arms were broken, besides several scratches on his body. The train was running at a rate of about 20 miles per hour. In a few minutes the body was removed by Eliza Kinsey to his undertaking rooms and was dressed and prepared for the coroner's inquest, which was held late in the evening, after which the body was removed to his home

Mr. Swihart was formerly a resident of near Auburn Junction and was well known in and around Auburn. He was a brother of Mrs. Milton Clark of Auburn, and Mrs. Martha Surface who resides down on the county line. He also had a brother, Wilson, at Elkhart. Friends gathered here during the afternoon and arrangements for burial were made.

The funeral was held from the Presbyterian church at Auburn, Wednesday at 2:00 o'clock, burial in Woodlawn cemetery.

PAST AND PRESENT

AS IT COMES TO US FROM ALL CORNERS OF THE EARTH.

Telegraphic Information Gathered by the Few for the Enlightenment of the Many.

J. P. Morgan Has Close Call.

The fact that J. Pierpont Morgan, the financier, was nearly shipwrecked on a ledge in Long Island Sound while returning from Newport to New York City on his magnificent steam yacht Corsair became known when the yacht was hauled out in a dry dock at Hoboken for repairs. The accident happened near City Island, in the westerly end of Long Island Sound. The Corsair was making fast time bringing Mr. Morgan and a party of friends to town when she struck a submerged ledge. The yacht began to leak and one of the boilers thrown out of position, but the machinery was not badly disarranged. The Corsair proceeded to New York under reduced speed with her pumps going to keep her free of water. Mr. Morgan was safely landed and the yacht sent to the dock for repairs.

Only Fifteen, But Tired of Life.

After outlining in a letter her funeral arrangements, May Loy, 15 years old, and the daughter of James Loy, of Marion, Ind., committed suicide by swallowing arsenic at her home on West Second street. She left no statement of the cause of her act but it is said that a love affair was the reason. The young girl directed that the Rev. Ruth Cary, pastor of the Baptist church of which she was a member preach her funeral, and her arrangements included all the details, even to the naming of six girl friends to act as pall bearers.

Wellman's Expedition Ends in Disaster

A dispatch from Spitzbergen says: Walter Wellman's second attempt to sail over the north pole in a balloon has resulted in failure. The giant dirigible balloon America, in which Mr. Wellman and his party of three set out upon their perilous flight, met with a mishap after it had proceeded about 32 miles from the starting point. Mr. Wellman and his party succeeded in making a landing without injury to any member and returned to Spitzbergen on board the steamer Fram, which also towed in the disabled balloon.

Child Killed in Runaway.

An infant was instantly killed and three women were injured, one seriously, in a runaway accident at South Bend, Ind. The dead: Clara Clark, aged 11 months; neck broken. The injured: Mrs. Emma Clark, aged 33, mother of the dead child, injured about the head, back and right arm sprained; condition serious; Mrs. Flossie Appol, aged 28, head and arms bruised; Mrs. Margaret L. Appel, aged 56, badly bruised and suffering from nervous shock.

Three Men Killed in Wreck.

Two brakemen and the engineer of a south-bound freight train on the Southern Pacific railway were killed near Bakersfield, Cal., when a runaway train was wrecked on a steep grade between the top of Techachap Pass and Mojave. Brakes refusing to work caused the accident. Five others were reported injured.

Salt and Lumber Plant Burns.

The Butters Salt and Lumber Company's plant at Butterville, Mich., across the river from Ludington, was burned. The property destroyed includes the saw mill, shingle mill, salt glock, four million feet of lumber, the docks and large quantities of salt and shingles. The loss is estimated at about $150,000.

Brand Whitlock is Renominated.

Mayor Brand Whitlock was nominated for a third term at the head of a full ticket for city officers by the Independents of Toledo, Ohio. Mr. Whitlock is widely known as an author and lecturer and as the political successor of the late "Golden Rule" mayor, Samuel M. Jones.

Many Dead in Chilean Wreck.

A terrible railway disaster happened in Chile when two trains came into collision thirty miles north of Santiago. Many persons were killed or injured.

Mrs. Henry Youtsey, wife of the only man who is now serving a sentence for complicity in the assassination of Governor William Goebel in 1899, has entered suit for divorce. The papers were filed at Winchester, Ky.

Indiana Town is Fire-Swept.

Fire almost wiped out the village of Ambia, Ind., thirty miles northeast of Danville, Ill. The damage will amount to $90,000.

TWO AUTO RACERS HURLED TO DEATH

Driver and Mechanician Crushed When Car at Indianapolis Skids and Upsets.

THIRD MAN DIES OF INJURIES.

12,000 People See Bourque and His Aid Thrown Over Fence to Their Doom.

With three lives sacrificed in the speed carnival, the first day of the automobile races at the new Indianapolis speedway closed with two time-annihilating records smashed. On the fifty-fourth lap of the 250-mile race for the Prest-o-Lite trophy, the feature event of the day, death in a terrible form came to William Bourque, daring automobile driver, and his mechanician, Harry Holcomb, when their big racing car suddenly left the track while plunging along at a speed of seventy-five miles an hour, turned a complete somersault and dashed both men against the fence which surrounds the course. Both were almost instantly killed. Their bodies were terribly mangled. Twelve thousand persons, gathered in the grandstand and around the track, witnessed the accident. Scores of women fainted at the sight. Others became hysterical and rushed screaming about the grounds.

Just why the racer left the track is a mystery. Whether Bourque lost control of the steering gear or made a mechanical blunder will never be known. The machine skidded, left the track, and with undiminished speed struck a small ditch which borders the speedway. Both front wheels and the axles gave way, and the car turned completely over. Bourque and Holcomb were sent flying through the air. Bourque was thrown against a post and his skull was fractured and both legs were broken. Holcomb was throw clear over the fence. His skull was also fractured and his legs broken. The third whose life was forfeited was Clifford Litterall, mechanician, who died from an injury received while on his way to the new speedway for practice. He jumped from his own car and was run down by one behind him. Driver Chevrolet had his eyes seriously injured by dust and tar.

AUTO KILLS THREE AT RACE.

Car Leaps from Track Into Crowd When Tire Bursts.

Three persons were killed and three injured by racing automobiles at the motor speedway in Indianapolis, Saturday. This makes a total of six lives sacrificed to the high speed mania since the opening of the tournament which dedicated the new race course recently constructed at a cost of $400,000 and supposed to have been accident proof. Two of the persons killed Saturday and one of the injured were spectators. The other person killed was a mechanic in the race. The spectators were run down when a big car in the 300 mile race left the track, plunged through a fence and into a crowd gathered near the speedway side.

When the National Six, driven by Charles Mers, a local pilot, burst the tire of the right front wheel while careening through space at a rate of seventy miles an hour, there was a crash and the great machine turned turtle, whirling like a gigantic rocket into the fence around the course. Over the barrier, jumping a bridge and on through space the car traveled like a catapult, leaving a trail of blood behind.

Fifteen minutes after this fatality another car skidded near the same spot, hit a portion of the bridge, and the driver and mechanician were injured. Following this, Referee Stevens stopped the race, which was for the Wheeler and Schebler $10,000 trophy, and in which the leaders had completed 235 miles. This brought the meeting to an abrupt end just when the prospects for a successful windup were brightest. With such a heavy baptism of blood it is thought the big speedway, representing an expenditure of more than $400,000, will never again be the scene of motor contests.

TRAINS HELD BY WATERS.

Great Delay and Inconvenience Due to Colorado Floods.

Trains blocked in lonely mountain passes, tracks washed away or in some instances pitched into canyons hundreds of feet below, people driven from their homes to seek safety with their belongings in higher places—these were the scenes revealed along the overflowed Arkansas River in Colorado.

The famous Royal Gorge, walled 12 by rock 1,000 feet high, was washed by a torrent for about forty-eight hours, and the railroad tracks have been destroyed. Trains on the Colorado Midland, the Denver and Rio Grande and other railroads, most of them carrying eastern tourists, have been detoured over circuitous routes. One road had to detour its trains by way of Alamosa, Colo., in the southern part of the state, a distance out of the regular travel of more than 300 miles. Not only the Arkansas River, but almost all of its tributaries are overflown.

RAIL KING RETURNS.

Harriman Shows Feebleness as He Leaves Liner, but Is Optimistic.

Ten pounds lighter than when he left America nearly two months ago, but with his spirit unbroken and breathing a sentiment of optimism, E. H. Harriman returned Wednesday to take what he quizically calls the "after cure." Though Mr. Harriman cheerfully declared that he was feeling "pretty well," he showed in every movement, every intonation of the voice, that he is a sick, tired man, a dispatch asserts. He is sallow, almost yellow, and his step as he greeted friends who had boarded the steamer Kaiser Wilhelm II. at quarantine was noticeably feeble. The best description would be that of a man convalescing from a great and serious illness.

At his magnificent summer home at Arden, N. Y., the so-called "$1,000,000 fortress," Mr. Harriman began the "after cure," for which the treatment at Bad Gastein and other European resorts was a preliminary. He is constantly attended by his family and a corps of skilled physicians. How long he will remain in seclusion, how long it will be before he resumes the active direction of his vast railroad interests, depends solely upon his health. He arrived feeble, face gaunt and voice weak.

DROWNS CHILDREN AND SELF.

Fearing Cannibalism After Shipwreck, Mother Ends Five Lives.

A tragic story of the wreck of the Norwegian bark Erral, which struck Middleton Reef, was brought to Victoria, B. C., by the steamer Makura from Australia. Only five of the twenty-two men aboard the Erral were alive when the wreck was discovered by the steamer Tafu. These were taken aboard the Tafu, nearly dead from thirst and starvation. Captain Anderson and the second mate were drowned while building a raft. Anderson's wife and children saw him disappear, and finally, after others had succumbed and the remainder were weak from starvation, the captain's wife drowned her four children under the impression that the five survivors were planning a resort to cannibalism. She followed her children into the waves.

"5-CENT SHOW SALOON FOE."

Chicago Building Inspector Says Theaters Hurt Liquor Trade.

The 5-cent theater has been declared to be the greatest foe of the saloon by Edward F. Kelling, chief building inspector of Chicago, who has direct supervision of this class of amusement. "Saloonkeepers always oppose the establishment of a 5-cent theater in their neighborhood," he said. "Many of them complain that their business has been seriously hurt by the nickel show. Many workingmen who otherwise would spend their time drinking beer in the saloon prefer the diversion of this class of show. In many cases the workingman takes his wife and children with him, giving the whole family entertainment for what he is accustomed to spend in an evening in the saloon."

8 KILLED, MANY HURT IN TROOP-MOB BATTLE

Pennsylvania Strikers' Attack on Stockade Is Repulsed by Constabulary.

MANY OF THE INJURED MAY DIE

Sheriff Goes to Scene of Fight with Riot Guns to Re-Enforce State Soldiers.

Eight persons are known to have been killed and many wounded, at least ten of them fatally, in a strike riot at McKees Rocks, Pa., Sunday night. Like an eruption of a volcano, 4,000 Pressed Steel car workers let all their hatred, pent-up bitterness and lust for blood come to the surface, and, with precaution thrown to the winds, made a battlefield out of the Schoenville district. At least eight men were killed—one State trooper, one deputy sheriff and six strikers and strike breakers. Scores were injured by bullets. The battle resulted from an attempt of the strikers to storm the barricade around the Pressed Steel Car Company's plant, where hundreds of strike breakers have been quartered for the last six weeks, during the strike which has been marked by much bloodshed.

Following the battle deputy sheriffs and troopers broke in the doors of many houses suspected of being the retreat of the strikers and wholesale arrests were made. Scores of persons were arrested and placed in box cars in the mill yards. During the early stages of the rioting women were conspicuous. Some of them were armed, others effectively used clubs and stones. These women, all foreigners, insane with rage, were mainly responsible for inciting the men to extreme measures.

The battle was the climax of a series of riots that have been occurring almost daily since the beginning of the walkout more than five weeks ago, at the Pressed Steel Car Company's plant. The conflict between the strikers is the worst in the history of Allegheny County since the bloody Homestead riots, in which over forty were killed.

When Sheriff Gumbert heard of the battle while he was at the county jail he called for fifty men to serve as deputies at the strike zone. Obtaining that number he went in an automobile to the scene of the rioting. He took with him ten riot guns and two boxes of ammunition. By the time the sheriff arrived the constabulatry had dispersed the rioters, but the guns were placed into position ready for use in case the battle should be renewed.

BURN GAMBLING LAYOUT.

Bonfire Is Made of Paraphernalia Said to Be Worth $30,000.

A heap of ashes marks the closing scene in the fight between the State of Indiana and the owners of the gambling halls at French Lick and West Baden, respectively. Gambling paraphernalia to the value of $30,000 was publicly burned in the street at Paoli by officers of the law. There was a crowd of nearly 2,000 persons present when the expensive furnishings went up in smoke. Three years ago deputies raided the two casinos and made a number of arrests. The State confiscated all the furniture, including the gambling apparatus, but the courts held that there must be a conviction before the property could be destroyed. The cases against the arrested persons, who were the alleged agents for the owners, dragged along from term to term. A compromise finally was effected by which two of the indicted men should plead guilty on condition that the State would exempt from destruction such furniture as was not actually used in gambling. The pleas of guilty were entered, and the order to burn the gambling apparatus was issued.

ERROR COSTS DOCTOR $20,000.

U. S. Court Holds He Must Pay for Leaving Gauze in a Wound.

Surgeons who overlook instruments and sew them up in patients are liable for damages, according to a decision in the case of Russell Johnson of Iowa, against a St. Louis doctor. The decision sustained by the United States Court of Appeals gave Johnson a judgment of $20,000. Johnson was operated on for appendicitis March 30, 1907. A second operation revealed a piece of gauze twenty-four inches long and nine inches wide in the wound.

SUITOR MAY BORROW.

Judge Says, However, Girl Should Not Lend Her Fiance Money.

According to an opinion rendered by Justice Goff, in the New York Supreme Court, it is not at all the classy thing for a young woman who is engaged to be married to lend money to her fiance. Justice Goff says it cannot be considered a crime for a man who obtains money in this fashion to omit the formality of repaying it, because he may be a trifler and his vow to wed may be a false one—a situation that rests entirely with the conscience of the party of the first part and over which the court has no jurisdiction.

VESSELS CRASH AT MONTEVIDEO

Excursion Steamboat and German Liner Collide in Heavy Sea.

Between 150 and 200 persons were killed or drowned when the Argentine excursion steamboat Colombia and the North German Lloyd steamship Schlesien collided at the entrance of Montevideo harbor. The Colombia was entering port and the Schlesien was out ward bound for Bremen. The Colombia's bow was crushed in and the vessel sank almost immediately. The Colombia carried about 200 passengers and a crew of forty-eight men. Most of the passengers were asleep, and panic followed the crash. Almost immediately small boats put out to the sinking vessel, but the work of rescue was rendered difficult by the high sea. Most of the dead are women and children.

The Colombia was carrying excursionists from Buenos Ayres to a festival at Montevideo, and the disaster has caused the keenest emotion. The Schlesien was only slightly damaged. Its commander attributes the collision to the wind and the high seas, which made both vessels almost unmanageable.

CRAZED NEGRO SHOOTS 25 MEN.

Runs Amuck with Shotgun in a Louisiana Town.

Shrieking in maniacal frenzy and firing at every person he met, as fast as he could reload the double-barreled shotgun he carried, Bill Way, a negro from Pine Bluff, Ark., wounded twenty-five persons at Monroe, La., before he finally was killed by a policeman. Several of his victims will die and others are so seriously wounded that they will be crippled for life. After the negro was slain his body was hung to a pole for an hour and then was dragged to the public square by a mob, which placed it upon a pile of barrels and boxes and poured about ten gallons of kerosene on it. A match then was applied and the body was consumed. Way is believed to have been crazed from overindulgence in whisky and cocaine. For a time after the burning of the body the mob threatened to begin a general warfare on all negroes in Monroe.

FOIL BIG COUNTERFEIT PLOT.

Police and Secret Service Men Unearth Fraud in Kentucky.

Because of the manufacturers' delay in shipping a perforating and numbering machine, $1,000,000 in counterfeit Mexican money was seized at Louisville and the counterfeiters arrested. So far as is known, only three men were concerned in the bad money plot, which is one of the most extensive ever unearthed by the secret service department. They are John C. Roberts and Marion Roberts, brothers, and a printer. The $1,000,000, all in 100-peso notes, was contained in a heavy, brass-bound trunk. John Roberts declared that had his numbering and perforating machine arrived when he expected it, he would have been safe in Mexico a week ago, with most of the money disposed of. The 100-peso notes are excellent imitations. They are said to have been made in Louisville.

AUTO ACCIDENT KILLS FIVE.

Hurled Into the Water in Night, They Are Drowned.

Four young women and one man, the driver of the car, met death, and two young women narrowly escaped a similar fate at Seattle Thursday night, when a large touring car, going at a high speed, crashed through the railing of the long trestle over the Tide Flats at the point known to automobile drivers as "Dead Man's Curve." The tide was at flood when the automobile crashed through the rail and the victims were hurled into several feet of water.

FISH PIRATES GET $10,000.

Forty Armed Men Loot Salmon Traps in Washington and Escape.

A band of forty armed Frazier river fish pirates, on board eight gasoline fishing boats, swooped down on the Millegan and Jalsell traps of the Pacific-American Fisheries Company at Point Roberts, within a few miles of the international boundary line, held up the trap watchmen at the point of rifles and baled out $10,000 worth of sockeye salmon. These they loaded into their boats and took back across the boundary line.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY.

The Bell Telephone Company has purchased the controlling interest in the Chippewa Valley Telephone Company. The line extends from Barron, Wis., to Prentice, Wis., along the Soo line.

The barley crop of Minnesota is uneven this season and the average yield will not be heavy. Rye is better. Wheat will be a very heavy crop and corn was never better than it is at present.

The small grain of the Dakotas and Minnesota is maturing rapidly. Barley claimed the attention of harvesters early and the work was pushed strenuously in anticipation of the ripening of other small grain.

The corn crop of South Dakota is expected to be the largest ever raised in that State. The corn made rapid strides during the hot weather. Farmers in the vicinity of Sioux Falls report that their corn has reached a growth of six feet.

The New York Aerial Manufacturing and Navigation Company, of Brooklyn, has been incorporated to carry on the transportation of freight and of passengers by airships. The capital is $25,000. It is the first company of its kind to incorporate in New York State.

FORTY-FIVE SAVED AS STEAMER BURNS

Fifteen Are Rescued After Being Thrown Into Illinois River by Breaking of Gangplank.

OFFICERS STOP A PANIC.

Modern Jim Bludso Sticks to Post After Being Badly Injured, Then Escapes in Rowboat.

Forty persons, half of them women and children, narrowly escaped death the other afternoon when the steamer Fred Swain was burned to the water's edge in the Illinois River near Peoria. Two men were seriously injured. With the flames sweeping over the deck the pasengers became panic-stricken and threatened to crowd each other into the river as they fought for places in row boats, which were put out. To add to the confusion and danger the ropes supporting the gang plank were burned and fifteen persons, most of them women and children, were thrown into the water.

The steamer belonged to the Peoria and LaSalle Packet Company. With Captain Verne Swain in command it had left the Peoria port on its way to La Salle. Twenty-five passengers and a crew of fifteen were on board. At 3:20 o'clock the flames were discovered issuing from a stateroom on the second deck. Captain Swain, realizing that the vessel was doomed, ordered Pilot Martin Huston to beach the boat and instructed his crew to deal out life preservers. The smoke and flames meanwhile had been observed from the shore and a score of row boats were hurried to the scene. Women were shrieking and children were crying as they waited for the boats to take them away from the threatening holocaust.

The packet had been piloted into four feet of water in a patch of small willow trees when occurred the accident that dumped fifteen persons into the water from the gangplank. The men and women were able to make their way to safety, but four children who were among them would have perished but for two men, who half-carried and half-swam with them to tree stumps, which protruded from the water, to await the arrival of the rescuers. Captain Swain and Engineer Casrider were the last to leave the boat. After guarding against an explosion, Casrider went to his pumps and remained there until the flames licked him about the face and body. A row boat had been left for him, but when he finally abandoned his station the boat had caught fire. He got into the boat, and, beating the flames from him and rowing with all his might, managed to get to shore.

The loss is estimated at $35,000, of which $30,000 is on the vessel. Several passengers lost all their personal belongings. The Fred Swain was built at Clear Water, Minn., nine years ago, and was one of the finest packets plying the Illinois River.

MEN IN MINORITY IN CHURCH.

Census Report Shows Women the More Religious Sex.

Standing out as a conspicuous feature of a bulletin issued by the census bureau entitled "Census of religious bodies," is the fact that out of a church membership in the United States in 1906, of nearly 33,000,000 men formed considerably less than half of the total. Of the total church membership reported by the various religious bodies and classified by sex, 43.1 per cent were men and 56.9 per cent were women. Among the Protestants the difference was greater, only 39.3 per cent being men, while in the Roman Catholic Church the men formed 49.3 per cent of the total membership. Fewer men than women were found among the Latter Day Saints, the Lutherans, Disciples, Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians and Protestant Episcopalians, the percentage of men members decreasing in the order shown, and there being only 35.5 per cent men among the Episcopalians. Among the Christian Scientists, only 27.6 per cent were men, and of the Shakers, only 21.3 per cent, but in the Greek Orthodox church, 93.9 per cent were men.

ALABAMA TO BE VERY DRY.

Drastic Fuller Prohibition Bill Is Passed with Little Opposition.

The drastic Fuller prohibition bill passed by the Alabama Senate forbids even the possession of liquor except in private residences, making the accused person prove his own innocence before any evidence against him is introduced. It makes the use of the word saloon a crime, bars the advertisement of liquors from bill boards and signs and holds that even the possession of a Federal liquor license is an absolute proof of guilt in selling intoxicants.

MOSQUITOES SCOURGE TEXAS.

Stampede Cattle Into Gulf and Drive Railway Passengers Frantic.

Telegrams from Galveston and other Texas gulf points say a plague of mosquitoes is afflicting the gulf coast, and that cattle in large herds have traveled many miles to the gulf to escape the pests by getting into the water, where they stand starving. At Point Bolivar section hands were forced to flag a train to escape the mosquitoes.

SEPTEMBER

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

Dunn's review of local trade conditions says: Evidences of the improved state of trade generally become more distinct. The most notable feature is the rapid accumulation of forward work in the principal industries. Some complaint already appears that supplies are not promptly delivered, and there is also some fear that transportation facilities will be found inadequate to handle the increasing freight offerings. In both the volume of payments through the banks and the record of trading defaults are found sustaining indications of a healthy condition in credits. Heavier movements appear in grain, raw materials, factory outputs and general merchandise, and there is more production in iron, steel, wood and leather working. The general demand for money has become extended, and the discount rates for choice commercial paper are firm at 4½ to 5 per cent despite the fact that many large concerns as yet seek little accommodation.

Hot weather raised some alarm as to its effect on corn growth, and this forced a moderate rise for the leading grains, but flour has remained weak and late advices indicate that temperatures now favor agriculture. Visiting buyers from many sections throng the jobbing district, and there is considerable activity in dry goods, footwear, clothing, food products, furniture and house needs. Bank clearings, $253,188,504, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1908 by 17.6 per cent and compare with $221,123,655 in 1907. Failures reported by the Chicago district number seventeen, against twenty-nine last week, twenty-four in 1908 and fourteen in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number six, against seven last week, six in 1908 and two in 1907.

NEW YORK.

Jobbing trade and manufacturing industry tend to expand as the vacation season wanes and harvest possibilities grow into certainties. From a number of markets, however, come the reiteration of reports that purchasers take hold conservatively and that retailers are still cautious buyers. Currency shipments to the country are enlarging and money correspondingly firmer. Something like a sobering process has been witnessed in the security market, which is lower all around. Perhaps the most encouraging features reported this week come from a few of the leading industries. Iron and steel buying has become more confident, railway purchasing being in evidence and premiums are being offered for early deliveries of materials intended for manufacture.

The higher range of prices for cereals, particularly winter wheat, has encouraged the movement from the farms, and the number of idle cars has decreased, with talk of a car shortage before the close of the year.

Business failure for the week ending Aug. 19 were 183, against 219 last week, 230 in the like week of 1908, 153 in 1907, 155 in 1906 and 176 in 1905.—Bradstreet's Commercial Report.

$7,778,000,000 IS VALUE OF '08 CROP

Secretary Wilson Shows that United States Holds World's Record in Agriculture.

BIG INCREASE IN FARM TRADE.

Agricultural Balance Has Grown Over 75 Per Cent Within the Past Twelve Years.

Secretary of Agriculture Wilson thinks those who have been pitying the farmer had better wake up to the fact that during the past year—that is the crop year of 1908—there was a net gain in the value of crops which raises the total valuation of farm products up to the astonishing total of $7,778,000,000, the biggest in the world's history. The value of farm product this year is $290,000,000 above the value for 1907 and $3,061,000,000 above the census amount for 1899.

In the last twelve years, the period covering the administration of Secretary of Agriculture James Wilson, the agricultural balance of trade in the United States increased from a yearly average of $234,000,000 to $411,000,000, or 75.7 per cent, according to the department's year book just made public. This wonderful development is only in keeping with the progress made along the lines of agricultural activity. Conditions affecting the lives of the farmers have advanced in even greater ratio until many undesirable features of farm life have been eliminated. Many innovations have been introduced and developed into potential forces for the betterment of farm life. Never before has the work of state agricultural colleges and experimental stations been so intimately related with the department as now.

There has been a great diversification and geographic extension of products apart from the cultivation of new land. Although there has been a decreasing production per acre of what was only recently virgin soil, there was an increased production per acre of the entire country. Within ten years the production of corn per acre in Ohio increased 17.5 per cent and in Virginia 18.3 per cent. Oats increased 17.9 per cent in Indiana. Wheat increased 16.2 per cent in New York and 45.9 per cent in Nebraska. Similar advancement was made in the yield per acre of other products.

From 1895 to 1906 farm wages increased faster than did prices. In wage increase the farm laborer has fared better than the workingman employed in manufacturing and mechanical industries.

QUAKE IN ITALY.

Province of Siena Shaken, Causing Panic and Injury.

A heavy earthquake was felt throughout the Province of Siena, Italy, Wednesday. Practically all the houses in San Lorenzo were destroyed or badly damaged. Many persons were injured. The quake was felt most severely within a radius of twenty miles from Siena. Considerable damage was done at Buonoconvento. Several houses collapsed and one person was killed. Several persons were injured at Monteroni. A number of houses also were damaged there and masonry fell into the streets. Siena itself escaped with a severe shaking. The people were badly frightened, however, and rushed out of their houses into the streets, where they wandered about in a state of semi-panic until they were assured that the quakes were over.

Siena Province has an area of 1,470 square miles and a population of 233,000. The city of Siena is at an altitude of 1,000 feet and counts 30,000 inhabitants. San Lorenzo, Buonoconvento, Monteroni and Piombino are villages with populations ranging from 1,000 to 4,000.

Monthly Expense on the Canal.

Reports from Panama show that the fiscal year which closed June 30 is the record year for expenditures since the United States took possession of the zone. The monthly average was $2,700,000, and in January, 1909, the record month, more than $3,250,000 was expended.

The report shows that the actual expenses up to this time reach the total of $104,177,884, exclusive of the $50,000,000 paid for the canal.

Stick Was Snake's Tail.

William H. Roab at Greenwood Lake, N. J., stepped upon what he thought a stick, but it was the tail of a snake, and the reptile wound itself around the calf of his right leg. The snake measured nearly six feet in length and was as big around as a man's wrist.

State Sues for $65,000,000.

Prosecutor Jeffrey filed suit in the Jackson County Circuit Court at Newport, Ark., against sixty-five insurance companies doing business in the State, asking penalties amounting to $65,000,000 for alleged violation of the anti-trust laws.

"Fan's" Mouth Drew Bird.

While rooting at the baseball game at Ponce de Leon, Ga., Billy Wills threw back his head and opened his mouth, and a sparrow, evidently seeing a good opening, flew into his mouth

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Orland Wright, aged 14 years, died at Laporte of lockjaw, following injuries received in a street car accident August 3.

While asleep on the tracks of the Evansville and Rockport Traction line near Evansville, the 3-year-old son of Edward Anderson was struck by a car and fatally injured.

Gertrude, the 2-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Hoopengartner, of Decatur, is dead of spinal trouble, which resulted from a fall on the pavement several weeks ago.

After suffering for thirty years with rheumatic trouble, W. Homer Twitchell is dead at his home in Angola at the age of 73 years. He was twice elected Recorder of Steuben County.

Mrs. A. T. Studebaker, aged 82, one of the best known pioneer ladies of Bluffton, was hurt when she arose in the night from her bed during a slight illness and fell. The room was dark and she lay in a clothes closet for a long time before she was found.

While attending to his work in the basement of the New Bedford federal building, which is nearing completion, one of the workmen found a possum hidden under a sewer pipe, and a little later, in the same place found a rabbit and a big green frog that had taken refuge there.

It is believed at Bluffton that John Terrell will never be brought to trial for killing his son-in-law, Melvin Woulfe, several years ago. Terrell had been declared insane, but was released from jail some time ago. Previously he had been discharged from the Richmond Insane Asylum as harmless.

Miss Mary Rader, of Jeffersonville, lost her bull terrier pup for two days. When she had about given up hope of finding it, she was walking through a field near her home north of the city, when she heard a familiar whine. Search revealed the pup with its head so fast in a tin cup that it could not extricate itself.

Bullbats and martins are collecting in great numbers at the falls of the Ohio, near Jeffersonville, where they roost on what is known as Sand Island below the falls. Every evening they can be counted by the scores, flying from the north toward the river and the feathered procession continues from before sunset till nearly dark. They are supposed to gather there preparatory to their further migration south and the movement is regarded as presageful of the fall.

Auten Post G. A. R., of South Bend, has inaugurated a plan to provide invalid chairs for old soldiers unable to walk. The first chair is to be purchased for Daniel Seifert, who has been bedridden for five years. It is the plan of the veterans to take him on trips to various parts of the city in the wheeled chair and to see that their unfortunate comrade enjoys plenty of outdoor air. Several members of the Post are helpless invalids and the gift to Seifert is the forerunner of others soon to be made.

Because he believed his life depended on his eating thirty eggs a day and a quantity of gelatin and pigs' feet, Fred M. Johnston, of Shelbyville, was declared insane by a commission. Later Johnston disappeared from his home. He was last seen running through a corn field, ten miles from Shelbyville. Before his disappearance Johnston heard that his mother intended sending him to a private infirmary. The demented man thought she was without funds to do so, and rather than have her spend her money in that manner he left home.

A peculiar appearing bird, which, on being captured, proved to be a turkey buzzard, was pulled from a tree with a long pole by Raymond Burwell, a farmer northwest of Alexandria. His attention had been attracted to the bird by a small tin box, which was fastened about his neck. On opening the box Burwell found within it a piece of soft metal on which was the inscription, "May 14, 1909, Dan F. Gaar, Hartford City, Ind.; please write." Burwell then released the bird, which was very tame, but at once wrote to Gaar, to find out something about the strange carrier if possible.

The residents of North Meridian, North Washington and North Walnut streets in Brazil have appealed to the police for relief from a pest in the form of blackbirds. These birds began to appear in great numbers ten days ago. Since that time they have come from every direction in great flocks, until now thousands of them assemble nightly in the trees, and their noise is making the residents nearly frantic. Flocks of martins assemble in the same neighborhood and attack the blackbirds with great fury. The din has become unbearable and the people are appealing to the officers for the privilege of killing them with shotguns, and will at once begin a wholesale slaughter of the birds.

John Townsend, of Martinsville, has presented R. L. Nutter with a half-grown Plymouth Rock chicken that walks almost as straight as a person. The chicken's legs seem to be too short and are set too far back on its body.

Charles Franklin, of West Hammond, is being sought by the police. He fled to Chicago after warrants were sworn out for his arrest on a charge of cutting off a cow's tail, "just to see whether it would look like a bulldog."

Curg Conrad, a farmer of Boone County, and his wife, when driving to the Zion Park camp meeting at Zionsville, with his wife, was killed by a special train on the Northwestern interurban line at Turkey Foot Crossing.

Augustus Harrison, a workman, was caught in a line-shaft in the factory of the Lapel Bottle Company, at Lapel. Realizing his peril, Harrison caught hold of a post and held to it until his clothing was stripped from him. He was uninjured.

Elbert H. Woods, aged 21 years, was instantly killed three miles northwest of Knightstown. He was driving a traction engine when the accident occurred. A set screw on the fly wheel of the engine struck him on the forehead, fracturing his skull.

A monster catfish, weighing almost one hundred pounds, came near capsizing the boat of James McGowan, near Evansville, and fought viciously when McGowan attempted to pull it into the boat. It was necessary to kill the fish in order to get it into the boat.

Calvin Moon, for eighteen years superintendent of the South Bend city schools and for fourteen years county superintendent, has been ousted from office. He refused to resign. John A. Wood, superintendent of schools of Laporte, was elected to the vacant position.

Mr. and Mrs. Levi Evans, of Carmel, have a hen that is mothering a litter of kittens. The hen takes the kittens under her wings each night and cares for them with her chickens, while the mother cat goes in search of food. The hen turns the kittens over to their parent in the morning.

The failure of two thousand pounds of dynamite to explode saved the lives of forty workmen at Portland recently. The wagon in which the dynamite was being hauled overturned when the driver ventured too close to the edge of the cliff. The softness of the earth accounts for the lucky termination of the accident.

William Mobley, a stock raiser and dealer at Hartsville, Bartholomew County, is planning a large live stock sale for some time early in September. He will dispose of about one thousand head of live stock, valued at more than $30,000, and expects to do all the selling in one day. He will offer 100 cattle, 130 horses, 600 sheep, 150 hogs and 50 milch cows.

H. C. Howard, of San Juan, Porto Rico, is in Evansville and has closed a deal for a large shipment of Evansville furniture. He says Evansville furniture leads in the island and that Evansville stoves also rank high. Since the opening of the new furniture exchange in Evansville buyers have come from several different States to buy Evansville furniture.

Miss Sylvia Bowman, who lives near Columbus, is in a serious condition as a result of injuries received in a runaway near that city. She started to drive home along a highway that parallels the Pennsylvania railroad track and her horse became frightened at a passing train. The animal demolished the buggy and Miss Bowman has bruises and injuries from head to foot. One leg was broken in two places.

When a fellow-passenger on a train shook Harry Chandler, a young man of Oakland City, and asked him if he had not gone past his destination Chandler arose from his seat and while still asleep walked off the train. Although the speed of the train was nearly a mile a minute, Chandler escaped with a broken arm and fingers. The train was stopped and while a search was being made for his body Chandler awoke and walked away.

Herbert Wilson, a negro from Nashville, charged with making an assault on his sweetheart, leaped from the third story of a building in Evansville, to escape from officers who were trying to break in his door to arrest him. After alighting on the pavement forty feet below Wilson fell to his side, but soon regained his feet and ran away, but was afterward captured. He showed no signs of being injured by his tumble from the building.

On the farm of Lish Hiland, near Danville, a covey of quails has annexed itself to a flock of young turkeys belonging to Hiland, and they have adopted many of the habits of the turkeys. The quails follow the turkeys wherever they go and remain with them during the day. When evening comes the game birds follow the turkeys to their accustomed haunts and roost in the trees with them. This is said to be entirely foreign to the habits of the quails. Instead of spending the nights huddled together on the ground, for some reason the quails have forsaken the habits of their kind and have taken the first step toward living a domestic life. Hiland has made no attempt to tame the birds, and so far as he knows the covey joined forces with the turkeys of its own accord.

Worrying over the fact that he was recently arrested it Boonville on a grand larceny charge, caused Early Baleys, aged 23 years, of Evansville, to commit suicide.

A band of very considerate yeggmen visited the Banner Laundry in Fort Wayne. In an effort to crack the safe with nitro-glycerin, and upon realizing that success was an impossibility, they pencilled a note reading: "Be careful. Explosives in here," and pasted it to the safe door.

THE POPULAR PULPIT

THE HEART OF THE UNIVERSE.

By Henry F. Cope.

"As the hart panteth after the water brooks so panteth my soul after thee, O God."—Ps. 23: 2.

As soon as you take one god away from man he looks for another. The hunger for an infinite object of love and confidence, for the life in which all life explains itself, is common to all. The ages show it to be ineradicable. Whatever it might have signified in the past of fear or worship, to the mind of man to-day it is the search for a personal center to the universe.

Long since we have outgrown the old theologian's god, the mighty man who made the earth with His fingers and guided the stars with His hands, who, sitting aloft in the skies, dictated human affairs, an arbitrary, awesome, omnipotent sovereign, a king lifted to the highest degree. That picture once contented men because, just as regal power then seemed essential to a state, so did that superhuman sovereignty seem to be essential to the universe.

But we have not outgrown our need of a center and a life to our living; we have not outgrown the need of such being as will answer the problem of living in terms of our own lives. Just as a normal life needs other lives, other personalities and friendships, so does the larger life of every man reach out into the infinite with its longing for larger friendship and love.

This is the search for God, reaching our hands into the dark night of the infinite and unknown, hoping that we may find there the touch of a hand that can lead through the shadows and feel the throb of a heart that will assure us of the unfailing goodness and rightness ruling through all. We seek not a king nor a first cause, but a life that answers in the measure of that larger living to our own.

You can never satisfy the hearts of men with the most elaborate schemes of the working of blind force; the last word of science leaves much unspoken for the soul of man. We may accept all and deny nothing that science may say and still demand that more must be said and insist on our liberty to seek further where microscope and scalpel can discover nothing.

In us something answers to this, that there is one who cares, that love and sympathy, the best we know and the highest we have, are at the heart of all, that we are not as dust on the whirling wheels of relentless nature, but that through all, as in us all, moves that of which tenderness, compassion and affection are born.

Such being defies all description, such being makes no formal demands of us. No questions of loyalty, of worship, or of an analytical belief can enter here. But given a heart to the universe, one there to whom we can turn, toward whom our love can go out, half the problem of living is solved and all takes on new meaning.

That is what we need, not definitions of the infinite, not agreements on attributes or names, but the sense that just as our own lives find unity in a personal spiritual center so does all life, that we can only read the mystery of living in letters of love. God is not for purposes of argument nor for systems of ecclesiasticism, but for our aid and encouragement in living.

It matters not at all whether our inner visions of that central unifying life may agree. It matters only whether the whole of life takes on this personal meaning, whether in the dark and trying hours we can be sure that through the eternities, where our friends cannot go and where other helpers fail, hands of love are stretched to us and a heart of tenderness beats with ours.

This is a man's hunger for God, not for pictures of one who made the worlds, not so much for a creator, nor for an infinite lord, and still less for the theologian's masterpiece, but for that tenderness, affection and wisdom that in the wider, farther reaches of life will be to us what father and friend are in the smaller circle of their possibilities.

LIFTED UP AND CAST DOWN.

By Rev. Duncan J. McMillan, D. D.

Text: "Thou hast lifted me up, and cast me down."—Psalm cii:19.

Each of us in the humble walks of life are on the heights and in the depths alternately. God lifts us up at times into prosperity and comfort and our lives flow on in ceaseless song like the limpid musical stream, but when He casts us down we murmur and complain and forget that the downward plunge is just as needful and just as much a necessary part of a beneficent plan as the uplift is. We find that there are just as many uplifting strokes as there are downward returning plunges. There are just as many valleys as there are mountain peaks—just as many nights as there are days—and the night is just as necessary to our welfare and happiness as the day is—the valleys are as essential to the wealth of a nation as the mountains are, for while the mountains have their stores of mineral wealth, the valleys in their fertility are teaming with life.

All nature is full of the same thing. Nature abhors monotony as much as she abhors a vacuum. God has struck nothing on a dead level. The hills and the dales, the mountains and the valleys, the rivers and the rock-ribbed ridges are but nature's counterpart to grace. Even the water that constantly seeks its level is not permitted to find it, unless it be to become stagnant and breed poison and death in the stillness. The seas that bear the commerce of the world are always restless. They are churned into foam, lifted into billows and plowed into troughs.

Much of the worry of this busy American life of ours which sometimes results in despondency and despair is, after all, only borrowed trouble, as if there was not trouble enough in the present without purloining from the future? The rich man in the uplift of prosperity, fears the down plunge of adversity and is sure that he will die poor, and so his fears strangle his faith. We grow irritable and complain of God's treatment of us. We forget that His setting sun shall rise again. We complain when He gives us anything good that He does not give us everything good. We do not get half the sweetness out of life.

It is not by dead forms and stagnant rituals, but by the invincible logic of holy and consistent lives that the enemies of truth are to be vanquished. There is a parable which sets forth this very beautifully. It runs this: "One day David the King of Israel sat on Mt. Zion. His harp was before him and he leaned his head upon it. Then the prophet, Gad, came to him and said: 'Whereon museth my Lord the King?' David answered: 'On the continual changes of my destiny. How many songs of joy and gratitude have I sung to this harp, but how many songs also of mourning and sorrow.' 'Be thou like unto the harp,' said the prophet. 'What meanest thou?' asked the King. 'Behold,' answered the man of God, 'both thy sorrow and thy joy drew heavenly sounds from the harp, and animated its strings.'" Thus let joy and sorrow form thy heart to a celestial harp. The strains of the harp would give forth no music unless they were fretted. Let us let God attune our lives into harmony with His providences as they are working all about us and within us, and after all is done the final uplift will carry us to the threshold of the celestial city. And he who lifts us up there will never cast us down again.

LAW OF RECIPROCITY.

By Rev. E. W. Caswell.

It is more blessed to give than to receive.—Acts 20:35.

This text is the embodiment of one of the greatest of truths—the law of reciprocity. Similar passages in the Scriptures are: "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap;" "Give, and it shall be given unto you;" "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ."

Giving is like an endless circle. It is casting bread upon the waters, which returns in multiplied abundance after many days. It is the seed in the soil, bursting into golden harvest. It is the banker, giving out to the borrower till the interest exceeds the principal. It is the philanthropist, receiving the gratitude of mankind. It is the martyr missionary, losing his life to find it. It is the discoverer and inventor, like Hendrik Hudson and Robert Fulton, giving their genius for the welfare of the people and receiving, generations afterward, the plaudits and thanksgiving of the world, because of the glory of their achievements.

Men who give get bills of exchange on God's banking house, the interest of which is paid as we need it along the journey of life, while the principal awaits your arrival in the eternal city.

Giving is the philosopher's stone, which, instead of turning everything into gold, turns gold into everything—into halls of learning, libraries of information, missions for millions, homes for the homeless, Christ for the Christless, and life, eternal life, for the dying.

The returning compensation for all noble deeds comes in that which is better than an equivalent; in a love and gratitude unpurchasable, as it is unfading and unspeakable in its glory and blessedness. It is the crown of character on the brow of the individual or nation, resplendent, immortal.

Even though your gift is unappreciated or misapplied, it is irreversibly recorded in your being. Children may be undutiful, but the parents are blessed on account of their expressions of kindness and care. Husbands may be drunken or brutal, but the wife who struggles patiently on has her reward in her own soul, and it may be the final redemption of her lost one. The Divine Christ, who gave Himself upon the cross as a Saviour as an example of infinite self-sacrifice, possesses a name above every name and a throne universal and eternal.

In an exhaustive article on fall fashions, in Woman's Home Companion for September, Grace Margaret Gould says:

"The straight lines of last season's silhouette are passing. The loose fit seen in the spring models has entirely gone, though the slender hip is still with us. The tailored suit for fall is much smarter in appearance than last year. The coat is long, varying from about forty to forty-eight inches in length. Sleeves are still small and extremely plain. Coats of the tailor-made suits are very plain, strictly tailored and are extremely mannish in effect. Some of the tailored-coat-and-skirt suits show the coat trimmed with bands of the self-fabric or with braid, to emphasize the elongated waist line, but generally speaking, the plainer the tailored coat this year, the better its style. Skirts show many changes. The plain gored skirt, as nearly straight up and down in line as it was possible to make it, was the reigning fashion. Now this autumn our skirts to be stylish at all we are told, must be plaited. The newest skirts have a deep hip-yoke effect which fits the figure very closely. From this yoke come the plaits. The plaited portion of the skirt may be kilted, box-plaited or it may show a panel front with plaits introduced at the sides. But plaits there must be in one form or another, and fullness at the bottom, or the skirt will not have the newest stamp of fashion".

A Interesting Letter

Read before the Walter Family Reunion, which was held at B. F. Walter's residence in St. Joe, Saturday, August 21.

Washington is the Only State.

The following letter was read at the Walter Reunion, being received from the Walter boys of Cosmopolis, Washington. It should have been printed last week but owing to the rush of work we were compelled to carry it over until this issue.

As the time of year rolls by when the harvest is ended we find ourselves face to face with the great festival season. Although the time is still far distant for the great National Feast Day yet it is fitting and proper that the local and tribal relations should be renewed preparatory to the National Festival.

We regret that it is impossible for us to be present at the pleasant gathering. We are in a great and undeveloped country. From the window one can look out over an almost unlimited field of forest and hill, river and valley. The country here is very broken and the hills rise into the clouds. In the course of a few minutes walk one can rise to a point where he can gaze for many miles. To the north rise the Olympic Mountains on whose crest can be seen snow any clear day in the year. To the west one can gaze over one of the most picturesque harbors in the world. For eight miles there is nothing but lumber mills and docks. The great schooners with their burden or empty are fastened along these by the score. The four most ones tower to a heighth of 100 feet. These can carry a load of from five to eight hundred thousand feet. From this point can be seen the broad Pacific Ocean whose majestic waters wash two-thirds of the land surface of the world. Although one cannot hear the roar of the dashing waves, yet one who has stood beside those breaking waters will never forget the charms of those moments of awe.

Turning to the South one can look out over as beautiful and as picturesque a scene as can be had anywhere. The rolling hills clothed with their magnificent growth of timber are a sight to behold. I am fully aware of the fact that in grandeur and ruggedness the Rockies far surpass them but for intrinsic beauty the hills around Grays Harbor are fully the equal of those stupendous piles of granite.

But it is to the East where one can have a view that fully repays that one who has exerted so much energy to gain the summit of his view point. There one can see for many miles up one of the most contented and prosperous valleys to be found anywhere. One can see the little villages nestled beside the river and far in the distance the coast range of mountains rising to heights where the clouds roll.

Outside of this little valley the country is very wild and uncultivated. In twenty minutes from this place one can be in the forest, virgin, unbroken, dense. Trees here are evergreen. The fir, hemlock, spruce and cedar abound. The cedar sometimes reaches eighteen feet in diameter and two hundred seventy five feet tall. One tree that was cut in this place produced twenty-eight thousand feet of lumber. One log had fourteen thousand feet.

The capacity of the mill at this place is one hundred fifty thousand feet for every working day in the year. And this is only a very small part of the immense amount of lumber that is produced here. There are mills on this harbor that actually cut five hundred thousand feet per ten hour day. One wonders where it all comes from and where it is all going. Personally I have actually graded in a single day forty thousand feet of siding. How much would a man grade in a lifetime? One of the surface planers here has a capacity of seventy-two thousand feet per day of ten hours. And we are working in a mill that has ten planers. Of course, most of the lumber is in finished product.

Now as to the climate permits us to say that it is just the same as it was in May or June. So far as I am able to observe there is no difference. It is the greatest place to sleep that I have ever seen. No hot nights here.

One of the striking things to be noticed here is the variety of plants. Vegetables and flowers abound where ever they are planted. Roses bloom here throughout the entire year and one can go into the front yard at Xmas and pick a boquet for the dinner table. It would seem strange to Indiana people I am sure to have such a Xmas. Sweet peas grow to the height of six feet and roses are larger here than I have ever seen them at any other place. All one needs to do to have flowers in abundance is to plant and cultivate them.

We hope that everyone will have a very enjoyable time and that the reunion will be a success in every way. With best wishes for the health and happiness of one and all. We remain

Sincerely Yours
Arthur Walter.

Great Alteration Piano Sale.

We have received word that Lyon & Healy, of Chicago, known everywhere as "The World's Largest Music House," is conducting an unprecedented alteration sale in their Piano Department.

This great sale was made necessary in order to move the large number of pianos on their third floor so as to facilitate the work of carpenters who are engaged in putting in new flooring.

In the list of pianos offered in this sale are included many standard and well known makes, such as Steinway, Lyon & Healy, Weber, Fischer, A. B. Chase, Knabe and Chickering, and prices have been reduced from 20 to 40 per cent.

If you have in mind the purchase of a piano you should drop a postal to Lyon & Healy for a copy of their alteration sale list, as you will save considerable money on your purchase by so doing.

Ten Doctors Said He Would Die

"In 1903 we wrote you regarding my husband, who was suffering from heart trouble. He was superanuated by the North Georgian Conference. Ten doctors at different times said he would die. You advised Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy and Restorative Nervine; we did as advised, and improvement was apparent from the very first. He recovered and the Conference in 1904 gave him a charge. He never felt better, although he has very heavy work and does a great deal of camp meeting work. I am so glad we took your advice and gave him the medicine, and feel that I ought to let you know of the wonderful good results from its use."

MRS. T. S. EDWARDS,
Milner, Ga.

This proves what Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy will do. Get a bottle from your druggist and take it according to directions. It does not matter whether your heart is merely weak, or you have organic trouble, if it does not benefit you take the empty bottle to your druggist and get your money back.

State Fair Opens.

The Indiana State Fair opens at Indianapolis on Monday, Sept. 6, and will continue through five days and evenings. All the indications point to a great exposition. The demands for exhibition space by both old and new patrons is beyond that of any other year, and in the classes where prizes are to be awarded the entries are very heavy. The Fair is going to be rich in special features for men, women and children. The parade of horses and cattle, high-class vaudeville, the attempts of Lady Maude C and Hedgewood Boy to beat several world's records for pacers, concerts by the Natiella band of fifty men from Philadelphia, a great show of flowers under the direction of the Indiana Florists' Association, the spectacular parades and exhibitions of horses in the coliseum at night, are some of the many attractions which make up the program.

The Fair has increased its premium awards to $75,000, and about $25,000 of it is in prizes for horses and cattle. The trotting and pacing races every afternoon carry purses to the amount of $37,600, about double the amount of other years. The first day of the fair is on Labor Day when a special admission fee of 25 cents will be charged. Tuesday will be free day for children and veterans of the wars. Programs and premium lists may be obtained free of the secretary. Charles Downing, State House, Indianapolis.

CHAPTER XXIII.—(Continued.)

John Saxton sat in the office of the Traction Company on a hot night in July. Fenton had just left him. The transfer to the Margrave syndicate had been effected and John would no more sign himself "John Saxton, Receiver." His work in Clarkson was at an end. The Neponset Trust Company had called him to Boston for a conference, which meant, he knew, a termination of his service with them. He had lately sold the Poindexter ranch, and so little property remained on the Neponset's books that it could be cared for from the home office. He had not opened the afternoon mail. He picked up a letter from the top of the pile, dated from San Fransisco, and read:

"San Francisco.

"My Dear Sir:

"I hesitate about writing you, but there are some things which I should like you to understand before I go away. I had fully expected to remain with you and Bishop Delafield and to return to Clarkson that last morning at Poindexter's. I cannot defend myself for having run away; it must have seemed a strange thing to you that I did so. I had fully intended acting on the bishop's advice, which I knew then, and know now, was good. But when the west-bound train came, my courage left me; I could not go back and face the people I had known, after what had happened. I told you the truth there in the ranch house that night; every word of it was true. Maybe I did not make it clear enough how weak I am. Things came too easy for me, I guess; at any rate I was never worthy of the good fortune that befell me. It seemed to me that for two years everything I did was a mistake. I suppose if I had been a real criminal, and not merely a coward, I should not have entangled myself as I did and brought calamity upon other people.

When I reached here I found employment with a shipping house. I have told my story to one of the firm, who has been kind to me. He seems to understand my case, and is giving me a good chance to begin over again. I suppose the worst possible things have been said about me, and I do not care, except that I hope the people in Clarkson will not think I was guilty of any wrong-doing at the bank. I read in the newspapers that I had stolen the bank's money, and I hope that was corrected. The books must have proved what I say. I understand now that what I did was worse than stealing, but I should like you and Mr. Porter to know that I not only did not take other people's money, but that in my foolish relations with Margrave I did not receive a cent for the shares of stock which he took from me—neither for my own nor for those of Miss Porter. I don't blame Margrave; if I had not been a coward he could not have played with me as he did.

"The company is sending me to one of its South American houses. I go by steamer to-morrow, and you will not hear from me again. I should like you to know that I have neither seen nor heard anything of my brother since that night. With best wishes for your own happiness and prosperity, yours sincerely,

"JAMES WHEATON."

On his way home to the club Saxton stopped at Bishop Delafield's rooms, and found the bishop, as usual, preparing for flight. Time did not change Bishop Delafield. He was one of those men who reach 60, and never, apparently, pass it. He and Saxton were fast friends now. The bishop missed Warry out of his life; Warry was always so accessible and so cheering. John was not so accessible and he had not Warry's lightness, but the Bishop of Clarkson liked John Saxton.

The bishop sat with his inevitable hand-baggage by his side and read Wheaton's letter through.

"How ignorant we are!" he said, folding it. "I sometimes think that we who try to minister to the needs of the poor in spirit do not even know the rudiments of our trade. We are pretty helpless with men like Wheaton. They are apparently strong; they yield to no temptations, so far as any man knows; they are exemplary characters. I suppose that they are living little tragedies all the time. The moral coward is more to be pitied than the open criminal. You know where to find the criminal; but the moral coward is an unknown quantity. Life is a strange business, John, and the older I get the less I think I know of it." He sighed and handed back the letter.

"But he's doing better than we might have expected him to," said Saxton. "A man's entitled to happiness if he can find it. He undoubtedly chose the easier part in running away. I can't imagine him coming back here to face the community after all that had happened."

"I don't know that I can either. Preaching is easier than practicing, and I'm not sure that I gave him the best advice at the ranch house that morning."

"Well, it was the only thing to do," Saxton answered. "I suppose neither you nor I was sure he told the truth; it was a situation that was calculated to make one skeptical. It isn't clear from his letter that the whole thing has impressed him in any great way. He's anxious to have us thing well of him—a kind of retrospective vanity."

"But his punishment is great. It's not for us to pass on its adequacy. I must be going, John," and Saxton gathered up the battered cases and went out to the car with him.

Bishop Delafield always brought Warry back vividly to John, and as they waited on the corner he remembered his first meeting with the bishop, in Warry's rooms at The Bachelors'. And that was very long ago!

CHAPTER XXIV.

Uncertainty and doubt filled John Saxton's mind and heart, and he saw no light ahead. He had seen Evelyn several times before she had left home, on occasions when he went to the house with Fenton for conferences with her father. He had intended saying good-by to her, but the Porters went hurriedly at last and he was not sorry; it was easier that way. But Mrs. Whipple, who was exercising a motherly supervision over John, had exacted a promise from him to come to Orchard Lane during the time that she and the general were to be with the Porters in their new cottage. When he went East, Saxton settled down at his club in Boston, and pretended that it was good to be at home again; but he went about with homesickness gnawing his heart. He had reason to be happy and satisfied with himself. He had practically concluded the difficult work which he had been sent to Clarkson to do; he had realized more money from their assets than the officers of the trust company had expected; and they held out to him the promise of employment in their Boston office as a reward. So he walked the familiar streets planning his future anew. He had succeeded in something at last, and he would stay in Boston, having, he told himself, earned the right to live there. The assistant secretaryship of the trust company, which had been mentioned to him, would be a position of dignity and promise. He had never hoped to do so well. Moreover, it would be pleasant to be near his sister, who lived at Worcester. There were only the two of them, and they ought to live near together.

It is, however, an unpleasant habit of the fates never to suffer us to debate simple problems long; they must throw in new elements to puzzle us. While he deferred going to Orchard Lane a new perplexity confronted him. One of Margrave's "people" came from New York as the representative of the syndicate that had purchased the Clarkson traction Company, and sought an interview. John had met this gentleman at the time the sale was closed; he was a person of consequence in the financial world, who came quickly to the point of his errand. He offered John the position of general manager of the company.

The next day John thought he saw it all more clearly. He went out and walked aimlessly through the hot streets. He realized presently that he had gone into a railway office and asked for a suburban time table. He carried this back to the club, and studied the list of Orchard Lane trains. He found that he could run out almost any hour of the day. He slept and woke refreshed, with the time table still grasped in his hand. He had been very foolish, he concluded; it would be a simple matter to go out to Orchard Lane to call on the Porters and Whipples. The next afternoon he went up to Orchard Lane.

It suited his mood that he should find no one at home at Red Gables but Mr. Porter, who played golf all the morning and slept and experimented at landscape gardening all the afternoon. He welcomed John with unwonted cordiality.

There were some details connected with the transfer of the Traction Company to Margrave's syndicate which Porter had not fully understood, or which Fenton had purposely kept from him; and he pressed John for new light on these matters. John answered or parried as he thought wisest.

John left his greetings for the rest of the household. There was a train at 6 o'clock; it was now 5 and he loitered along, stopping often to look out upon the sea. A group of people was gathered about a tea table on the sloping lawn in front of one of the houses. The colors of the women's dresses were bright against the dark green. It was a gay company; their laughter floated out to him mockingly. He wondered whether Evelyn was there, as he passed on, beating the rocky path with his stick.

Evelyn was not there; but her destination was that particular lawn and its tea table. Turning a bend in the path he came upon her. He had had no thought of seeing her; yet she was coming down the path toward him, her picture hat framed in the dome of a blue parasol. He had renounced her for all time, and he should meet her guardedly; but the blood was singing in his temples and throbbing in his finger tips at the sight of her.

"This is too bad!" she exclaimed, as they met. "I hope you can come back to the house."

She walked straight up to him and gave him her hand in her quick, frank way.

"I'm sorry, but I must be in to town on this next train," he answered. He turned in the path and walked along beside her.

"This happened to be one of our scattering days, for all except father."

"We had a nice talk, he and I. Your place is charming. Don't let me detain you. I'm sure you were going to join these lotus eaters."

"I don't believe they need me," she answered, evasively. "They seem pretty busy. But if you're hungry— or thirsty, I can get something for you there." They passed the gate, walking slowly along. He knew that he ought to urge her to stop, and that he must hurry on to catch his train; but it was too sweet to be near her; this was the last time and it was his own!

They paused finally and John held open a little gate in a stone wall. He was grave and something of his seriousness communicated itself to her. Clearly, he thought, this was the parting of the ways.

"Won't you come in? There are plenty of trains and we'd like you to dine with us."

A great wave of loneliness and yearning swept over her. Her invitation seemed to create new and limitless distances that stretched between them. He spoke incidentally of the offer he had received from the Clarkson Traction Company. "I have refused the offer," he said, quietly. He had not intended to tell her; but it was doubtless just as well; and it would alter nothing. "My work in Clarkson is finished," he went on. "Warry's affairs will make it necessary for me to go back from time to time, but it will not be home again."

"I'm sorry," she said. "I thought you were to be of us. But I suppose there is a greater difference between the East and West than any one can understand who has not known both." They regarded each other gravely, as if this were, of course, the whole matter at issue.

"I can't go back—it's too much; I can't do it," he said, wearily.

"I know how it must be—this last year and Warry! It was all so terrible—for all of us." She was looking away.

John looked at her. It was natural that she should include herself with him in a common grief for the man who had been his friend and whom she had loved. She had always been kind to him; her kindness stung him now, for he knew that it was because of Warry; and a resolve woke in him suddenly. He would not suffer her kindness under a false pretense; he could at least be honest with her.

"I can't go back because he is not there; and because—because you are not there! You don't know—you should never know, but I was disloyal to Warry from the first. I let him talk to me from day to day of you; I let him tell me that he loved you; I never let him know—I never meant any one to know—" He ceased speaking; she was very still and did not look at him. "It was base of me," he went on. "I would gladly have died for him if he had lived; but now that he is dead I can betray him. I hate myself worse than you can hate me. I know how I must wound and shock you——"

"Oh, no!" she moaned.

But he went on; he would spare himself nothing.

"It is hideous—it was cowardly of me to come here." His hands were clenched and his face twitched with pain. "Oh, if he had lived!"

She rose now and looked at him with an infinite pity.

"If he had lived," she said, very softly, looking away through the sun-dappled aisles of the orchard, "if he had lived—it would have been the same, John."

But he did not understand. His name as she spoke it rang in his ears. She walked away through the orchard path, which suddenly became to him a path of gold that stretched into paradise; and he sprang after her with a great fear in his heart lest some barrier might descend and shut her out forever.

"Evelyn! Evelyn!"

It was not a voice that called her; it was a spirit, long held in thrall, that had shaken free and become a name.

(The end.)

SAM SOTHERN NOT SAM AT ALL.

His Alliterative Name a Sample of His Father's Jocularity.

Probably there is not one in twenty of the fellow members of his profession, either here or in England, who knows that the name of Sam Sothern, the actor, is not Sam at all, the New York World says.

Mr. Sothern came back to New York on Friday in response to a hurry call to act with Sir Charles Wyndham in "The Mollusc." He has been absent from this country more than fifteen years, although he made his first theatrical appearance in this country with the late John T. Raymond, a friend of his father, E. A. Sothern, in "The Private Secretary." During the early days of the starring career of his brother, E. H. Sothern, Sam, who is not Sam, acted in his support at the old Lyceum.

If Sam Sothern had registered in New York as George Evelyn Augustus T. Sothern possibly his own brother might not have recognized him.

George Evelyn Augustus T. was named to please his mother. His father, who was a comedian off the stage as well as on it, didn't like the long handle. He wanted a name that was short and expressive. He was appearing in "Brother Sam" in London at the time, and, for convenience, tacked the name of the play on the newly born infant. Brother Sam has kept it ever since.

Another thing that Sam Sothern received from his father—this by inheritance—was the tattered yellow manuscript of "Our American Cousin." It didn't seem like a large inheritance at the time, for the elder Sothern had played the piece to a standstill both in this country and in England. So Sam cast the prompt book into a trunk, where it slumbered twenty years until E. H. Sothern, two years ago, decided to revive the play under the name of "Lord Dundreary."

All these years a small fortune had been lurking in the crumpled bunch of papers. As it was Sam's property E. H. Sothern had to pay a fat royalty on it, and as "Lord Dundreary" has been one of E. H. Sothern's biggest successes in recent years a steady stream of American dollars has flowed into Sam's English pockets.

Caused a Breach.

Askitt—Why are you so down on Walker? You used to be the best of friends.

Eggbert—Yes, I know; but last fall he took my part, and I haven't spoken to him since.

Askitt—That sounds queer.

Eggbert—Not necessarily. You see, he's an actor, too—and I wanted the part for myself.

Her Experience.

Mrs. Brown—Do you believe that marriage is a lottery?

Mrs. Green—No. I consider it more of a faith cure.

Mrs. Brown—Why, how's that?

Mrs. Green—Well, I had implicit faith in my husband when we were first married—and now I haven't.

Deeply Interested.

Said She—Oh, I'm just awfully interested in baseball. I have a cousin who belongs to a college bunch.

Said He—Indeed! And what position does he play?

Said She—Well, I forgot just now whether he's a knocker or a stopper.

The Explanation.

Edyth—Why did Clare insist on having a quiet wedding?

Mayme—Oh, I suppose she thought it would make talk.

It is estimated that there are 8,000,000 telephones now in use in the world.

A TRAGIC BLUNDER

By MRS. LOVETT CAMERON

Author of "In a Grass Country," "A Daughter's Heart," "A Sister's Sin," "Jack's Secret," Etc., Etc.

THIS IS THE TITLE OF A very striking and interesting story that must appeal to every literary taste. Primarily, its merit lies in the fact that its plot is entirely new and original. ¶The action of this splendid serial depends upon a case of mistaken identity, which is admirably natural and well carried out. The young life of beautiful Irene Garland is saddened and broken, and that of loyal-hearted Rupert Carroll nearly wrecked by a strange accident which separates them, and leads to a mysterious series of complications. This story is in truth a remarkable piece of fiction, and will prove a great literary success.

CHAPTER I.

"All that sort of thing is a dreadful mistake," said Mrs. Garland's sister-in-law to her severely.

"What sort of thing, my dear?" inquired Mrs. Garland, mildly. "Oh," following the direction of the other woman's eyes, "that?"

The two ladies were seated in the shade, upon the smooth lawn that sloped from The Cottage down to the river. The little garden was gay with flowers, the summer air was full of sweet scents and sounds. The tea table, with its dainty white cloth and Japanese tea-service, had been set upon the grass beneath the shelter of a wide-spreading plane tree.

The Cottage faced one of the most lovely back-waters on the Thames, being secluded from the more public traffic of the main stream, by a long wooded island with a fringe of graceful willows, that bent low over the shadowy water.

The object which at the present moment aroused Lady Garland's dire displeasure was, as a matter of fact, one of the most delightful river pictures that could possibly be imagined.

A young girl dressed all in white, and fair as any dream, was standing up in a punt half-way across the stream. Her slender figure, seen to best advantage against the deep greens of the background, was perfect in its supple grace, and she plied her long pole slowly and with dexterous ease as she approached the bank. Her companion, a good-looking young fellow of six or seven and twenty, lay at full length upon the scarlet cushions in the stern, his arms flung idly back behind his dark curly head, and his brown eyes fixed upon the girl in dreamy absorption.

"It is a horrible mistake!" repeated Lady Garland once more, almost with anger.

"That Irene should amuse herself, Anna?" inquired the girl's mother, with a gentle smile; "why should not the poor child have a little pleasure?"

"But who is this young man, pray, with whom you allow her to go punting about on the river from morning till night?"

"Rupert Carroll? I think he seems a very nice young man indeed."

"Seems! but what do you know about him? Who is he, where does he come from?"

"Oh, he is just staying at the 'George' for fishing," replied Mrs. Garland placidly.

"My dear Gertrude, you really are the most aggravating person in the world! As if staying at a country inn for fishing could be a sufficient guarantee for anybody's respectability! How do you know, pray, what this man is? He may be an impostor."

"I think not. Mr. Carroll is a gentleman."

"Anyhow, he is probably a pauper. Pray, Gertrude, think of your child's future. She is beautiful and barely eighteen, she ought to marry well, for she has no other fortune but her face. And believe me, my dear, these meaningless flirtations only get girls talked about, and are horribly prejudicial to their settling in life."

A flush came suddenly into her mother's gentle face. "We do not think of such things, Irene and I," she said with a little dignity. "I do not want my girl's head to be filled with——with ideas of what you call 'marrying well'—I would rather keep her at home with me."

At this moment the punt grated against the shallow shore at the end of the garden, and Rupert Carroll sprang out to assist his companion to land. As he took her hand, he held it a moment clasped tightly in his.

"Won't you really do as I ask you, Miss Garland?"

"Mamma would not like me to go, Mr. Carroll," the girl answered, trembling a little, and not daring to meet his eyes.

"But why tell her? Why not come out quietly as I ask you to do, without saying a word? It is not as if we had not been out after dinner before, and you have no idea how beautiful the weir looks by the light of this harvest moon—it is a dream!"

Irene's downcast face was a picture of indecision and confusion. As a rule it was a face that was a trifle cold and proud, but now something new and wonderful had transfigured and changed it, so that it was only sweet, and tremulous, and timid. For a fortnight past the girl had been living in Dreamland. This man, whom three weeks ago she had never heard of, had entered into her quiet life one golden summer day, and had taken possession of her whole existence.

A chance introduction to Mrs. Garland and her daughter had brought about the intimacy, and very soon Carroll had found that boating with Irene was a far more entrancing occupation that fishing by himself. Mrs. Garland, an Irishwoman by birth, was, as are all her countrymen and women, the very soul of hospitality; the young man found himself in a few days quite at home in the pretty cottage on the backwater.

One day Irene said to him: "My aunt is coming down, from Friday to Monday."

"I am very sorry," had answered Carroll, ungraciously.

"Oh, but you must not say that!" cried Irene, uplifting her eyebrows reprovingly. "My aunt is very kind, she is my godmother, and she is very nice and very clever; you will be sure to like Lady Garland. My poor Uncle Richard was knighted, you know, because he was very rich, and because he gave a large sum of money to found a night school for apprentice boys at the east end of London."

Carroll had never heard anything about it, but he nodded as if the fact was perfectly well known to him.

"Well, two years ago poor Uncle Richard died, and my aunt was left a widow; she has only one daughter, my cousin Florence, who was married a little while ago to a Mr. Purvis. I believe he is very rich, and I suppose he is very fond of her, and she of him, or else she would not have married him, would she? It seems funny, because Mr. Purvis is 63, and Florence is 24, but then, of course, there are many old men who are very kind and quite nice, so I don't know why I should say it is funny that she should be fond of him."

And Carroll nodded again sympathetically, although he turned his head away to hide an irresistible smile, over the late Miss Florence Garland's disinterested affections.

"Florence was married six weeks ago. Mamma and I did not go to her wedding," continued Irene, with guileless candor. "Aunt Anna said that she couldn't have me to stay in London till after her own daughter married. I suppose there was not room for me in her house, but next spring I am to go to her for a regular season in London. I think it so kind of her to ask me, don't you?"

"Oh, very! and I suppose there will be another rich old man found for you," answered the young man with asperity.

"What do you mean? Oh!" flushing very rosy red. "I think that is a very horrid thing to say to me, Mr. Carroll."

And Rupert Carroll had to grovel in abjectest penitence and humiliation, before she would consent to forgive him. All the same, he felt certain that the arrival of the aunt boded him no good.

As to going out by moonlight with him up to the lasher, Irene had done her best to say "No" very firmly indeed, but then Rupert Carroll would not take "No," he detested that little word. It hurt not only his heart but his vanity as well, that she should say him nay.

"Just say 'Yes' instead of 'No!'" he murmured caressingly. "Then I shall believe you care to make me happy just one tiny little bit," and he bent his handsome head and looked into her face.

"I am afraid it is not right," she faltered. "Mamma would not like it, I know, but if you really wish it so very much, well, just for half-an-hour, perhaps——"

"You know that I wish it! And you will come, then? Ah! now you are my dearest little friend once more. I will be at the steps waiting for you at 9 o'clock."

"Come and have your tea, young people," called out her mother's voice across the lawn. "Mr. Carroll, let me introduce you to my sister-in-law, Lady Garland."

Mr. Carroll bowed, and Lady Garland bowed her head in return, and then she put up her long tortoise-shell-handled eye-glasses, and surveyed the young man critically.

"Perhaps you and my sister-in-law have met before in London?" suggested Mrs. Garland, as she gave him his tea.

"No, indeed. I have not had that honor. Not to my knowledge at least," he replied.

"Are you quite sure that we have not met before, Mr. Carroll?" inquired the knight's widow, eyeing the young man attentively. "If not, I think I must have met your twin brother."

"No, I am certain that I never met, you, Lady Garland, and I am happy to say that I have no brothers," replied Carroll, politely, yet with a certain conclusive finality, as though the subject of his relations, real or imaginary, were not one that he cared to pursue. Then he turned to his hostess, almost as though he wished to divert the conversation into other channels.

"Mrs. Garland," he said to her gaily, "you have no idea how lazy I have been to-day, and how hard your daughter has worked. Miss Garland positively insisted on my lying down on the cushions doing nothing."

Lady Garland was watching him furtively. "If he has no brother, then I am certain I have met him before!" she was saying to herself. "But where on earth have I seen your face, young man? I can't remember in the very least."

(To be continued.)

Helped the Cabman.

A very old man once called to see Lord Strathcona at his offices and explained as the reason of his visit that he was the cabman who drove him to his ship when he set sail for Canada long years before.

Lord Strathcona was interested in this reminiscence of his youth and listened to the ancient jehu when he went on in a tearful voice to complain that death had just deprived him of one of two grandsons and that he himself had fallen on evil times.

Lord Strathcona soothed the old fellow's sorrows with a little money.

Again, after a time, the old man called on Lord Strathcona and this time told him that both his grandsons were down with typhoid fever and, as Lord Strathcona had helped him before, perhaps he would again. After some gossiping chat about Scotland Lord Strathcona again comforted the old man with a little money.

When he had gone an official who had overheard the conversation said:

"I hope you did not give that man any money," Lord Strathcona. When he saw you before one of his two grandsons was dead. Now he says both are ill with typhoid fever."

"Thank you very much, Mr. Jones," said the high commissioner, with a twinkle in his eye, "but do you know when I left Scotland for Canada I had no cab to take me to the ship, but just wheeled down my things myself to the dock in a barrow."—London Tit-Bits.

A Mind Reader.

Pat had got hurt—not much more than a scratch, it is true, but his employer adopted the wise course of sending him at once to the hospital. After the house surgeon had examined him carefully, he said to the nurse:

"As subcutaneous abrasion is not observable, I do not think there is any reason to apprehend tegumental cicatrization of the wound."

Then, turning to the patient, he asked quizzically:

"What do you think, Pat?"

"Sur, sir," said Pat, "you're a wonderful thought reader. You took the very words out of my mouth. That's just what I was going to say."—Current Literature.

"You must try to love your papa," said the visitor, "as much as he loves you."

"Oh, I love him more," replied Tommy.

"Indeed? Doesn't your papa love you very much?"

"Not much. He says he loves me only when I'm good."—Catholic Standard and Times.

HAD WEEPING ECZEMA.

Face and Neck Were Raw—Terrible Itching, Inflammation and Soreness—All Treatments Failed—Cuticura a Great Success.

"Eczema began over the top of my ear. It cracked and then began to spread. I had three different doctors and tried several things, but they did me no good. At last one side of my face and my neck were raw. The water ran out of it so that I had to wear medicated cotton, and it was so inflamed and sore that I had to put a piece of cloth over my pillow to keep the water from it, and it would stain the cloth a sort of yellow. The eczema itched so that it seemed as though I could tear my face all to pieces. Then I began to use the Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and it was not more than three months before it was all healed up. Miss Ann Pearsons, Northfield, Vt., Dec. 19, 1907."

Don't Be An Imitator.

The imitator, says Orison Swett Marden in Success Magazine, ruins his capacity for originality; for initiative; he loses his creative power; his inventiveness and resourcefulness are never developed. In fact, his executive ability—the ability to originate, to do things—is seriously crippled, if not utterly destroyed by his efforts to imitate some one else.

No human being ever yet made a success trying to be somebody else, no matter how great or successful that person might be. Success cannot be successfully copied; it is original; it is self-expression. A man is a failure just in proportion as he gets away from himself.

When Henry Ward Beecher and Phillips Brooks were at the height of their fame, hundreds of young clergymen tried to copy their style, their mannerisms, their mode of expression, gestures, habits, but they fell as far short of the power of either of these giants as the common chromo falls short of the masterpiece. Not one of these imitators ever amounted to anything until he stopped copying, imitating, and began to build on his own foundations.

A great many clergymen to-day merely echo other preachers' sermons which they have read and absorbed. The majority of the books published are imitations of previous books, echoes of the authors whose style and plots the writers have copied. But these copied sermons and books lack vitality, force, naturalness. They do not stir the blood or touch the heart of the hearer or reader. They are cold, lifeless.

IT WORKS.

The Laborer Eats Food That Would Wreck an Office Man.

Men who are actively engaged at hard work can sometimes eat food that would wreck a man who is more closely confined.

This is illustrated in the following story:

"I was for 12 years clerk in a store working actively and drank coffee all the time without much trouble until after I entered the telegraph service.

"There I got very little exercise and drinking strong coffee, my nerves grew unsteady and my stomach got weak and I was soon a very sick man. I quit meat and tobacco and in fact I stopped eating everything which I thought might affect me except coffee, but still my condition grew worse and I was all but a wreck.

"I finally quit coffee and commenced to use Postum a few years ago and I am speaking the truth when I say, my condition commenced to improve immediately and to-day I am well and can eat anything I want without any bad effects, all due from shifting from coffee to Postum.

"I told my wife to-day I believed I could digest a brick if I had a cup of Postum to go with it.

"We make it according to directions, boiling it full 20 minutes and use good rich cream and it is certainly delicious."

Mrs. Josephine Jeffery, 24th and Washington Sts., Marion, Ind., says: "To look back upon what I have gone through, it seems a miracle that I live, and I feel that I owe it to Doan's Kidney Pills. My case developed gradually. First, backache, floating spots before my eyes, weakness and exhaustion; then a terrible steady pain over the kidneys and an extreme nervousness. Doctors finally said there was no hope for me, but I began using Doan's Kidney Pills and gradually recovered my health."

Harry Lauder's Bluff.

A pretty piece of "bluff" is attributed to Harry Lauder, the variety entertainer. During his first play in New York he was accused of stinginess. He heard that one journalist had severely commented on the manner in which he drew the purse strings. Not long afterward this man asked him for an interview. Lauder gave him an address and told him to come at 10 o'clock the following night. In the meantime the comedian rented a wretched room in the slum quarter of the city. When the caller came he was ushered into this garret. There sat Lauder, blue with cold, by the light of a single candle. "Arre ye goin' to put down what I say?" Lauder asked. The reporter assured him with pride that he never made notes during an interview. "My memory is excellent," he boasted. "Weel, then," said Lauder, "we'll aye save the light!" And he blew out the candle.

A Royal Actress.

England boasts many titled ladies who once knew the glories of the stage, but Germany claims the only actress who ever became the wife of a ruling prince. She is the Baroness von Heldburg, morganatic wife of the reigning Duke George II. of Saxe-Meiningen, and the people of the Duchy have recently been showering her with affectionate congratulations on her seventieth birthday.

Baroness von Heldburg was a member of the celebrated Saxe-Meiningen Court Theater Company when Duke George II., after losing his second wife, Princess Feodora of Hohenlohe-Langenburg, fell in love with her and married her. She was a famous beauty, and was celebrated at the time for her Juliet. Her maiden name was Ellen Frans. She received the title of Baroness von Heldburg on her marriage day.

Domestic.

President Edward O'Neil, of the Master Butchers' Association of New York, was discussing the advance in meat prices due to the wheat corner.

"And these wheat cornerers," said Mr. O'Neil, "call themselves patriots, eh? They're in the Washington and Lincoln class. They only cornered the wheat to prevent Europe from taking it away from us and leaving us to starve. Patriots!"

He laughed harshly.

"It reminds me," he said, "of John Stockton, who was renowned for his domesticity. Two women were talking about Stockton. The first said:

"'He has very domestic tastes, hasn't he?'

"'Oh, very,' the other woman replied. 'He flirts with every cook they have.'"

FASHION HINTS

This costume could be carried out nicely in cloth and equally as well in a silk, if something for more dressy occasions is wanted. In either case, chiffon cloth would be a good choice for the waist, matching exactly the skirt material.

A Thing of the Past.

Leonora O'Reilly, the vice president of the Women's Trade Union League, was praising this organization's work in New York.

"And it has a great future before it," she said. "I have no doubt that a century hence the members of the league will regard the woman of today as we now regard the farmer's wife of the early '40's. A Maine deacon of the early '40's was talking to the minister. He sniffled and whined:

"'Oh, yes, Job suffered some. I ain't denying htat, parson. But Job never knowed what it was to have his team run off and kill his wife right in the harvest season, with hired girls wantin' $2 and $2.50 a week.'"

This $1000.00 Cup for an ear of Corn

Made by Tiffany. Nearly 3 ft. high—in solid gold and silver. Actual contract price $1,000. To be awarded at the

National Corn Exposition, Omaha December 6 to 18, 1909

to the man, woman or child producing the best ear of corn grown this year in the United States.

Open to everybody belonging to the Association—Nothing to buy or sell.

The purpose of the donor of this trophy.—W. K. Kellogg—is to improve the quality of the millions of bushels of corn used in making Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes.

Many people think the perfection of corn flavor has been reached in Toasted Corn Flakes. Perhaps it has. If you don't know how good Kellogg's — the genuine Toasted Corn Flakes—is, try it. Then you'll see how hard a task we are giving ourselves to improve it, and the only way we can improve it is by the betterment of the corn itself.

Professor Holden, of the Iowa State College, the greatest authority on corn in the world, will award the prize at the National Corn Exposition, to be held at Omaha, Neb., Dec. 6th to 18th, 1909. Two simple rules will govern the plan, and they are—that you send your best ear of corn to the National Corn Exposition, Omaha, Neb., before November 27, 1909, and that you are a member of the National Corn Association—full particulars regarding which can be had by writing to National Corn Exposition, Omaha, Neb. Tie a tag securely to your specimen and word it, "For the Kellogg Trophy Contest," and write your name and address plainly. If yours is judged the best, you will get the trophy for 1910. If you succeed again next year or the year following, the trophy will become your property for all time.

The contest will be open to every state in the Union. Professor Holden will judge the corn particularly on the basis of quality. The growing of more corn per acre is one object of the award, but the main purpose of the founder of the trophy is for improving the quality of corn used in making KELLOGG'S TOASTED CORN FLAKES. If you haven't tried this delicious cereal, begin your education in "good things to eat" today. All grocers have it.

INVASION OF CANADA IS ON

Observations On Modern Pioneering In the Newest West.

SUN WORKS 18 HOURS A DAY

Where Six Years Ago the Antelope Were Cropping the Prairie Grass, Crops Are Now Being Reaped—Not With Ox-Cart and Prairie Schooner Is the American Invasion of Canada Being Made, but With Pullman Car and Automobile—George B. Lockwood's Interesting Observations on a Most Interesting New Development.

[Special Correspondence.]

Scott, Saskatchewan, Aug. 18.—This is the Big Outdoors. The eye commands easily from every point the area of an Indiana county. The land stretches away not like the monotonous flat lands of the cis-Rocky region, but in great undulating billows of soil, green at this season with a rank growth of grass which the antelopes were cropping only eight years ago, and which never felt the touch of the plow that furrows a road for civilization until 1906. Under the summer sunrise and sunset, with the shadows lying upon the prairie, the aspect is presented of a vast sea of land.

The eastern provinces of Canada are nearly as old as New England, Quebec has celebrated her tercentenary and Montreal was a city of importance when Indiana was still a wilderness. The territory now comprised within the province of Saskatchewan—which is quite as large as the German empire, and agriculturally as great in its possibilities as even the fertile land of the Kaiser, remained unoccupied by white men, and practically unexplored, at the very threshold of these eastern provinces of Canada during the period characterized in the United States by the settlement and development of many hundreds of thousands of square miles of land which are now supporting fifty millions of people and feeding as many more.

The realization of what has been done in the United States in that conquest of practically all of the arable areas in our vast domain, and the evidence of what has not been done in the Dominion, is stimulating to the pride of an American. When the fertility of this vast province is realized, it seems inconvincible that Canadians would not sooner have penetrated it with those highways of commerce which place the most remote districts at the threshold of the world's markets. It seems even more incredible that even now the agricultural conquest of this region is left so largely to Americans, while the British Isles teem with population, thousands upon thousands of the people of the mother country suffering for the very food so easily wrung from the soil in the Canadian Northwest, and five or six millions of Canadians content themselves with the conditions existing in the rather stagnant eastern provinces.

Home Seeking In Autos.

But if the discovery of the Canadian Northwest from an agricultural standpoint has been long delayed, its occupation is going on now with a rapidity which never before characterized a pioneer movement. The rush of settlement is not waiting the ox-cart and the prairie schooner—it is coming in the Pullman car and the automobile—both of these vehicles are used in conveying the modern home seeker into and through the vast stretches of this newest of the new countries. Two great trunk lines are pushing extensions of their mileage just behind the current of settlement everywhere. One of these lines constructs four miles and a half of track a day by the use of an apparatus which it takes forty-five men to operate, and which places in position the ties as well as the rails. Settlers occupy territory remote from the railroads, assured that by the time their crops are reaped they will be in sight of an elevator. One of these lines is building a port on the Pacific which will be nearer the Orient than any other city of the Pacific slope; another has occupied a harbor on Hudson bay which it is claimed will be but four days from Liverpool, nearer than any other Atlantic port. And both of these ports are comparatively near the borders of this great agricultural province.

We have given a good deal of attention in the United States in recent years to the matter of what the railroads have been doing to the people, but one must come to a virgin land like this and see the miracle wrought by the steel rail to realise what the railroads in an earlier day did for the country, and how absolutely indispensable to civilization the railroads really are. One is struck here by the solidity and permanency of what the railroads are doing in the Canadian Northwest. We rode for hundreds of miles over a railroad little more than a year old. The roadbed was as solid as granite. Wherever there was a collection of houses the railway station was the finest structure in the town. The railroads of Canada are the most active promoters of immigration. They are not only projecting themselves into territory that has been regarded as a wilderness, but they are peopling the country as they go, creating demand as well as the supply in transportation. Impressive to the visitor are the substantial evidences of the faith of the men behind these great systems in the future of this part of the continent.

American Farmer the Best Pioneer.

The American invasion of Canada is welcomed with open arms by the Dominion authorities. They frankly admit that the American farmer makes the best pioneer. An official of one of the big Canadian railway systems says that the German-American farmer—"American" even here describes a citizen of the States—makes the best citizen of the agricultural provinces—the best because the most successful in adapting himself to the conditions of life prevailing in a new country, and in profitably cultivating the soil. For a long time the British government sought to dispose of the surplus population of England in the Canadian West. The scheme was a lamentable failure. As a prairie farmer the cockney was impossible. The American farmer has carried to the task of developing this new country the courage and hardihood inherited from a pioneer ancestry, and wherever he goes he is making good.

And so the whole atmosphere of the Canadian Northwest is distinctively American. The spirit of the country, the character of the population, is much the same as one encounters in the trans-Mississippi regions of the States. And what is going on here is quite evidently the same process that has made Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Minnesota and other western states a great agricultural empire, doubling over and over again the value of lands, beautifying the farms with comfortable homes, heaping up the deposits of the farmers in the savings banks until the center of financial strength seems likely to be moved to the Mississippi valley, and creating great, prosperous commonwealths, populated with vigorous and intelligent people where but a few decades ago there were only Indian trails and buffalo wallows.

Have Faith in the Land.

Many of the settlers of the Canadian Northwest are farmers from these newer western states, who have seen this transformation take place, and who therefore have faith that just such a change is in prospect for such a province as Saskatchewan. Many of them have sold good farms at home, and are here undergoing the inconveniences attendant upon life in a new community that they may realize upon the opportunities that go along with being "in on the ground floor" of a rich and growing country. Last year something like 70,000 Americans went over the border and settled in the Canadian Northwest. It is estimated that they took with them property to the value of several million dollars. We met one farmer, nearly forty miles from a railroad, who took with him $10,000 or more when he brought his family from Nebraska to settle in Saskatchewan. He had been down to Winnipeg, and in conversation with the president of one of the two big systems which traverse the northwestern portion of this province, had been assured that a railroad would pass within a few rods of the section of land he occupies. He was breaking 400 acres of his 640, and expects to deliver his oats at a station little more than a mile away.

Rich Alluvial Deposits.

The topography of the country in this part of the province, which is known as the Tramping Lake district, seems to indicate that in a comparatively recent period most of this land was occupied by water. Everywhere are marks of lakes either completely dried up or disappearing, and from the alluvial deposits of these bodies of water the soil derives, doubtless, its unusual fertility. Certainly it is fair to look upon, with its gentle undulations sweeping in green waves to the far horizon in every direction. An occasional knoll commands an amazing sweep of country.

Most of the settlers here, and they include quite a few homesteaders, live in the primitive fashion familiar in the earlier days of our prairie states—the sod house, plastered and unplastered on the exterior, being a common sight. Some settlers have built comfortable homes. We spent a night with one farmer who set up housekeeping in a tent on a section of land on April 1. By July he was occupying a group of farm buildings that would have done credit to the community in the states from which he came. When he moved on his land last spring, he said, he could count three houses from his yard. Now he can point out more than forty. This illustrates the rapidity of the development of the country. The first stick of timber was brought into this town of Scott about thirteen months ago. Today it has two big hotels, many stores, a couple of lumber yards, a railway station costing several thousand dollars, a big grain elevator, 300 or 400 people, and large hopes of becoming a metropolis. A house on which construction was started here on a recent Wednesday was completed on Friday of the same week. And it is a good-looking two-story residence. The man who keeps in touch with progress here, as in the newer sections of the United States, must do so by telegraph. GEORGE B. LOCKWOOD.

An Interesting Letter.

on a high tressel and around the side of the mountain finally going under the tressel we had crossed the canyon on. We followed the Thompson river until it joined the Frazier and also crossed the Columbia. The color of the mountain streams vary from a green to gray. There are many beautiful falls and rapids. The sides of the mountains are very beautifully colored and look best in the sunlight.

We crossed three ranges, Rocky, Selkirk and Cascade but it looked like one continuous mountain range. The scenery is almost indescribable and must be seen to be appreciated.

The nights in Canada were so cool they had to heat the car and every one had overcoats or wraps. The nights are very short it being dark only four or five hours at this season. We followed the Frazier for two days and nights or until we arrived at Mission Jc., where part of the passengers changed cars for Vancouver B. C. to take the steamer for Seattle. We crossed the river here and went on to Sumas which is on the boundary of the U. S. and Canada. Here about a half hour was taken up again by the inspection of baggage.

Arrived in Seattle, July 13 and stayed several days at the fair. We all liked Seattle very much and it certainly is worth while to come to the fair. The exhibits are fine and the grounds beautiful. Perhaps the most interesting to me was the Forestry building built of huge rough logs. The Government Alaska and California buildings are also fine. From the fair we came to Vancouver, Wash., and are visiting a few days. Three mountains are plainly seen from here and the climate fine. Have been across the river to Portland, Oregon, several times. Spent one day at Council Crest. That is on a hill in Portland about 1200 feet high and from it you can see the city and surrounding country.

Took a hundred mile boat trip up the Columbia river. Went in one of the largest boats on the river. Passed through locks and saw lots of nice things. Saw them loading the ocean vessels with lumber and grain getting ready to sail. We are planning a trip to the Ocean next.

I just can't begin to tell you all the things I see and hear you will just have to wait until you see me again and I will try and tell you more. Wishing you the very best of luck I am

Lovingly your daughter
Lela.

Autumn News
From This Store.

More new cloaks and suits came in this week that makes our showing one of the best this store has ever presented to the buying public. New waists and skirts also have made their appearance in our ready-to-wear section this week that makes our ready-made apparel department one of attractive interest just now. Scarcity of dressmakers makes this department one of growing importance and we are recognizing that fact in carrying a line of this class of merchandise that is meeting with popular approval. We have an experienced lady tailor and dress maker right here in the store that will make all necessary alterations in Cloaks, Suits or Skirts free of charge.

The Carpet and Rug Section has assumed an Autumn tinge with bright new floor coverings and we will esteem it a pleasure to show you the new offerings.

If you want to see the advance showing of new fall dress goods—Trimmings—Corsets—Underwear—Hosiery—Handkerchiefs—Outings—Prints—Knit Jackets and Scarfs—Neckwear—Ribbons—Shoes—in fact a complete outlay in every section, our Store is now ready for your reception.

We shall esteem it a special favor to have THE NEWS readers visit this Store this fall. Bring your friends with you.

Fourteen of the ladies of the Culture Club were very pleasantly entertained at the summer home of Mrs. H. W. Bowman at Cold Springs, August 31. When the ladies arrived they found a lovely dinner waiting to which all did ample justice. The entire afternoon was spent in music, bathing and boating. The day will long be remembered as one of the pleasant social features of our lives. The ladies all express their appreciation of Mrs. Bowman's kindness and vote her a royal entertainer.

Reasoner Reunion

The Reasoner family reunion was held in the Widney opera house on Saturday, September 4. The attendance was good, there being about 65 present. After the feast at the noon hour a short program was rendered and the election of officers for the coming year was held. The place for the next reunion was named to be St. Joe, on the second Thursday in August 1910. A very plesant time was had.

Obituary

Barbara Arvilla Baker, daughter of John and Arvilla Baker was born in Walker, Minn., April 23, 1905, and departed this life Sept. 3rd., 1909, aged 4 yrs 4 mos. and 10 days. She with her parents removed to DeKalb Co., April 1909. Since her residence in St. Joe she has been a regular attendent to the M. P. S. S. and took a great interest in, often when unable to attend weep as if her little heart would break. She was a sweet, bright and attractive child, lovable and loved by all whom she met. You who especially mourn the loss of Barbara, remember, one by one you will join her never to part again. Thank God for this glorious promise. Barbara "Thou art away and away from thy father's side; thou art away and away from thy mother's knee, thou art away from our blessing, our care, our caressing, but away from our hearts, thou ne'er shall be".

With many others of her age and older in St. Joe, she was stricken with the dreaded disease typhoid fever, she had begun to grow better, and hearts of loved ones began to rejoice, but suddenly on Wednesday night she took a turn for the worse, a hasty consultion of physicians was called, the labor of tired nurses was redoubled, but of no avail. Cerebro Spinal Menengetis had attacked her frail, fever racked frame, and Friday morning at 10 o'clock she peacefully and painlessly passed away. All that the skill of men and women, and the lavished love of parents and friends was done possible, but Barbara must go.

Heaven is richer to-day because of the presence of another of the especial jewels of our Savior's heart. Surely "of such is the kingdom of Heaven". She leaves her father and mother with heaviest of all sorrows, a childless home, with a host of relatives and friends to mourn her departure. The funeral was held at the Methodist church, Sunday at 10 a. m. Rev. McCain in charge and Rev. Brown assisting. Elza Kinsey, funeral director. A large crowd was in attendence. The burial was in Riverside cemetery.

CARD OF THANKS.

We desire through the columns of THE NEWS, to thank those so kindly assisted us during the sickness and death of our little daughter and baby. Also those for the beautiful floral offerings. John Baker and wife.

Horn Reunion

The Horn family held a very pleasant reunion Thursday at the home of Milton H. Draggoo on Stophlet street at Ft. Wayne. Between fifty and seventy-five members of the family were present. In addition to the big dinner, which is always a feature of family reunions, an informal speech-making and musical program were given during the day. The members of the family present were principally from Spencerville, St. Joe and Springfield.

Though the time was short it was made very pleasant by the cordial manner in which Mr. and Mrs. Milton Draygoo welcomed and entertained their guests, and was appreciated by them. There were some new names added to our list: Mr. and Mrs. John A. Snyder, Urbana, Ohio; Mr. and Mrs. C. R. Horn, New Haven, Rt. 1; Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Horn, Ft. Wayne, Rt. 9; Mr. and Mrs. Mathew, Auburn, Ind., and lost by death two from our list, Mrs. Lizzie Horn and Mr. McCrory whom we missed very much indeed. But it was the Lord's will and we will be content. We returned to our homes feeling we had enjoyed another reunion of the Horn family.

Monument to Father Marquette.

Pere Marquette, the Jesuit missionary whose name is inseparably interwoven with the early history of Michigan and the Great Lakes, was honored at Mackinac, Mich., in the unveiling of a seven thousand dollar monument to his memory. The bronze statue, ten feet high, resting on a subbase ten feet in height, represents the missionary standing erect and clothed in his priestly robe. Justice William R. Day, of the United States Supreme Court, and Rev. Father Cunningham, of Marquette College, of Milwaukee, delivered addresses. The unveiling cord was drawn by Miss Frances Jopling, a granddaughter of the late Peter White, of Marquette, Mich., to whose interest and generosity the completion of the monument was largely due.

Fire Destroys Fine Home.

Hoovenden, the beautiful country home of Col. J. C. Hooven, president of the Hooven-Owens-Rentschler Company, near Hamilton, Ohio, was destroyed by fire. A lace curtain in Col. Hooven's room on the second floor caught fire from a gas jet and quickly communicated the flames. Loss $50,000, partly covered by insurance. A mahogany jewel case containing $7,000 worth of jewels belonging to Mrs. Hooven, was stolen during the fire.

Heat Kills Four Veterans.

Excessive heat during the past week has caused the death of four veterans in the Soldiers' Home at Sawtelle, Cal. William C. Nugent, vice commander of the Union Veterans' League and a veteran of the Seventy-first New York Infantry, was the latest victim. Others who have succumbed are Joseph Wilson, Eighty-first Illinois Infantry, Arthur A. Parker, Sixth Ohio Infantry, and William J. Gardner, a Mexican war veteran.

Houses Sink Into Old Mine.

Fully $200,000 damage was done in West Scranton, Pa., by a mine cave. Abandoned workings called the "Cork and Bottle" colliery of the Fairlawn Coal Company, which ceased operations twenty years ago, gave way under an area equal to two city blocks, which sank from six to eight feet, throwing houses from their foundations, cracking walls and otherwise damaging buildings.

Trainmen Killed in Collision.

Three trainmen were killed and two others hurt in a head-on collision between a double-header freight train and a construction train in Red Rock cut near Riddlesburg, Pa., on the Huntington and Broad Top railroad. The accident was due, the railway officials say, to the failure of the operator of Saxon to deliver orders to the freight crew which would have kept their train on a siding.

Boys and Guns Cause Two Fatalities.

Willie King, 8 years old, shot and killed his brother Francis, 10 years old, in their home in St. Louis, Mo. The boys, sons of a police sergeant, were playing "cowboy."

While playing with a shot gun at Nicholasville, Ky., James Littral, 8 years old, accidentally discharged the weapon and blew off the head of his 6-year-old sister.

Gasoline for Interurban.

Chicago capitalists have obtained an option on the turn pike of the New Albany and Vincennes Plank Road Company between New Albany and the Orange County line in Indiana and it is reported that an interurban line will be constructed between that city and Paoli with gasoline motor cars instead of electric cars.

Fatally Hurt in Fire.

Five persons were injured, one fatally, and damage estimated at $300,000, resulted by a fire which destroyed the transfer and sotrage house of J. A. Blanck in Pittsburg, Pa., and spread rapidly to a number of adjoining buildings. All the injured were firemen. The origin of the fire is not known.

RAILWAYS ARE READY FOR CROP MOVING

Great Surplus Supply of Box Cars Being Sent West to Carry Grain.

BIG DEMAND WILL BE MET

Gradual Increase in Transportation Business Shown by Report of Committee.

The crop moving season in the Middle West and in the great grain belts will not find the railroads napping. According to the fortnightly report of the committee on relations between railroads of the American Railway Association a great supply of surplus box cars already is in the section of the country which will first feel the demand for cars and in which the most serious car shortages occur. The latest report of the committee records that throughout the country there are 159,424 surplus cars, a decrease of 93,579 from the corresponding period in 1908. The largest decrease was in box cars, in which class the surplus was reduced 21,141. The sulplus number of this class of cars at the present tkne is about 80,000, and half of these are in Iowa, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and the Dakotas, known as group 6, awaiting the call for crop moving purposes.

Before the crops really begin to move a still greater number will be sent West to meet the estimated demand. The report of the committee also shows a gredual increase in railroad business as measured by the demand for cars from April, 1908, when the financial panic struck full force. On April 29, 1908, the number of surplus cars reached the highest point in the history of American railroads. At that time nearly 500,000 cars were standing idle in yards and on sidetracks. By the following August, when the panic had spent its force, this number was reduced to 253,003. During the last year the climb has been gradual, and it is estimated that in the latter months of the year the crop moving will call into use nearly every idle car in the country.

WILL BE BILLIONAIRE AT 80.

Rockefeller's Wealth Now $700,000,000 and Is Steadily Increasing.

If John D. Rockefeller lives till his 80th birthday, and he has said he will reach 100, he will become the first billionaire in history. In the last two years Standard Oil, the wonderful automatic money-making machine of his creation, has increased his fortune $80,000,000. This is the increment of the rise in value of the stock alone. The latest approximated accurate estimates available place his fortune in 1905 at at least $550,000,000. In 1900 it was $400,000,000. This is an increase of $150,000,000. At this ratio the Rockefeller fortune is to-day about $700,000,000. In 1914, still at the same ratio of increase, it will be about $850,000,000, and in 1919, when the oil king reaches his 80th year, it will have reached the stupendous, brain-giddying total of $1,000,000,000—an inconceivable sum.

J. D. ROCKEFELLER.

In September, 1907, it was estimated by Rockefeller's closest associates that his income was at least $30.25 a minute. Some figures placed it as high as $40 during the same space of time. The sums earned for him by Standard Oil alone have been tremendous.

MEN SPOIL THE WOMEN.

Social Leader Declares That American Masculines Are Too Good.

Mrs. James P. Kernochan, social leader at Newport, has declared that "women are far more selfish than formerly; they have lost the charm of conversation. Motors and luxuries are largely responsible for it. There are too many things done for the women these days, and they are growing too self-centered. In fact, the men are spoiling the American women by being too good to them. As an American woman I cannot see why women want the ballot. They are treated as no women in the world are treated by the men, and why in the name of common sense can't they trust the ballot to the splendid manhood of our country? In some countries it may be all right. Take England, where the men have and spend all the money and the women are forced to take what they can get; but in this country the women get all, and the men do the work while the women spend what they make."

Fatally Shot by Car Thieves.

William Zimmer, a Lehigh Railroad detective from Buffalo, was shot and probably mortally hurt in a running fight with car thieves at Batavia, N. Y. "Mike" Miller, of Batavia, one of the gang, was fatally wounded.

FATAL CRASH IN AUTO RACE.

One Killed, One Perhaps Fatally Hurt at Brighton Beach.

Leonard Cole, a mechanic of the Stearns car in the twenty-four hour automobile race at the Brighton Beach track, was killed and Laurent Grosso, the driver of the car, was perhaps fatally injured in an accident. The crash happened just beyond the clubhouse as the cars were bunching to take the turn. Cole was crushed under the machine and instantly killed. Grosso was thrown to one side and his spine fractured.

The fatal accident came a moment after a minor sensation. The score for the first hour had been given out when the Fiat and the Allen-Kingston came into collision. The latter machine caught fire, and the 10,000 persons in the stands had a thrill, as it appeared to them that somebody must be in the flames. Announcement was made as quickly as possible that nobody was hurt, and the spectators had settled down again when the fatal collision occurred. The Stearns car was a complete wreck. Cole was found under the wreckage and was pulled out dead.

The Indianapolis motor speedway commission is held responsible for the deaths of William Bourque and Harry Holcomb, driver and mechanician of a Knox car in the automobile races in that city recently, in the finding of Coroner Blackwell. Bourque and Holcomb were among several persons killed on the course during three days' racing. The coroner in his report says the speedway was not properly built for racing.

CHILDREN PERISH IN FIRE.

Remains of Seven Found in New York Institution.

That seven little inmates of St. Malachy's Home for Children at Rockaway Park, L. I., were suffocated in a fire which destroyed a part of the home Monday night was discovered the next day by firemen digging in the ruins of the burned building. There were 750 children in the institution, which is conducted by the Sisters of St. Joseph of Brooklyn. Most of them marched out of the buildings in good order when the fire alarm was sounded, and it was supposed that all had escaped, until the bodies were found in the smouldering embers. Nearly all those burned to death were under 5 years old. The part of the dormitory in which they slept was directly over the laundry, where the fire originated. The damage to the buildings amounted to $25,000.

JOBS FOR MEN WHO KNOW GRAIN

Government Seeks Assistants for the Bureau of Plant Industry.

Students with an agricultural training, who are familiar with laboratory and field work, and with classes and varieties of cereals, are sought by the government at salaries ranging from $1,200 to $2,000 a year. The civil service commission has announced an examination in Washington, Sept. 22 to select eligibles for positions as assistants in grain standardization in the bureau of plant industry of the department of agriculture. One of the requirements is the writing of a thesis of not less than 2,000 words on the kinds of cereals grown in the United States and the method of harvesting and marketing with special reference to classing and grading grain commercially.

An offer for a match between James J. Jeffries and Jack Johnson has been made by the directors of the Tulcare County (Cal.) Agricultural Association, who claim the backing of fifty business men willing to subscribe $50,000.

John Welch, of Lexington, Ky., is pushing a movement to have the affairs of the Latonia Agricultural and Fair Association investigated. Welch is one of the stockholders and if his statements are found to be true the attorney general of Kentucky will probably take steps that will result in Latonia forfeiting her charter.

ROBS TREASURE TRAIN; NEW PENNIES AS BOOTY

Bandit Holds Up Express on Pennsylvania Road in Western Style.

FLEES AND DROPS THE COIN

Deed Committed Near Lewistown, Pa., at "The Narrows," a Mountain Fastness.

One robber stopped a west-bound express train on the Pennsylvania railroad at "the narrows," eight miles east of Lewistown, Pa., at 2 a. m. Tuesday, robbed the express car of $25,000, but was compelled to drop most of his booty and escape to the mountains. He carried off, so far as has been ascertained, from $100 to $1,000 in Lincoln pennies, which he probably mistook for gold. Conductor Poffenberger of Harrisburg was shot through the hand in a fight with the robber. The deed was carried out in the regular wild-west style.

The train held up was No. 39. It left Philadelphia at 9:02 Monday night and Harrisburg at midnight. The spot where the robbery occurred was ideal for such a deed. The tracks occupy a narrow strip between the mountain and the Juniata River. Heavy timber covers the mountains and paths lead to almost impenetrable fastnesses in the woods. The train consisted of two engines, three express cars and two sleepers. A signal cap placed on the track brought it to a stop. Engineers John Long and Balzer Beahm, both of Altoona, on alighting from their cabs were confronted by a masked man with two revolvers, who ordered "Hands up!" They obeyed promptly.

The conductor came up at this juncture and, taking in the situation, started to run for the rear of the train. The robber fired five shots at him, one taking effect in the right hand. Then he ordered the express car opened, threatening to blow it up with dynamite if not obeyed. The car was opened and at the direction of the robber the money bags were carried to the side of the tracks. When as much money was stacked up as one man could carry the trainmen were ordered back to their positions and the train moved on. It is believed that about $1,000 was taken. Several of the bags contained pennies, which were found in the morning near the scene of the hold-up.

WORLD UNION IS GOMPERS' PLAN

International Congress Opened at Paris Hears His Proposal.

The sixth international trade union congress was opened in Paris, France, Monday, and among the subjects discussed were the reduction of hours of labor, regulations to govern work in domiciles and a proposal to put an end to international strike-breaking. Samuel Gompers, President of the American Federation of Labor, and J. Eads How represented America. Mr. Gompers submitted a proposal for the organization of an international federation of workmen, which, while not affecting the independence of the men in individual countries, would "create international fraternity and solidarity." A motion by How urged unions of all countries to fight against the movement of workmen from one country to another in times of economic depression, when strikes were threatened.

POISONS 5 BABIES; STABS SELF.

Mother's Act Discovered in Time to Save All but One Child.

In a fit of insanity Mrs. Carrie Sanders of Florence addition to St. Joseph, Mo., gave five of her six children morphine. While trying to feed the poison to the sixth she was detected by a neighbor, and she then confessed what she had done. Weldon, aged 5 years, is dead, but physicians say they will save the lives of the other children. The mother also took poison and cut her throat after making her confession, but she is expected to recover. The husband of Mrs. Sanders was at home when the children were poisoned, but did not know what his wife was doing. The child that died had been poisoned about two hours before the others. The children range in age from 2 to 10 years.

HORSE DRAGS HIM TO DEATH.

Nebraska Farmer Pulled in Front of Train by Balky Animal.

John King, a young farmer, was killed by a Union Pacific flyer near Central City, Neb., in an unusual way. He was leading a horse across the tracks with the halter wrapped around his arms. The animal balked on the track and although Reeves was safely across he was dragged back and under the wheels when the engine struck the horse.

Burn One Negro; Shoot Another.

Following the shooting and burning of Ben Clark, an escaped negro convict, by a posse at Soperton, Ga., and the killing of James Durden, a planter who was a member of the posse, in the fight with Clark, John Sweeny, another negro who with his wife had harbored Clark, was taken from a passenger train near Tarrytown and lynched by the posse.

150 HAVE PELLAGRA AT PEORIA

Army Officer Reports on Conditions at State Asylum.

More than fifty cases of pellagra, with fifty additional in a state of recovery, and fifty more under suspicion at the Peoria, Ill., State hospital, are reported to the War Department by Captain Joseph F. Siler of the army medical corps stationed at New York, who was sent to Peoria at the request of the hospital officials to investigate the outbreak. Captain Siler is of the opinion, according to the report, that the disease has long prevailed, not only at the Peoria hospital, but throughout Illinois, as well as through the great corn growing States of the West. Overdependence on corn as an article of diet, and especially the consumption of corn in a moldy or nearly moldy state, is given by the army surgeon as the probable cause of the disease.

The discovery of pellagra at the Bartonville institution several weeks ago has attracted the attention of the entire world of medicine to that point, and many other physicians are working with Capt. Siler in his attempt to get all the data on the disease in its various forms and stages.

TWO MEN ROB BANK OF $1.600.

"Shoot Up" Iowa Town and Escape—No Clew to Identity.

After "shooting up" the town Tuesday afternoon, two men robbed the German National Bank of Mineola, Ia., sixteen miles south of Council Bluffs, of $1,600.

When the men stopped shooting they separated, one going to the rear of the bank and the other stepping into the front door, pushing by Cashier Neff, who had been attracted to the front by the shooting. The second man then entered the bank and started to talk with the clerk. Niff went back into his cage, and as he did so the man who had pushed by him drew a revolver and, pointing it at his head, crowded in. Niff grappled with him, but the man jumped away, sprang into the cage and picked up a package of bills and stepped outside. While the man who had the money coolly stuffed it into a small grip, the second robber covered both cashier and clerk with his revolver. Then, bidding the bank men good day, the two robbers walked to the front door, closed it behind them, walked down the street and escaped.

HE ELOPES WITH WRONG TWIN.

Poor John Probably Doesn't Yet Know of His Error.

Cecelia Curren, of Pittsburg, is 15 years old, and, naturally, so is Mary, her twin sister. If it becomes necessary to tell them apart Mrs. John Curren, their mother looks at the teeth of one, the single point upon which they are dissimilar. Cecilia eloped the other night with John Parker, the Currans' star boarder. Mrs. Curran also missed $80. Parker undoubtedly meant to elope with Mary, with whom he was known to be in love, but he took the wrong twin in the dark, and probably does not yet know of his error.

ALABAMA TO BE VERY DRY.

Drastic Fuller Prohibition Bill Is Passed with Little Opposition.

The drastic Fuller prohibition bill passed by the Alabama Senate forbids even the possession of liquor except in private residences, making the accused person prove his own innocence before any evidence against him is introduced. It makes the use of the word saloon a crime, bars the advertisement of liquors from bill boards and signs and holds that even the possession of a Federal liquor license is an absolute proof of guilt in selling intoxicants.

The Legislature of Georgia came to the end of its session without having permitted the federal income tax amendment proposed by Congress to come to a vote.

Maryland Democrats favor a suffrage amendment to the State constitution to be voted on this fall. The suffrage amendment will disfranchise the illiterate negro.

President Taft plans to placate the insurrectionary Middle West during his forthcoming Western tour by making a series of speeches explanatory of the Payne tariff bill.

The "drys" won the local option election in Santa Rosa County, Florida. The saloon element ordered the election and sought to regain territory lost to them by election two years ago.

The President has decided to have the census appointments divided equally among Democrats and Republicans in the States of the solid South which are wholly Democratic, in all other States the Republicans to get all the places.

Since the adjournment of Congress the word has been passed around among the leading Democrats of the Empire State that the time had come for a new effort to revive the genuine simon-pure Democratic spirit in the party councils. It is proposed to hold a general conference at Saratoga on September 9.

The Connecticut Senate agreed to defer until the next session of the Legislature the consideration of the federal income tax amendment to the constitution. Gov. Weeks has vetoed the liberal Sunday law, passed by the Connecticut Legislature. It would have repealed the old blue laws.

DR. F. A. COOK WINNER IN THE ARCTIC QUEST

Explorer Believed to Be Lost Returning from Trip That Was Crowned with Triumph.

NORTH POLE IS DISCOVERED

Telegram to Colonial Office in Copenhagen Says American Reached the Goal April 21, 1903.

START MADE IN SUMMER OF 1907.

Navigator Last Heard from Eighteen Months Ago in the Ice of the Artic Region.

Dr. Frederick Albert Cook, the American explorer, reached the north pole April 21, 1908, according to a telegram received at the colonial office in Copenhagen from Lervik, Norway.

Dr. Cook started on his trip for the north pole in the summer of 1907, wintered on the coast of Elsmoreland about 500 miles from the pole and, starting from a point north of Etah on Feb. 26, 1908, was within little more than a fortnight lost to the knowledge of the world. Word received from a point forty miles north of Cape Thomas Hubbard on March 17, 1908, said that the explorer expected to return not later than September, 1908, that everything had so far gone well, but that the weather was extremely cold. Then for seventeen months nothing was heard from him and by many he was given up for lost.

Admiral Winfield S. Schley, as head of the American Society for Polar Research, took an active interest in making plans for such an expedition, and not only contributed to a fund started last winter for the purpose of fitting out a vessel to go in search of the missing explorer, but during the last spring and summer has made apepals for assistance from all quarters.

Dr. Cook was accompanied by a Norwegian when he left Etah, Greenland, in March, 1908. He took with him eight Eskimos, four sledges and twelve dog teams. He was to make his way through Ellesmere Land. Dr. Cook was well equipped for his attempt, and started on his dash to the north with the utmost confidence. In a letter written from his winter quarters on Dec. 6, 1907, he explained the plans which he had conceived for reaching the pole.

Cook had had large experience as an explorer previous to the present trip. He is a physician and New Yorker. He was educated in the University of New York and the College of Physicans and Surgeons there, but instead of entering upon practice to any extent he took up exploration. When 26 years old he made his first journey to the north as a member of one of Peary's expeditions. He organized several other trips, gaining fame each time among scientists in many countries. Dr. Cook's home is in Brooklyn.

EARTHQUAKE AT PANAMA.

Great Alarm Caused, but No Serious Danger Has Been Reported.

A strong earthquake was experienced in Panama shortly after 8 a. m. Monday. People were greatly alarmed, but no serious damage has been reported and no one was injured. The administration buildings of both the government and the canal commission in Panama and Ancon were shaken so severely that the clerks left their desks hurriedly for the street. They returned, however, when it was seen that no damage had been done and that the first shock was not followed by a second. At Aguadulce, in Cocle province, and at Pacora, in the province of Panama, more than 100 miles apart, the quake was felt.

FIVE KILLED IN AUTO CRASH.

Machine Hit by Fast Train in Missouri and All Occupants Dead.

Five persons were killed Sunday when their automobile was struck by a Rock Island passenger train near Vigus station, St. Louis County. The dead: Miss Halcyon Campbell, 2321 Whitmore place; Mrs. Carl Klinge, 1714 Missouri avenue; Frederick O. Witte, 5335 Vernon avenue; Theodore F. Witte, 2324 Whittemore place; Theodore F. Witte, Jr., aged 2 years. The two men were brothers and officials of the Witte Hardware Company, one of the oldest mercantile establishments of St. Louis.

Girls Drown as Car Hits Boat.

Alice Boisnot, 15 years old, and Marie Mueller, 16, daughters of Philadelphia cottagers at Ocean City, were drowned to-night while sailing in Great Egg Harbor Bay. Two boys were with them in a small sail boat, which drifted against the trolley bridge that crosses the bay from Sommers Point to Ocean City. A car passing over the bridge hit the mast of the boat and caused it to capsize.

A TRAGIC BLUNDER

By MRS. LOVETT CAMERON

Author of "In a Grass Country," "A Daughter's Heart," "A Sister's Sin," "Jack's Secret," Etc., Etc.

CHAPTER II.

The harvest moon stood very high in the sapphire heavens. The river valley was flooded with light, the meadows were bathed in silver; the willows along the water's edge caught the pale gleams upon their rustling branches, whilst far away, the low-wooded hills on either side stood out against the star-flecked sky almost as distinctly and clear as though it had been day instead of night.

"It is lovely!" murmured Irene below her breath.

"Are you not glad you came?" whispered Carroll back.

They sat side by side upon the low, soft cushions, in the stern of the punt. Carroll had moored her securely to an overhanging willow that flung dappled shadows from its fluttering boughs across the tumbling waters. Irene was, wrapped in a warm dark cloak. The moonlight shone full in her fair, sweet face, and danced in her eyes. She was a little bit frightened of what she had done, but she was very happy all the same.

"Do you know why I have brought you out here to-night?" continued the young man. "Last night, when I was here by myself, it was quite as beautiful as now. The moon was as clear, and the stars were as bright, the water shone and glittered as it danced over the weir, but I felt that there was something wanting to me—some one whose eyes should look with mine at the lovely night, without whom it was all dull and cold and meaningless to me. I knew well enough what I wanted, Irene, and I said to myself, 'To-morrow I will bring her here, and here, under the moonlight and stars, I will tell her that I love her—that my life is empty and imperfect without her—that I want her love, and her heart, and her sweet self for my own.'"

Her face drooped and fell. He drew her gently into his arms, she did not resist him; her head sank down upon his breast, and he clasped her to his heart in a long and silent embrace.

Irene surrendered herself freely to the new-found joy of his caresses—caresses that were as reverent as they were tender. She was a proud girl—proud and shy—yet once she had confessed him lord of her heart, she was a true woman, in that she gave herself up entirely and wholly to him she loved—he was her king and her master, and she was proud as well as happy to be his chosen love.

Presently, as was natural, and alas! as it must always happen, these two happy lovers came down to earth, and from transfigured spirits of bliss they became once more a prosaic couple of young people, whose future had now to be contemplated rationally and practically.

"Irene, what will your mother say to me? I suppose I have done very wrong in speaking to you? I suppose it would have been the right thing to get her consent first. You see you have known me such a little while, but then, my darling, I was so anxious to make you love me for myself and nothing else. You do, don't you, Irene?"

"Why, yes, of course, you silly boy. What else should I love you for?" she laughed back softly.

"Supposing I were a pauper and hadn't a penny in the world and lived by begging my way along the roads, would you love me all the same, Irene? Would you come and share my mud hovel?"

"Of course I should. I dare say you are very poor. I really never thought about it. But I shan't mind that a bit, I am not used to being anything else, you know. And I know a lot about housekeeping and cooking. I can make my own dresses, and mend all your clothes for you, and be as economical as possible. Oh! I shall love to do it all!"

"You little darling! But fortunately, my dear one, I am able to offer you something a little better than the beggar's hovel you are evidently longing to share. I am not exactly rich, Irene, but I have quite enough to be able to keep you in comfort, if not exactly in luxury. You shall never want for anything, my sweet love, and so I am going to tell Mrs. Garland when I come to see her to-morrow morning. You see, I have no father or mother——"

"Ah! Now that interests me much, much more than what amount of money you have got," cried Irene, eagerly. "I have often longed to know about your people and your relations. I never liked to ask you, but now, won't you tell me something about them?"

"There is very little to tell, dearest. I have no parents and no brothers. My only near relation is my sister, who is a great many years older than I am, and who lives in the country. Louise is that much-abused person, an old maid; but she is a very dear old maid, and I believe she just worships the ground your unworthy servant treads upon."

"Ah!" sighed Irene. "Then she will not think me half good enough for you!"

"Will she not? Don't fish for compliments, little girl; for I shall only stop your mouth with kisses if you do. There is a young lady who lives with her. Her name is Agatha Dale. She is no relation to us at all, but my sister is her godmother; and when Aggie was left an orphan, Louise took her to live with her, and treats her as if she were her own child."

"And I suppose she would have liked you to marry Miss Agatha Dale."

"You suspicious child! Well, I must frankly own that I believe that originally was my good sister's idea. But Louise is a sensible woman, and she very soon saw that Aggie and I were very good friends, but were never likely to be anything more."

"I expect Miss Dale is in love with you, though," she said, nodding her head sapiently. "How could she help it, Rupert? You are so handsome and so clever, no girl could help loving you."

"You little flatterer," laughed her lover back fondly. "Do you know that you will turn my head if you say such things?"

"That would be impossible," she retorted seriously. "You are too good to be vain." Then all at once she cast her arms round his neck and took his dark curled head between her two white hands. "Oh, my love, my love!" she cried, with a sudden passion, "be good to me—be good to me. You will not break my heart, will you? or behave badly to me as so many men I have heard of do to the women who love them?"

"Why, you foolish child, what a terrible idea! 'Break your heart!' 'behave badly' to such a darling as you are! How could I be such a brute? Don't you understand that I consider myself the luckiest fellow in all the world? It is so beautiful to think, too, that I have taught you how to love—that you have never frittered away your sweet, fresh nature with half-a-dozen desperate flirtations, as so many of the girls one meets have done. Oh! how do you suppose a man could ever behave badly to anything that he has won, as I have won you? It is as if you were an angel of innocence that has fluttered down on snow-white wings to this lower world."

Presently he took her home, away from the tumbling weir that had danced an accompaniment to their vows of love; back into the quiet waters of the backwater, where the white swans glided away, ghost-like, amongst the shadows at their approach, and where the water-lilies lay like shining gems upon the bosom of the stream.

"Good night, my little love," he said, as he helped her on to the garden bank. "Keep our secret for to-night, and to-morrow we will tell the dear mother together. I shall come early. Go home now, and dream of me."

Beneath the archway of roses that filled the night air with balmy sweetness, they kissed once again and parted. A nightingale sang high up in the elm tree overhead, a white moth, with widespread wings, fluttered past them. A little breeze, redolent with mignonette and jasmine, paused for a moment to murmur a caress in their ear.

"Good-night, good-night! until to-morrow!" said the man.

"Until to-morrow!" echoed the girl, and the little breeze bore away her words like a sigh.

And so they parted—full of love, and of hope, and of bright dreams of a long and happy future. When Irene reached the house, she turned back once more; but the punt had disappeared, and she saw her handsome lover no more. She looked up at the sky, and lo, and behold! the moon had veiled her beauty behind a thin hazy mist, and a heavy bank of cloud had stolen up from the west, half over the star-flecked sky. She shivered a little—she knew not why.

"If I were superstitious," she thought—"but then I am not in the least! It would be too utterly foolish, for what can take my love and my happiness away from me now? it is fixed as the foundations of the earth itself. And though we are parted now for a few brief hours, to-morrow I shall see him again—to-morrow, happy, happy to-morrow!"

Alas for that "to-morrow" for which she longed!

CHAPTER III.

Drip! drip! drip!

Almost before his eyes were open, Rupert Carroll heard it on the deep thatched eaves outside his bedroom window. Drip, drip—a steady, relentless downpour. He flung open the casement, and looked out. Low clouds covered the sky, the distant woods were blotted out, the cows in the meadow opposite the Inn stood meekly huddled together under the shelter of the trees, and the rain came down in torrents, as if it had never rained before.

"What a morning! and after such a lovely night, too," he thought, and then he drew in his dark curly head on which the rain drops were freely splashing, and proceeded leisurely with the operations of washing and dressing.

"A letter for you, sir," said the chambermaid at his door, just as he was putting the finishing touches to his toilet.

He half opened the door, and took the envelope from the girl's hand. The hand-writing was his sister's. He remarked an "Immediate," on the corner of the envelope, so he sat down by the window to read it. Miss Louise Carroll's letter shall be given at length:

"Harvington Lodge, Kent.

"At last, you most aggravating of brothers, I have succeeded in getting your address from your London chambers! It is absolutely necessary that you should come down here at once. Netherville has proposed to Aggie! He met her last year at the Claytons if you remember, and I think she took to him then because of his extraordinary likeness to you. Last week she went to stay with the Claytons again, and met him again. He proposed, and she has accepted him; of course I ought to be delighted, for it is a capital match for her and she seems quite happy. But then, there is the one drawback of my never having seen him, which makes it so very awkward for me now. Of course family feuds are ridiculous things, and cannot be kept up through succeeding generations, but the fact remains that our fathers were on bad terms with each other. You were too young to know much about it, but I was grown up, and remember it all very well. Our mother, as you know, and Lady Netherville were twin sisters, and the quarrel arose from the late Lord Netherville's shameful treatment of his wife. Our dear mother's whole life was made wretched by the misery of her adored twin sister, and our father did all he could to reason with and reprove his brother for his inhuman conduct, but to no purpose. There was a fearful quarrel between the brothers, and they parted in anger, never to meet again in this world. Poor Aunt Netherville died of a terrible disease, entirely brought on I believe by her husband's violence and ill-usage, and our mother never really recovered the sorrow of her death. Of course this was all very shocking and very painful, but it is an old story now, and all our parents are dead and gone years ago, and you and our cousin, the present Lord Netherville, were both little boys of 5 years old at the time, so he probably knows as little of the rights of the case as you do. Still, as he wishes to marry my adopted daughter, it makes the situation very uncomfortable for me. There is only one thing to be done, and that is, that as you and he are friends, you should come down with him and introduce him to me. I must ask you, my dearest Rupert, to put aside your own pleasures and engagements for two days, in order to do what I want. You must not fail me, dear boy, I do not think that I am asking too much of the brother to whom I have been more like a mother than an elder sister. I calculate that this letter will reach you Saturday morning, so please pack up your bag and come straight up to town by the first train after you get this. You will meet Netherville at Victoria Station. I have told him to look out for you, and come down with him by the 5:15 train. If you will just stay with us till Monday morning, I will release you then, and you can go back to your beloved Thames. Your affectionate sister, "Louise Carroll."

Rupert read the letter through twice over with a somewhat perturbed face, then, holding it still in his hand he went slowly downstairs to the low, old-fashioned coffee-room, where his breakfast awaited him. He was torn in twain with conflicting claims. There was on the one hand Irene, his new-found love, and his duty to make known his pretensions to her hand at once to her mother, besides his own inclination to remain with the girl he loved. But on the other hand, Miss Carroll was the one person in all the world to whom Rupert owed the greatest consideration and affection. To fail her now, at this crisis of the family history, would be to cause her great annoyance and embarrassment.

A Secret Signal.

"Did you ever notice how the tailors while measuring a man for a suit of clothes mix in a few letters occasionally among the numbers?" asked a down-town lawyer recently of a friend. "Whenever I have been measured for a suit of clothes the tailor always said S. B. L. in a subdued voice as he took the measure for the length of my trousers. I often wondered what this secret signal meant and on one occasion made so bold as to ask, but was put aside in some casual way, which plainly showed me that the tailor did not wish me to know the meaning of the mysterious S. B. L.

"Well, I never knew what these letters meant until one day not long ago, when I stumbled across the solution quite by accident. I was waiting to have my measure taken while a strapping big fellow was on the rack. As he measured the length of the trousers leg the tailor said, '33, S. B. L.'

"'Yes,' came back the reply from the big fellow, 'and —— bowlegged, too.'

"All these years tailors have been accusing me of being slightly bowlegged,' and I had never caught on until I was practically told the answer in the accidental way."—Philadelphia Record.

Some Time Hence.

"Oh, mamma, I'm frightened!" came from little Tommie, in bed.

"What are you frightened about, my son?"

"I hear somebody on the roof."

"Oh, well, go to sleep, my boy; it's only your father taking off his shoes before he comes through the scuttle. He's just got home from the club in his airship."—Yonkers Statesman.

The First Impression.

"What was your first impression on arriving at Europe?"

"Great joy," answered the traveler, "over the fact that I was through being seasick."—Washington Star.

Taken by Surprise.

Frank — Were you actually surprised, as you said, when I proposed?

May—Yes, indeed; I really had all but given you up!—Vogue.

Under Her Hat.

"What color do you wish your hair dyed, madame?"

"I'm not particular so long as you keep it dark."

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Brooding over a quarrel with a neighbor, Mrs. William Burtis, aged 32, of Evansville, took rough on rats and will die.

While taking out the casing from an oil well near Petersburg, six feet of it fell and instantly killed Wm. Shafer and broke the left arm of William Coleman.

Daniel Fuhrer, of Domestic, Wells County, has secured a patent on a machine for making tile by which he says every farmer can manufacture the tile needed on his farm.

Fred Sourman, 15 years of age, son of Henry Sourman, near Bristol, may lose his left leg. A mowing machine nearly severed the limb at the ankle joint a few days ago.

Eli Greensfelder, of Logansport, suffered a severe attack of heart failure as the result of sudden fright at the appearance of a mouse which leaped from a box of clothing and ran along his arm. His condition was so serious for a time that a physician had to be called.

J. O. Landes, of Garrett, has been awarded the contract for the construction of a big sewer in that city at a cost of $27,682. The outlet or big open ditch was sold to Clyde A. Walb, of Lagrange, for $7.075. On the latter work J. C. F. Sprankle, of Fort Wayne, bid $7,115.

Jack Penrod, of Bluffton, is at the point of death from an accident sustained last week. He was riding home on a bicycle and carrying an umbrella to shelter him from the rain. He collided in the darkness with an approaching rig and was struck by a shaft and hurled to the ground.

The Ohio Oil Company recently completed a well in the Oakland City field that is estimated to produce over four hundred barrels a day. The well is south of the main field and has created much excitement. There is a general rush for leases in the neighborhood and fancy prices are being paid.

Dennie LaMar, the 13-year-old son of Mrs. Andrew LaMar, of Shelbyville, went swimming and was drowned. He was with a number of other lads and entered the water with them. He was crippled and this is supposed to be the cause of his failure to get out of the water. The body was recovered by three men who were in a boat. His companions had left the place.

Dr. A. F. Wright and C. H. Shaw have just returned to Ninevah from Ottawa, Canada, where they went to demonstrate a mail-catching and delivering apparatus to the Canadian Government. They say the tests were successful, and some of the patents will be sent to Canada for time trials on the railroads. They are warm in their praise of the treatment given them by the Canadian officials.

When Mrs. Romey, living north of Roanoke, went upstairs at her home she encountered a large spotted snake upon the stair landing and the reptile struck her in the breast before she could retrace her steps. The snake was finally killed and it measured over four feet in length. It is supposed to have gotten into the house upon the limb of a tree which stands close to the residence.

Miss Ida Bruggerman, of Kendallville, will leave this week for Brazil, where she will become the bride of Rev. Martin J. Frosch, a young Lutheran missionary. Miss Bruggerman will be met at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, by Mr. Frosch, who will escort her to their new home, where the wedding will take place. The young lady will travel over 7,000 miles to be united in marriage to the clergyman, who wooed and won her when he was a pastor in Fort Wayne.

Herman Stanley, a veteran of the Federal Army, residing in Posey County, has applied to the War Department for a pension. In his application he says he fell from the water wagon, and, strange to say, he never touched liquor in all his life. Stanley was the driver of the water wagon in the battle of the Wilderness, and a cannon ball crashed into the wagon, knocking him off the wagon seat. He received a broken back in the fall, and claims he was permanently injured by the accident.

Patents have been gratned the following Indianians: C. G. Conn, Elkhart, rotary valve for wind musical instruments; H. F. Crim and W. C. Loy, Rochester, automobile lock; G. L. Crook, Indianapolis, internal combustion engine; C. Girardot, Fort Wayne, nut lock; S. E. Haish, Wabash, rein or neck strap line terret; G. M. Heskham, Kokomo, apparatus for treatment of metallic material; H. H. Johanning, Richmond, concrete post; B. J. Morrison, Indianapolis, shaft construction; S. Seitner, Jr., Roann, swivel wheel attachment for cultivators; W. L. Thompson, Bremen, mail bag delivering and receiving apparatus; C. A. Wulf, Indianapolis, flushing apparatus.

Jimpson seed may cause the death of Glen Withers, aged 2 years, and Roscoe Withers, Jr., aged 5 years, sons of Roscoe Withers, a farmer living near Williams. The children ate some of the seed and became violently ill.

Harvey Reeves, who died in an insane hospital and whose body was brought to Terre Haute for burial, became insane from grief because as conductor of a train on the Vandalia road his mistake caused the loss of two lives. That was seven years ago.

Eleven-year-old Victor Threshler died at Tell City of lockjaw resulting from a splinter which penetrated the lad's foot a week ago. He was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Threshler.

Charles Cutshall shot and mortally wounded James O. Farmer, a neighbor, in Montgomery. The children of the two men got into a fight, and the fathers followed it up. Farmer cannot live long. Cutshall is in jail.

George Rutledge, living on the little Wabash river, near Mt. Vernon, found a pearl in that river weighing forty-six grains, which he sold for $3,500. Rutledge has been pearl fishing for several years, but with little success. His find will give him money enough to get a fleet of boats for shell digging.

Ben H. McCracken, of Martinsville, has been engaged as one of the judges at the Ohio State Poultry Show to be held in Columbus, Ohio, the second week in January. In addition to the Ohio State show McCracken has engagements at Shelbyville the second week in December, at Lowell the third week in January, and at Bloomington the fourth week in January.

Mrs. Fred Barnard and little son were thrown from a buggy in which they were riding in Martinsville while hastening home to seek shelter from the rainstorm. The buggy ran into a sand pile in Main street and the occupants were thrown to the brick pavement. Mrs. Barnard sustained severe bruises about the head and knees and the little boy was also badly bruised. The injuries are not serious.

An incendiary fire, which was started at Columbus, damaged the home of Miss Lillian Tull to the extent of $5,000. Mrs. Julia Johnson, a cousin of Miss Tull, was sleeping alone in the house at the time, and when she awoke she was almost suffocated by smoke. She grabbed her parrot, however, and, with the bird screeching "Fire, fire," at the top of its voice, she staggered out into the open air and fell to the ground.

Hugh Sullivan, for forty-five years a locomotive engineer on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern railway, and who has been pulling passenger trains Nos. 7 and 8 between Washington and Cincinnati, Ohio, until, he says, even the dogs along the way wag their tails in friendly recognition when his engine passes, has just been granted fifty-two weeks' leave of absence, the company to pay him $2.00 a day during that time. He is 72 years old.

Mrs. Henry Hoyer, wife of a drayman in St. Paul, had a terrifying experience. She was out in the garden picking cucumbers and when she returned to the house she removed her bonnet and threw it on the floor. She was horrified to see a spreading viper slowly uncoil itself from the folds of the bonnet. She obtained a piece of wood and killed it. It measured eighteen inches in length. How the snake got in her bonnet is a mystery.

Allen H. Craig, living three miles northeast of Scottsburg, was crushed to death while cutting timber on the farm of a Mr. Van Winkle. Craig left his home in the morning, taking his lunch with him. When he did not return in the evening an investigation was made and his dead body was found under a log which had evidently rolled from the wagon. The man's shoulders were terribly crushed, but just when he was killed will never be known, as he was alone. The man was 32 years old and is survived by a widow and two children.

An unusual train was pressed into service on the country roads of the northern part of Bartholomew County when a traction engine was seen hauling a half dozen farm wagons loaded with men, women and children. The St. Louis crossing Baptist Sunday School held its annual picnic in Flatrock Township and the picnic grounds are quite a distance from the town. J. C. Phelps, who owns a thrashing outfit, decided to come to the rescue of those who were going to have to walk. He borrowed several farm wagons and hitched them to his engine. He then invited the people to climb in, opened the throttle and took the Sunday School Limited to the picnic.

Charley, the 8-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Hickman, of Peru, found a torpedo and exploded it, with the result that he lies in a dangerous condition. The torpedo was one that had been lost by some railroad men who were engaged at repairing the Fort Wayne & Wabash Valley Traction track, in the eastern part of the city. The boy knew what the torpedo was, but had no idea as to the power of the explosive. He placed it on the steel rail and struck it with a stone. Two hours later he regained consciousness, with one finger off entirely, the flesh of his hand badly mangled, one eye destroyed, three gashes in his face and an injured shoulder. Unless lockjaw results he will recover.

Alexander C. Major, an old soldier, and Miss Millie Taylor, of Paragon, went to Martinsville to attend a reunion, and were married by Justice Brown on the courthouse lawn in the presence of a large crowd.

A cow belonging to Harve Clark on the Dorwin farm at Monmouth last week gave birth to triplet calves, all of which are living and as well formed and as large as ordinary calves. One is frail, however, and it is thought will not live long.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

Dun's Review of Chicago trade during the week, published by R. G. Dun & Co., says:

Trade generally reflects the progress looked for, production and distribution of finished products and necessaries being distinctly enlarged and the demand for money stronger at the recently advanced discount rates. Heavy consumers are now protecting their future requirements, with the result that enormous bookings are made for 1910.

New contracts in the prominent industries become notably extended, particularly for rails, structural steels, pig iron, cars, wire and forge and foundry outputs. Prices of most supplies show further firmness, while furnace product and minor metals cost more and lumber turns dearer for some grades.

The markets for foodstuffs indicate wider activity. Breadstuffs show easier price tendencies, but live stock and provisions bring the highest average values this year, and east bound rail shipments of the latter gain over both last week and a year ago.

There is seasonable attendance of outside buyers in the markets for general merchandise. This adds strength to the absorption of fall and winter wares, sales being encouragingly good in the textiles, footwear, furniture and house furnishings. Prolonged warm weather has lengthened the buying of light weight apparel at retail here and throughout the interior and stocks are reduced gratifyingly.

Bank clearings, $253,057,985, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1908 by 25.4 per cent, and compare with $212,233,530 in 1907.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 26, against 17 last week, 24 in 1908, and 24 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 5, against 6 last week, 5 in 1908, and 8 in 1907.

NEW YORK.

Trade and industrial tendencies are still in the direction of improvement. Impetus is given these movements by the beginning of the cotton harvest at the South, by the completion of the spring wheat harvest in the Northwest and on the Pacific coast and by the gathering in of other products of agricultural interests in various sections of the country. In commercial lines jobbing trade still has the center of the stage, and reports are practically unanimous that buyers' excursions are stimulating fall demand as the close of the vacation period approaches. Retail trade, still largely deals with the disposal of summer goods, mainly at concessions. In wholesale and jobbing lines of dry goods there is still in evidence cautious buying, particularly of lower-priced cotton goods, which have been marked up in price, buyers apparently clinging to the idea that lower quotations are possible in some lines. While irregularity is noted in this direction, however, the price situation holds strong as a rule.

The 42nd., birthday of Ira Bone was very fittingly observed at his home in St. Joe, last Friday evening. A large number of friends from town and country gathered at his home and showered him with beautiful post cards, thirty-two being received. Ice cream and cake was served to all and a good social time was enjoyed by all. It was a birthday that will long be remembered by Ira as he was siezed and placed under the bed, but this added to the merriment of the occasion. Everybody enjoyed the evening and on their return home wished Ira many more happy birthdays.

Just a few days ago it was discovered by J. D Leighty that some one had entered his woods and dug up his ginseng. Some few years ago he planted a small patch and the seeds were planted the next year and so on until a good sized patch was had. It was done sometime ago but was not discovered until some few days ago. Ginseng is in great demand among the Chinese and is raised in the northern parts of Asia and America and is an article of export from America to China. It has a jointed, fleshy, taper root, as large as a man's finger, which, when dry, is of a yellowish-white color, with a mucilaginious sweetness in taste and resembles somewhat that of licorice accompanied with a slight bitterness. It sells for several dollars a pound when dry, and is in great demand for medicial purposes.

Not long ago a man called on an old lawyer with reference to a debt of $20 he owed. "Do you owe the debt?" the lawyer asked. Oh yes," the man replied, "but it is outlawed." The lawyer thought a while and said, "Let me give you a little kindly advice. Go and pay this money and apologize for the long delay. I am an old man, you are young. I have found honesty is the best policy. If you ever hope to succeed in life, you cannot afford such transactions as this. If you are ambitious to become a loafer and failure in life, go ahead, but if you are ambitious to succeed, never again try to avoid the payment of an honest debt." The young man took the advice and the rebuke administered by the lawyer will do him good as long as he lives.—Exchange.

Here's another essay for which the small boy must stand convicted before the world: "The fli is a little animle that gets in the butter in the good old summer time. It has eight legs; four to walk on and two to rub together, an' two to tickle with. Flis are found all over Amerika, but mostly on bald heads. He are the cause of much cussin' by folks that he pesters with his ticklin' legs. The fli can not be snuck up on, for he has eyes in his back right behind his shoulder blades. The fli loves to get on baby's nose and shuffle his feet. It's fun to leave him on baby's nose ef your mother aint around to land on you for it. The fli is commonly called a fli, but he has another name. Pop calls him "shellofanuisance".

Beware of the Dangerous House-fly

Flies are the most dangerous insects we have. They are much more dangerous than bees or hornets; these may sting you, and the sting is painful, but you soon get over the pain. Flies do much more harm than this. They walk over filthy places like sewers and garbage cans, and after eating the filthy food which they find there, they come into your house and walk on the food you eat, carrying on their feet the tiny germs which live in filth just as you live in a house. These germs are not only filthy and disgusting, but many of them cause such diseases as typhoid fever, cholera infantum and summer complaint. When the flies bring them from some dirty place to your food or leave some of them when they crawl on your face or hands, you may swallow these germs without knowing it and be taken ill with one of these diseases. So the fly that seems so harmless may do you much more harm than a bee or a hornet.

Your parents should place screens at their doors and windows during the warm weather, to keep the flies out of the house. If they cannot screen all the rooms, they should screen those in which food is kept; and if anyone is sick in the house, flies should be kept from the sick-room, so that they may not carry germs from the sick person to the rest of the family.

Children may help to keep flies from swarming in and around houses, and from carrying germs of sickness from one person to another. In the first place, they should not buy candy, fruit or other food which is left in front of stores or anywhere else where flies may feed and walk on it. Flies lay their eggs chiefly in stable manure, and if this is left without screens or other covers to keep the flies away, great number will be hatched in every stable. If you know of stores where food is not covered from flies, or of stables that have swarms of them around, get your father or mother to write to the Board of Health about them, and the Board will make the store-keepers or stable-men obey its rules. But before you report other people for being careless and dirty and so making it possible for flies to become a nuisance, be sure that your own house is clean, and that no garbage-cans or boxes are left uncovered to attract flies.

If you and all the people you know will follow this advice, there will not be nearly so many flies to plague you in hot weather, and there will not be nearly so much sickness and death, especially among children, as now.

Rheumatic Pains

"My mother is a great sufferer from rheumatism, and Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills is the only remedy that relieves her."

MRS. G. DAVENPORT,
Roycefield, N. J.

The pains of rheumatism are almost invariably relieved with Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills. They also overcome that nervous irritation which prevents sleep because they soothe the nerves. To chronic suffers they are invaluable. When taken as directed, they relieve the distress and save the weakening influence of pain, which so frequently prostrates. Many sufferers use them whenever occasion requires with the greatest satisfaction, why not you? They do not derange the stomach nor create a habit. Why not try them? Get a package from your druggist. Take it according to directions, and if it does not benefit he will return your money.

We have been before the People of DeKalb Co. so long it would hardly seem that an introduction is necessary; with this our first appearance in your home paper. We feel however, that a few words along this line should not be out of place.

We have no use for a braggart, and in making our remarks shall present FACTS nothing more.

We began Business 23 years ago in one of our present rooms size 22x80, using but one floor.

We made up our minds that there was but one way to build up and retain a Business and that was—to sell reliable merchandise at a reasonable price and to allow no misrepresentation—We succeeded from the start. We now occupy three rooms covering a space of near 14,000 square feet. These rooms are equipped with the modern fixtures and are filled with Merchandise guaranted not only by ourselves but the Manufacturers from whom we buy—Our store Methods are pleasant, courteous treatment, no misreprentation, and strictly one price—Every thing marked plain figures. Your money is as good as your neighbors and their money good as yours. We will have something to tell you each week in this Space and we ask you to read what we have to say. We will be more than pleased to have you pay us a visit.

You will find us absolutely reliable and our merchandise the best to be had for the price.

Bargains in Standard Pianos.

If you know of anyone who desires a very good piano at a bargain price you will be interested in the fact that at the present time the well-known music house of Lyon & Healy, Chicago, have an entire floor filled with slightly used Uprights, all of which are practically as good as new.

In order to facilitate the work of putting in new flooring, which improvement is now being made, Lyon & Healy offer these pianos at greatly reduced prices.

You can have any of these fine instruments at from 20 to 40 per cent less than usual prices. They will be sold either for cash or upon easy monthly payments. All of these pianos are fully guaranteed to be exactly as represented. The opportunity to secure one will undoubtedly be taken advantage of by shrewd buyers in this vicinity.

A letter to Lyon & Healy, Wabash Avenue and Adams Street, will bring full particulars.

IN THE LAND OF LONG SUNSHINE

Saskatchewan Offers Ideal Conditions For Grain.

OBSERVATIONS OF A HOOSIER

George B. Lockwood Takes a Trip Up Into the Newest Northwest and Finds There a Land of Sunshine and Golden Grain and an Inexhaustibly Fertile Soil, Believing All Preconceptions Based Upon Canada's Pretty Title of "Our Lady of the Snows"—What American Immigration Is Doing to Develop This Wonderful Country.

[Special Correspondence.]

Scott, Saskatchewan, August 16.—There is no prejudice stronger than that of geography. Josiah Quincy, in an impassioned speech in congress when the acquisition of the Louisiana purchase was under discussion, declared that the country west of the Mississippi would never be peopled by other than wild men. The very name "Canada" suggests a snowbank, an impression which the Canadians themselves have done little to dissipate, even indulging the pretty but expensive title "Our Lady of the Snows"—and yet at this season of the year the sun is working here on an eighteen hour shift. In June, in Northern Saskatchewan, the farmer may work in the fields until 9:30, and the sun is above the horizon before 3 o'clock. On the prairie in the Tramping Lake district on Saturday last the sun was still above the horizon at 8 o'clock in the evening and hot enough to blister the skins of Hoosiers who found its intensity surprising. Saskatchewan, then has its share of sunshine, crowded into the months when crops are planted, cultivated and reaped. Its short, dark days come during the months when agriculturally there is "nothing doing." Many farm owners from the states arrange to spend their summers on the land here and return home for the winter months.

Climatic conditions, therefore, are not unfavorable to the farmer in the growing of small grains, though the short summer season prevents the diversification of crops which is so important an asset of the agriculturalist in our own latitude. The precipitation of rain is sufficient for all purposes or at least has been for a series of years, both in Saskatchewan and the province of Alberta, immediately to the west. The stories of midsummer snow storms are discounted here, and Medicine Hat even claims that the town is wrongly accused by our weather bureau of being the continental cold storage plant from which all blizzards flow. At any rate the ice crop is not extensive in this province in summer, as some have supposed. A Minneapolis man told me that the hottest day he ever expected to spend in this life was at Moose Jaw, Sask.

The Finest Sort of Soil.

What of the soil?—that of course is the important question once it is established that the climate is genial during the cropping months. We spent two days in what is known as the Tramping Lake district, an area of one hundred and fifty thousand acres or more which takes its name from Tramping Lake, a narrow body of water about forty miles long. We saw many fields of oats and wheat in scattered portions of the district—all of it beginning to take on the golden harvest tinge. These fields were luxuriant to the point of rankness, even in some cases where they had been planted on soil freshly broken. Examination of the soil where it had been turned over by the plow for the new year's planting, showed it to be a thick, black loam with clay subsoil, much resembling the prairie lands of Illinois. In all the big area we covered we saw no alkali or gumbo soil, and none, indeed, that did not bear all the external evidences of fertility, including the heavy growth of grass which gives the Northwestern Saskatchewan landscape all its green, for it is absolutely treeless, the worst thing to be said against it by those accustomed to the rimming about of the horizon by the forests.

Here, as in other new countries, there is as yet freedom from many of the insect pests which depreciate the quality and quantity of crops. The wheat raised is hard wheat of good quality and in Canada, as in the United States, it has been commanding a good price for some years. Wheat is of course the great staple product of this section. The short growing season makes it impossible to grow corn, for the raising of which this soil would seem otherwise to be specially adapted. Other small grains grow as well. Flax is grown to a considerable extent, and is very profitable crop on newly broken ground. Because of the absence of local markets comparatively little attention has been given to the raising of vegetables, though the output of potatoes is considerable. At the Indian Head experiment station a yield of 400 bushels per acre of potatoes has been secured, and above two hundred bushels is not uncommon in the new lands. The potatoes raised here are unblemished, owing to the absence of the blight prevailing in areas which have been longer cultivated. A good deal of live stock is being raised. There are few running streams, but many lakes, and the pasturage is of course excellent.

A Need Which Is Imperative.

The development of this great agricultural empire is not without interest to the American people. The problem in the United States, as in other countries today, is that of providing an adequate food in supply. James J. Hill in discussing the high prices of food products a few weeks ago, declared that more people would have to be starved upon the farms before the food problem created by the growth of industrial centers at the expense of the agricultural sections would be solved. The development of new arable areas meets a need which is imperative. It is estimated that by 1950 the United States will have a population of two hundred million people. Practically all of our productive land has now been occupied. Irrigation and more intensive farming will serve largely in increase the productivity of the soil already occupied,—and yet it is quite conceivable that this country, increasing more rapidly in population and in its industrial development than any other country in the world, may yet have to look across the Canadian border into these immense provinces for a portion of its food supply. The great Minneapolis millers make the statement that they are already put to it to secure sufficient wheat to meet their needs for the domestic and expert trade: this in the face of big wheat crops in the states and a constantly increasing acreage with no diminution of the yield per acre. If there should be one failure in the great staple crop for wheat, it would be a matter of substantial importance to us that in Canada, on soil unoccupied by civilized men a few years ago, there is a great and increasing wheat acreage. This year the wheat yield of western Canada is estimated at 150,000,000 bushels. In 1906 it was but ninety millions. There are one hundred and sixteen million acres of land in the province of Saskatchewan. Its wheat possibilities run into the hundreds of millions. Looking upon these vast prairies one rids himself of the specter of a starving world, such as Malthus predicted, and many others after him have written and talked about.

Neither Surprising Nor Alarming.

The statement that American immigration into Canada is increasing is neither surprising nor alarming. It is true that nearly three hundred thousand Americans crossed the border into Canada during the decade ending with January 1, 1907, and that this number has been increased by nearly two hundred thousand since, but even at that we are a million to the good in our exchange of population with the Dominion, for it is estimated that a million and a half of young Canadians have come into the United States during the past few decades. They have come to the industrial centers, while the Americans who have emigrated to Canada have gone there to occupy the soil. In Canada the Americans have become a substantial part of the citizenship of the country. It is not difficult to imagine that if the present current of immigration into Canada continues, as there is every reason to believe it will, former citizens of the United States, people still bound to our own land by strong ties of affection, will dominate these great new provinces. The union of Canada with the United States seems a consummation very remote,—but it will not weaken the position of the United States to have this new country so thoroughly leavened with Americans. And Americans do not find the rule of a king irksome here in the Northwest—indeed, the king is a very far away and impalpable object. The province of Saskatchewan has all the liberties and powers of a free state. Americans settling here are allowed the privilege of voting on local questions from the beginning. To vote on questions affecting the whole dominion naturalization is required. They have politics peculiarly their own here, but few Americans take much interest in it.

A New Sort of Pioneering.

The character of the present invasion of Canada by Americans is illustrated by one special train which pulled into this place in April of this year. This train, running in two sections, was composed of forty-seven cars, conveying 144 persons, with their household effects and farm equipment from Nebraska, the expedition being under the direction of the Luse company of St. Paul, which has undertaken the settlement of an area in this district equal to several Indiana counties and has brought something like a thousand settlers into this section in the past two years. Members of the party deposited sixty-eight thousand dollars in the local branch of the Union Bank of Canada on the day of arrival. The value of the cargo brought in on the trains was estimated at $280,000. This was more money and property than was brought into Indiana, probably, by all the settlers in any year of the early pioneer period. Pioneering is a different proposition in the Canadian Northwest in 1909 than it was in Indiana when it was as near the wilderness period as Saskatchewan is today.

Getting Over Difficulties.

W. D. Boyce, the Chicago publisher, was discussing some of the difficulties of his ballooning expedition in South America.

"Oh, we'll get over them," said Mr. Boyce, smiling. "We must, eh—in a balloon? Where there's a will there's a way, you know. We'll show the indomitable spirit of little Willie of Commonwealth avenue.

"'No, Willie,' said his French nurse, 'no more gateaux to-night. Don't you know you can't sleep on a full stomach?'

"'Well,' said the indomitable Willie, 'I can sleep on my back, can't I?'"

DON'T DESPAIR.

Read the Experience of a Minnesota Woman and Take Heart.

If your back aches and you feel sick, languid, weak and miserable day after day—don't worry. Doan's Kidney Pills have cured thousands of women in the same condition.

Mrs. A. Heiman of Stillwater, Minn., says: "But for Doan's Kidney Pills I would not be living now. They cured me in 1899 and I've been well since. I used to have such pain in my back and once I fainted. The kidney secretions were much disordered and I was so far gone that I was thought to be at death's door. Since Doan's Kidney Pills cured me I feel as if I had been pulled back from the tomb."

"Madam," returned the evangelist, severely, "teeth will be provided."

Hypothetical Questions.

"What will your mother say to you when you get home?" said one boy.

"She'll start in by asking me some hypothetical questions," answered precocious Willie.

"What are they?"

"Questions that she thinks she knows the answers to before she starts to talk."—Washington Star.

A Rare Good Thing.

"Am using ALLEN'S FOOT-EASE, and can truly say I would not have been without it so long, had I known the relief it would give my aching feet. I think it a rare good thing for anyone having sore or tired feet.—Mrs. Matilda Holtwert, Providence, R. I." Sold by all Druggists, 25c. Ask to-day.

Going to the Play.

Very Hospitable.

Hostess—Did you enjoy your African trip, major? How did you like the savages?

Major—Oh! they were extremely kind-hearted. They wanted to keep me there for dinner.

Looking Forward.

Mrs. Gossip—I hear the widower you have been keeping house for has married again, Jane.

Jane—Yes, ma'am.

Mrs. Gossip—And how do you like your new mistress?

Jane—Oh, I guess she'll be all right when I finish breaking her in.

Friendly Verdict.

"Say," queried the indignant artist after he had gone over the entire art exhibition, "why didn't the committee hang my canvas?"

"I believe," replied the man in charge, "they decided that hanging was too good for it."

Have You Noticed?

Bink—Well, it is one consolation to have your friends at the summer resorts send you souvenir postal cards.

Wink—No consolation about it. They only send them to make you feel bad because you are not there.

Another Definition.

Little Willie—Say, pa, what is a genius?

Pa—A genius, my son, is a person whom nature lets in one the ground floor, but whom circumstances force to live in an attic.

A Lost Reprimand.

"Young man," said the severe parent, "when I was your age, I was determined to work. I started in as a clerk and salesman at a compensation of $12 a week."

"Well," answered the heedless youth, "business methods have changed. I doubt if you could command that now."—Washington Star.

Proof of It.

Wifey—But, Jack, you surely don't consider yourself a financier?

Hubby—Certainly I do. How do you suppose I've kept from paying your milliner's bills so long if I'm not a financier?

Philosophy.

BABY HORRIBLY BURNED

By Boiling Grease—Skin All Came Off One Side of Face and Head—Thought Her Disfigured for Life—Used Cuticura—No Scar Left.

"My baby was sitting beside the fender and we were preparing the breakfast when the frying-pan full of boiling grease was upset and it went all over one side of her face and head. Some one wiped the scald with a towel, pulling the entire skin off. We took her to a doctor. He tended her a week and gave me some stuff to put on. But it all festered and I thought the baby was disfigured for life. I used about three boxes of Cuticura Ointment and it was wonderful how it healed. In about five weeks it was better and there wasn't a mark to tell where the scald had been. Her skin is just like velvet. Mrs. Hare, 1, Henry St., South Shields, Durham, Eng., March 22, 1908."

A Remarkable Journey.

In a history issued of Harper's Weekly Harry A. Franck describes a remarkable journey undertaken by him on foot across the robber-infested Lebanon range to Damascus. Everybody tried to induce him to abandon this enterprise. At one village the sheikh invited him to sit in his shop entrance upon a stool and placed an earthenware pot in front of him, into which every passer-by was urged to drop a coin. The pot was almost full when an English-speaking villager explained its meaning. The sheikh was taking up a collection to purchase for the author a railroad ticket to Damascus. Mr. Franck picked up his knapsack and stepped into the street. But the sheikh and several bystanders threw themselves upon me with cries of dismay. It was no use attempting to escape from a dozen horny hands. I permitted myself to be led back to the stool and sat down with the knapsack across my knee. The sheikh addressed me in soothing tones, pointing at the pot with every third word. The others resumed their seats on the floor, rolled new cigarettes and fell quiet once more. With one leap I sprang from the stool into the street and set off at top speed down the highway, a screaming, howling, ever increasing, but ever more distant throng at my heels."

SENSE ABOUT FOOD.

Facts About Food Worth Knowing

It is a serious question sometimes to know just what to eat when a person's stomach is out of order and most foods cause trouble.

Grape-Nuts food can be taken at any time with the certainty that it will digest. Actual experience of people is valuable to anyone interested in foods.

A Terre Haute woman writes: "I had suffered with indigestion for about four years, ever since an attack of typhoid fever, and at times could eat nothing but the very lightest food, and then suffer such agony with my stomach I would wish I never had to eat anything.

"I was urged to try Grape-Nuts and since using it I do not have to starve myself any more, but I can eat it at any time and feel nourished and satisfied, dyspepsia is a thing of the past, and I am now strong and well.

"My husband also had an experience with Grape-Nuts. He was very weak and sickly in the spring. Could not attend to his work. He was put under the doctor's care but medicine did not seem to do him any good until he began to leave off ordinary food and use Grape-Nuts. It was positively surprising to see the change in him. He grew better right off, and naturally he has none but words of praise for Grape-Nuts.

"Our boy thinks he cannot eat a meal without Grape-Nuts, and he learns so fast at school that his teacher and other scholars comment on it. I am satisfied that it is because of the great nourishing elements in Grape-Nuts."

"There's a Reason."

It contains the phosphate of potash from wheat and barley which combines with albumen to make the gray matter to daily refill the brain and nerve centres.

It is a pity that people do not know what to feed their children. There are many mothers who give their youngsters almost any kind of food and when they become sick begin to pour the medicine down them. The real way is to stick to proper food and be healthy and get along without medicine and expense.

GOOD SHORT STORIES

The Seeing New York automobile was moving through the financial district. "This is Wall street," announced the man with the megaphone. "Keep your hand on your purse, Hiram!" hoarsely whispered a lady from the open country to her husband.

The man with the glassy eye and preternaturally solemn demeanor put down a sovereign at the booking office at Charing Cross and demanded a ticket. "What station?" snapped the booking clerk. The would-be traveler steadied himself. "What stations have you?" he asked with quiet dignity.

The young Oriental understood ordinary methods and occurrences very well in his new California abiding place, but occasionally found a puzzle. "Japanese boy pretty smart when he can speak America in a year," he said, "but Missouri boy he speak good after he has been here only six months."

A Philadelphian who was formerly a resident of a town in the north of Pennsylvania recently revisited his old home. "What became of the Hoover family?" he asked an old friend. "Oh," answered the latter, "Tom Hoover did very well. Got to be an actor out west. Bill, the other brother, is something of an artist in New York; and Mary, the sister, is doing literary work. But John never amounted to much. It took all he could lay his hands on to support the others."

Dean Stanley used to tell this story with relish: He sent a note to a shoemaker about a pair of shoes that were making for him, and the writing was so bad that the shoemaker couldn't make it out. So he returned the note to the dean, with a note of his own, saying that he was "unaccustomed to the chirography of the higher classes," and asked for a translation. In telling the story, the dean said he did not propose to be held responsible for the handwriting of the entire British aristocracy.

One Sunday morning Mr. Moody, the revivalist, entered a Chicago drug store, distributing tracts. At the back of the store sat an elderly and distinguished citizen reading a morning newspaper. Mr. Moody approached this gentleman and threw one of the temperance tracts upon the paper before him. The old gentleman glanced at the tract, and then, looking up benignantly at Moody, asked: "Are you a reformed drunkard?" "No, sir, I am not!" cried Moody, drawing back, indignantly. "Then why don't you reform?" quietly asked the old gentleman.

A gentleman in Dublin, speaking of the Irish, said that nothing ever satisfied them, and that he was willing to prove his words on a wager that if he should go to the door and call a cab, no matter what fee he would give, the driver would ask for more. The wager was taken for ten pounds sterling. The gentleman called a cab, drove about a quarter of a mile, stepped out, and handed the driver a ten-shilling gold-piece, the legal fee being one shilling. Cabby drove off. The gentleman who had taken the wager was exulting in his triumph, when suddenly the cabby returned, and, touching his hat, said: "Please, sir, have yo a durty thre'penny bit about ye? It would be such a pity to break a bright piece of gold like this for a drink!"

The Cook's Fault.

One of the most annoying things about swans is that they live to an extremely great age and that it is impossible for the ordinary observer to tell what their years may be. President Grover Cleveland once had an amusing experience with some swans. According to a writer in the American Magazine. He had been in the South, shooting, and brought home a number of wild swans, one of which he sent to each member of his Cabinet, and to some other associates.

"All the boys," said Mr. Cleveland, "thanked me politely for having remembered them, but none of them seemed to have much to say about how they enjoyed the birds.

"Carlisle, I found, had his cooked on a night when he was dining out. Another, when I asked him, said he hoped I wouldn't mind, but he had sent his home to his old mother. Thurber didn't mention his bird at all for two days. Finally I asked him about it.

"'Thurber, did you get that swan all right?'

"'Yes, sir, oh, yes. I got the swan all right, thank you,' and he bent over his desk and seemed very busy.

"'Fine bird,' I said.

"'Yes, sir; fine bird,' and he went on working.

"'Enjoy eating him, Thurber?'

"He waited a minute, and then he said, 'Well, sir, I guess they didn't like him right at my house. They only cooked him two days,' and he went on working without cracking a smile."

"It is a great story," a publisher is reported to have said to a new author, "but you have failed in one important feature. You do not describe the way the heroine was dressed when the hero first met her. You'd better write in a paragraph about her clothes, but try to avoid the conventional." A writer in the Chicago Evening Post tells the anecdote.

The ingenious author, knowing the sameness of costume descriptions in the popular novels, and also knowing how to make an appeal to the feminine heart, wrote:

"Heloise floated toward him garbed in a six-hundred-dollar dress, a two-hundred-and-fifty-dollar hat, with a ninety-eight-dollar-and-seventy-five cent mantilla over a three-hundred-and-seventy-five-dollar lace coat."

AFTER DOCTORS FAILED

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Cured Her.

Willimantic, Conn.—"For five years I suffered untold agony from female troubles, causing backache, irregularities, dizziness and nervous prostration. It was impossible for me to walk upstairs without stopping on the way. I tried three different doctors and each told me something different. I received no benefit from any of them, but seemed to suffer more. The last doctor said nothing would restore my health. I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to see what it would do, and I am restored to my natural health."—Mrs. ETTA DONOVAN, Box 299, Willimantic, Conn.

The success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, is unparalleled. It may be used with perfect confidence by women who suffer from displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness, or nervous prostration.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills, and suffering women owe it to themselves to at least give this medicine a trial. Proof is abundant that it has cured thousands of others, and why should it not cure you?

THE PAULIST PULPIT

THE LIFE OF FAITH.

By Henry F. Cope.

"The just shall live by faith."—Romans, i., 17.

There can be no faith without freedom. It is not faith to attempt or pretend to believe the things which you are tlod you must believe. Even to seek to comply is to prove your fear rather than your faith. your apprehension of some dread consequence attendant on failure to conform. To say, "I believe," lest a catastrophe attend the honest denial of such belief is to play the liar and the coward.

It weer better to have no faith at all than weakly to submit to the doctrine that the universe lies in the hands of a creature so unjust as to arbitrarily decree our eternal damnation unless we subscribe to statements we cannot indorse, or blindly to insist on the historic accuracy of incidents which we would discredit in any other relation.

The real difficulty in religion for the average man, however, lies not in the credibility of the historic statements of the faiths, not in the logic of their syllogisms; he is even willing to take many such things for granted; the difficulty lies in seeing any particular value or use in such articles of creed and history; he cannot see why their acceptance should be regarded as the most vital thing in life.

At heart every man who lives above the brute is religious—that is, he desires to realise in some way those soul and character ideals that grow within him and shine before him. His deepest need, one often unconscious and seldom formulated, is to discover the agencies and aids which will clarify his ideals, strengthen his resolves, and secure their realization.

He will be satisfied with no faith that falls heer or does less than this. He cannot see how the perfunctory acquiescence on his part with the formal statements of the creeds would aid to this end. Suppose he throws aside other considerations and accepts the Mosaic cosmogony — what light will that throw on the struggle in his own soul between the dust and the divine? In what way will that help him to altruism?

The truth is that "the faiths" are of yesterday, while faith is always of to-day and tomorrow. Faith is forward looking; it is confidence that life holds better things farther on; it is life's onward pressing in full assurance that there is a goal, that the universe does not mock us, that the hopes and aspirations that burn within are but reflections and pulsations of the law of the fullness of life that runs through all the creation.

He will be satisfied with no faith that falls here or does less than this. He cannot see how the perfunctory acquiescence on his part with the formal statements of the creeds would aid to this end. Suppose he throws aside other considerations and accepts the Mosaic cosmogony—what light will that throw on the struggle in his own soul between the dust and the divine? In what way will that help him to altruism?

The truth is that "the faiths" are of yesterday, while faith is always of to-day and to-morrow. Faith is forward looking; it is confidence that life holds better things farther on; it is life's onward pressing in full assurance that there is a goal, that the universe does not mock us, that the hopes and aspirations that burn within are but reflections and pulsations of the law of the fullness of life that runs through all the creation.

The faith that there was once a perfect man is an empty thing unless it becomes the power that pushes me on to yet nobler perfections; unless the facts of the past become for me the prophecy of the future. All the history of the soul has value only as it indicates the soul's direction toward its promised country. I believe the past whenever the past shows the race coming into the fuller present, rising from lowlier levels.

The formal statements which men call faiths are commonly but the dead shells that once contained glowing life; they are like photographs of a sunset; the form is there, but the glow, the color, the life has gone from it. Each age has its vision; facing the future, looking forward with high hopes, it sees the promised land; then come the cartographers, who care nothing about the land so long as they make its maps. They draw lines and lay on colors; they describe, prescribe, bound, and limit that which their fellows of larger heart and hope have seen as a living, glowing glory. Thus from the visionless minds we get our creeds, our descriptions of yesterday's faith.

That which has been can never be enough for that which is. Religion is to creed and forms of faith as life is to works on physiology and anatomy. Religion is the love of life, the faith in its fullness and meaning; it can find expression only in terms of life, in life coming into its richness, beauty and usefulness.

It is the height of folly to quarrel over forms, descriptions, and analysis; it is bit cowardice to listen to the creaking voices that tell us we must subscribe to their forms, must see through their myoptic eyes, or be forever doomed. It were better to be doomed for loyalty to truth than saved at the price of compromise with our own souls.

THE ONE-TALENT MAN.

By Rev. Junius B. Remensnyder.

And unto one He gave five talents, to another two and to another one; to every man according to his several ability.—Matthew xxv. 15.

This parable treats of the self-evident diversity in the natural gifts of men. Some are two, five, or even ten talented. They are quick, clever, resourceful. This power is a gift. The child is born with or without it. No power can create it in the man lacking it.

What a power for good is such a richly gifted personality! Yet to how many have these brilliant parts proven not an opportunity, but a temptation, a foil and a snare. The saddest chapter of literature is the career of the sons of genius.

Over against these exceptionally gifted souls our parable presents the one-talent man. He is dull, slow, grudging. Endowed. What he gets must be by toil of brain and sweat of brow. These inequalities seem to be part of God's plan, and are no doubt meant for a wise purpose, just as mountains and plains enhance the beauty and promote the life and fruitfulness of nature. As a level earth would mean a sand desert, so socialism—a dead level of conditions — would mean social stagnation.

Nevertheless, the one-talent man feels sorely his disadvantage, and is tempted, as in the parable, to complain and churlishly sit down and attempt nothing. This tendency the great teacher here means to reprove. He shows that God rewards men not in proportion to their gifts, but to the use they make of them. To the one who doubles his one talent the very same power is given as to the one who multiplies his ten talents.

"Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things; I will make thee ruler over many things."

The duty of the person not brilliantly gifted is to work his one talent to the highest point of efficiency. And the pains he requires to advance becomes a discipline often more valuable by far than quick natural parts. How often thus the gifted scholar, snared by his very facility, sees himself left behind by the plodding but trained and applying pupil. And the same fact is illustrated in business and in every sphere of life.

This parable concerns the great majority of us. The one-talented many are really of far more importance than the few of genius. For it is by means of the great company of mediocre minds that the chief work and happiness of the world must be maintained.

"This seems very certain," wrote Phillips Brooks, "that the world is to grow better and richer in the future, not by the magnificent achievements of the highly gifted few, but by the patient faithfulness of the one-talented many."

It is by common men and women realizing the importance of common and lowly tasks that the welfare of every home and the general well being of mankind are to be promoted. And, none the less, is it by these that God's wise and blessed purposes to the race are to be completed.

Let us, then, bear in mind that usefulness, success, happiness and the divine blessing depend not upon our talents, many or few, brilliant or dull, but upon our wise, patient, earnest use of such capacities as we have.

"The race is not to the swift or the battle to the strong," but to the faithful and deserving.

It is those who have had an inferiority of natural powers and who, in spite of disadvantages, have made themselves a help and a blessing who deserve best of the race and shall shine the brightest in the kingdom of heaven.

One of Shaw's Criticisms.

"Before fame came to him," said a playwright, "that great rival of mine, George Bernard Shaw, wrote theatrical criticisms for the London Saturday Review. Now, those were criticisms indeed. Nobody could praise a good play so beautifully as this critic. Nobody could roast a bad play so tellingly. Listen. Here is a sample."

And the playwright read:

"I am in a somewhat foolish position concerning a play at the Opera Comique, whither I was bidden this day week. For some reason I was not supplied with a program, so that I never learned the name of the play. At the end of the second act the play had advanced about as far as an ordinary dramatist would have brought it five minutes after the first rising of the curtain, or, say, as far as Ibsen would have brought it ten years before that event. Taking advantage of the second interval to stroll out into the Strand for a little exercise, I unfortunately forgot all about my business and actually reached home before it occurred to me that I had not seen the end of the play. Under these circumstances it would ill become me to dogmatize on the merits of the work or its performance. I can only offer the management my apologies."

His Lame Excuse.

"Gregory," said Mrs. Squallop, "I have just received a letter from Aunt Abigail. She says that as we don't seem to want her to come to visit us this summer she will postpone it indefinitely. What does she mean by that? I told you to write and tell her to come at her own convenience. Was that what you wrote to her?"

"Er—substantially," answered Mr. Squallop. "I couldn't remember how that word 'convenience' is spelled, and so I made it 'risk.'"

TAXES ON WEALTH.

Inheritance and Income Imposts In England and France.

An interesting statement furnished by the chancellor of the exchequer appeared in yesterday's parliamentary papers, the London Chronicle says. Mr. Lloyd George, replying to a question of Mr. Barnard, said:

"An estate of £5,000,000 if passing to strangers in blood would be liable, on a rough estimate, to death duties amounting to £1,120,000 under the existing English law, £1,165,000 under the budget proposals and £1,020,000 under the French law.

"If such an estate passed in the direct line the death duties might be roughly estimated at £700,000 under the existing English law and £791,000 under the budget proposals and £246,000 under the French law.

"Supposing a person possessed of £5,000,000 to be in receipt of an income therefrom at a rate of 4 per cent or £200,000 per annum, he would pay in income tax (at the present rate of 1s in the pound) £10,000. Under the budget proposals he would pay £11,600 income tax and about £4,900 super-tax—in all £16,500.

"Under the French income tax proposals, as I am informed, an income of £200,000 would pay 4 per cent to begin with, i. e., £8,000, together with a 5 per cent super-tax, which would involve a further charge of £10,000, or £18,000 in all."

No Man is Stronger Than His Stomach

A strong man is strong all over. No man can be strong who is suffering from weak stomach with its consequent indigestion, or from some other disease of the stomach and its associated organs, which impairs digestion and nutrition. For when the stomach is weak or diseased there is a loss of the nutrition contained in food, which is the source of all physical strength. When a man "doesn't feel just right," when he doesn't sleep well, has an uncomfortable feeling in the stomach after eating, is languid, nervous, irritable and despondent, he is losing the nutrition needed to make strength.

Such a man should use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. It enriches the blood, invigorates the liver, strengthens the kidneys, nourishes the nerves, and so GIVES HEALTH AND STRENGTH TO THE WHOLE BODY.

You can't afford to accept a secret nostrum as a substitute for this non-alcoholic medicine OF KNOWN COMPOSITION, not even though the urgent dealer may thereby make a little bigger profit. Ingredients printed on wrapper.

None but the initiated know the accuracy required in a printing office. The average reader who detects a misspelled word or a letter upside down feels that his mission on earth is not accomplished until he has called the attention of the overworked editor to the glaring defect. He does not notice the thousands and tens of thousands of letters that are in place, or the multitude of words correctly spelled, but his eagle eye is glued on the one that is out of place. So it is with our deeds. Man does a thousand good deeds and no attention is paid to them, but if he makes one mistake it is flashed all over the world. A lifetime may be spent in building up a reputation that may be wrecked in a moment. The world is a harsh critic exacting to a fault.—Exchange.

PREMATURE AGE NOT NORMAL

Mankind, Not Nature, to Blame for Infirmities that Tend to Shorten Life.

It is not a crime to grow old if you do so naturally and gracefully. In fact it is most creditable, and highly honorable.

However, it is a crime to grow old beyond your years. To do so you must abuse and mistreat yourself. Nature never intended that any one should grow old prematurely, but to mature and ripen normally, and retain the natural senses and tastes until the machine finally runs down and stops.

Infirmity is never sent upon any one, but every one who ages prematurely, or grows infirm must take the blame to himself. Infirmity, which is physical weakness, is invited, encouraged and maintained, and it comes not except in answer to distinct and oft-repeated invitations.

It is true that with centuries of ill-breeding, with selfish culture and wrong living, it is but natural that there should be many physical and moral defectives, but the tendency is so strong toward the normal that it does not take long to get back to the right way.

This tendency to the normal is well marked and quite noticeable in all the kingdoms of nature.

The daisy is beaten down by the storm, but how quickly it recovers! A stalk of corn is bent and hindered by a clod, but when the hinderance is removed it soon straightens up. The twig may be bent and finally grow into unnatural form, but its branches point upright and their fruit is good.—Pittsburg Gazette-Times.

IS FRIEND OF THE FARMER.

Peculiar Qualities of the Swallow Should Endear Him to All Tillers of the Soil.

From the standpoint of the farmer and the orchardist perhaps no birds more useful than the swallows exist. They have been described as the light cavalry of the avian army.

Specially adapted for flight and unexcelled in aerial evolutions, they have few rivals in the art of capturing insects in midair. They eat nothing of value to man except a few predaceous wasps and bugs, and in return for their services in destroying vast numbers of noxious insects ask only for harborage and protection.

It is to the fact that they capture their prey on the wing that their peculiar value to the cotton grower is due. Orioles do royal service in catching weevils on the bolls, and blackbirds, wrens, flycatchers and others contribute to the good work, but when swallows are migrating over the cotton fields they find the weevils flying in the open and wage active war against them. As many as 47 adult weevils have been found in the stomach of a single cliff swallow.

A Little Sermon to Girls.

Each one of us, then, must do these two things: Understand ourselves, and understand others. It is not enough to claim the right of the individual to "grow" as he sees fit. It is impertinent to announce that "my mother is behind the times." None of us can grow rightly if we grow rudely, defiantly, wounding unnecessarily, failing in kindness and consideration. We may sometimes have to give pain, as when one changes a church, and so offends a parental prejudice. But if conviction be strong, one cannot be irritable, the crisis is too vital, and it is just because we do lack real conviction in any stand we take that we grow irritable in little things. Conviction makes us serious. It is when we have only half thought out some subject for ourselves that we grow irritable and prove unequal to the task of either enlightening those we pain or of steering the bark of our cherished purposes through distracting shoals.—Harper's Bazar.

Pie.

There are many people who never eat bread, but always eat pie, and are healthy. There is scarcely one ingredient in either of these articles that is not in the other, and yet tradition praises bread and condemns pie. As a matter of fact, no longer is pie what it was 50 years ago. The pie which nourished Abraham Lincoln, Ben Franklin, the Adamases, Sam and John; the pie about which Longfellow wrote, which Emerson ate three times a day, pie that was once an inspiration, a symphony, a ripe achievement and the most sacred performance of a patriotic duty, such pie is no longer ate—not even in New England.

Dorking, Where Meredith Lived.

The neighborhood of Dorking has many literary associations independent of its connection with the famous novelist just dead. It was at Burford Bridge, near Dorking, that Keats completed "Endymion," in November, 1817; close by, at the Rookery, was born Father Malthus, the population economist; and at West Humble Frances Burney, after her marriage with General d'Arblay, built Camilla cottage with profits of her novel of that name, and settled down. Sheridan resided at Polesden, and John Stuart Mill at Mickleham, while other illustrious residents in the locality in earlier times were John Evelyn and Daniel Defoe. To most people, however, the chief literary association of Dorking is with Dickens, for was it not at the Marquis of Granby—variously identified with the White Hart and the Old King's Head—that Mr. Weller, Sr., made the fatal blunder of proposing to a "widder!"—Westminster Gazette.

Mr. Hannen says they have been readers of THE NEWS ever since it was published.

A meeting of the town board was held on Monday night of last week and the members of the board were all present. A small claim of $9 00 was allowed Sam Warner for labor on cement street crossings. After which the matter of sidewalks was taken up and discussed at some length, and as a result a number of property owners in town were to be notified that unless immediate repairs were made in bad walks the town would no longer be held responsible for any danger that might occur therefrom. The old brick walls of the restaurant building were ordered taken down or proped securely to prevent accident. Adjournment was taken for two weeks.

November, perhaps the last days of the month, will probably see the finish of the local option campaign and the election in this county. The secretary of the committee, Dr. C. S. Stewart, has been instructed to write to each township president and get his views regarding the time of the election. The committee will meet again in a short time and fix the date and get the necessary petition started. The members of the committee feel certain that the county will remain in the "dry" column providing there are not too many stay-at-homes. They declare that there is a feeling prevalent in the country that the election is a fore gone conclusion; that only a mere formality is necessary to keep the territory "dry" and that no work will be required. This, they say, must be overcome for conditions will not warrant such indifference. They say the other side is busy and very hopeful of victory.—Dispatch.

..Opening..

We expect to be able to have our restaurant open ready to serve the public not later than Saturday, Sept. 18.

We expect to run our place right and everything will be fresh and clean. Come in and see us in our new home.

CHASTINE JOHNSTON.

For many years the figure of Edward Henry Harriman has loomed large before the American public as the colossus of American railroads, and his name has been connected with road building and combining projects of ever increasing magnitude and ambition. In recent years pictures of Mr. Harriman with one hand on the Atlantic coast and the other on the Pacific slope have shown him as he was figured in the minds of his fellow citizens. His mind, a veritable human dynamo, conceived the idea of uniting all the great railroads of America into one gigantic system, and he seemed to be in a fair way to carry out his idea when illness cried halt to him. Mr. Harriman's intense Americanism and belief in the future of the United States has frequently been cited by his friends. He himself asserted that the immense fortune that came to him as a byproduct of his plans was not in any sense the goal of his ambition, but merely an indirect result of his successful plans for developing the railroad resources of his country. The president of the Southern Pacific, the Union Pacific and other lines and the possessor of many millions started in life without the advantages of wealth. His father was a minister in modern circumstances, who gave his son only a common school education. At an early age he entered Wall street as a clerk. After he became a stockbroker on his own account his financial genius brought him rapidly to the top. Mr. Harriman was born in Hempstead, N. Y., February 15, 1848.

Sudden Death Takes General Corbin.

Lieut. Gen. Henry C. Corbin, U. S. A., retired, died in Roosevelt Hospital, New York City, after an operation. General Corbin would have been 67 years old in a few days. Mrs. Corbin and former Governor Myron T. Herrick, of Ohio, his personal friend, were at his bedside when death occurred. General Corbin had been suffering for two years from a renal disorder which ultimately resulted in his death. He entered the regular army May 11, 1866, as a second lieutenant of the Seventeenth Infantry, and was successively promoted until he reached the grade of lieutenant general April 15, 1906, and retired September 15 of the same year. In recognition of "gallantry shown in the Spanish-American war," Congress in June, 1900, conferred on him the rank of major general. For eight years he served as adjutant general of the army. The general was in the company of President Garfield when the President was assassinated in 1881. He was a member of the Loyal Legion. On November 6, 1901, he married Miss Edith Agnes Patten and maintained his residence in Washington, D. C. General Corbin leaves three children by his first wife —Rutherford B., of Washington, Mrs. Usher Parsons, of Ardsley-on-the-Hudson, N. Y., and Grace Corbin, living in Wilmington, Ohio.

Black Hand Murder in Ohio.

What is believed to be a "Black Hand" murder was unearthed at Piqua, Ohio, when the dead body of Giuseppe Casemento, an Italian, was found in the hovel where he lived alone. The head had been cut open with a sharp instrument. Casemento was generally believed to have quite a sum of money, the savings of years. He had not been seen for several days and it is believed he was murdered as he was about to retire to bed. The body was discovered lying prone upon the floor, in a pool of blood. No money was found on the body or in the room. The authorities are investigating.

Interurban Cars in Collision.

Twenty-seven persons were injured, two seriously, in a head-on collision between two interurban cars on the Elgin & Belvidere electric railroad near Huntley, Ill., a village a few miles south of Elgin. The accident was caused by the failure of an east-bound car to stop at a switch a short distance from the scene of the wreck. A relief car was sent from Elgin and the seriously injured were taken to that place.

Eats Pie for Breakfast.

J. O. Butler, of Bellefontaine, Ohio, is 86 years of age and he holds to the belief that pie is a proper food for breakfast. "I have been eating pie for breakfast for sixty years and approve of it," said Butler, who is hale and hearty. Butler says he believes that pie, if eaten at the morning meal, has the entire day to be digested, and he thinks it should take the place of breakfast foods.

Steamer Laurentian Wrecked.

A dispatch to New York from North Sydney, Cape Breton, says the steamer Laurention, sailing from Boston to Glasgow, went ashore near Cape Race and was badly damaged. The passengers are safe. The Laurention is commanded by Captain Imrie.

Isaac Brock, Aged 121 Years, Dead.

Isaac Brock, who said he had seen twenty-six Presidents elected, is dead at Waco, Texas, at an age said to be 121 years. According to Brock's family Bible and other documents, he was born in Buncombe County, North Carolina, March 1, 1788.

Babe Terribly Scalded by Hot Tea.

Eleanor, 9-months-old daughter of Theodore Luttfring, of Napoleon, Ohio, was terribly scalded. An older sister was washing dishes and in lifting a tea kettle her hand was burned and in replacing it hurriedly the kettle turned over on the baby.

Tim Murnane, Famous Turfman, Dead.

Tim Murnane, one of the best known racing men in the country, died at his home in the lodge at Overland Park, Colo., from a complication of diseases. Murnane trained and drove the great trotter Cresceus.

General Shackleford Dead.

General James Shackleford, a hero of the Mexican War and prominent in the South, died at his summer cottage at Port Huron, Mich.

HEAVY FROST CAUSES LOSS.

Corn in Some Localities Has Been Almost Totally Destroyed.

A killing frost passed over the central and northern portion of Michigan Wednesday night, doing hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of damage to vegetables and garden truck. At Muskegon the most severe early frost ever experienced in either Muskegon or Oceana Counties and the earliest in forty years was felt. Although slight frosts have quite often been felt a short time after Sept. 1, there has never been any heavy frost on that date since 1869. Corn in most localities has been nearly totally destroyed, while potatoes are also heavily hit. Garden produce was damaged seriously, and figures now on hand show the total loss in Muskegon and Oceana Counties to be at least $100,000. Whitehall, Montague and Hart also report heavy damage. The mercury went down to 30 degrees.

At Grand Haven the mercury fell to 28 degrees, and large quantities of tomatoes, melons, and other vegetables were destroyed. Vassar reports a heavy hoar frost in that section which ruined great quantities of beans, while at Flint potatoes, corn and buckwheat were damaged. The big cucumber crop was totally destroyed and many farmers will lose heavily on this crop, as they depended almost entirely upon it.

Extensive damage was done to the tobacco crop of Western Wisconsin by frosts. On some farms in La Crosse, Vernon, and Monroe Counties, the center of the tobacco industry in that State, the loss is total.

Heavy frost caused much fear that corn in the Indiana lowlands was damaged. Vegetation was almost frozen stiff and garden products rose in price to-day.

BUILDING OPERATIONS GIGANTIC

Enormous Increase Throughout Country During Past Year.

Enormous increase in building operations throughout the country during the past year is shown by statistics compiled by the Department of Commerce and Labor. It is demonstrated that in the 100 largest cities the value of building permits for July, 1909, was $20,000,000 more than for July, 1908. There were noticeable gains in the receipts of wool and heavier shipments of boots and shoes. The total shipment of live stock is unusually low. Hogs show a decline of 10 to 20 per cent. It is also shown that there was a decided falling off in the receipts of foodstuffs and a general increase in the receipts of such products as soft coal, coke, ore and iron products.

PARLIAMENT HOUSE FIRE.

Loss Is $100,000 and Finest Law Library in Dominion Is Destroyed.

The west wing of the parliament buildings in Toronto, Ont., was destroyed Wednesday by a fire. The loss to the building is about $100,000, fully covered by insurance, but the fine Mowat law library, one of the best collections in the dominion, is a total loss, with no insurance. The cabinet council was in session when, shortly after noon, a crash of falling glass was heard. Investigation disclosed the western skylight fallen and smoke pouring from the roof. Premier Whitney, in his shirt sleeves, directed the preliminary fire fighting, in which the cricketers, including the Philadelphia pilgrims, helped. No fire companies reached the building until twenty-two minutes after the alarm had been sent in.

KILLS MOTHER AND SELF.

Youth Who Was Denied Money with Which to Marry Dies.

A week after murdering his mother because she had refused him money with which to marry, George Simons, a young civil engineer, shot and killed himself in the home of his sweetheart, Viola Hartranft, in Pottsville, Pa. Simons slept for a week in a room adjoining that in which he had concealed the body of the slain woman. After killing his mother he carried the body to a room on the third floor of the house. Covering it with quicklime, he screwed fast the door and filled the cracks with parafin to make it appear a solid wall. He put up a sign with the word "Paint" on it, so that none would touch the door. When he killed himself, Simons was not even under suspicion for the crime.

STEAMER SINKING; 400 SAVED.

Duchess of Kent Run Down by Transport, Promptly Beached.

There was an exciting scene at the mouth of Portsmouth harbor, England, the other afternoon when the Isle of Wight steamer Duchess of Kent was run down by a government transport. There were four hundred passengers on board the Duchess and immediately after the collision she began to fill rapidly. The captain headed her for the shore and she was promptly beached. All the passengers got ashore safely. Many of them jumped as the steamer neared the shore and waded to dry land rather than wait for the boats.

BRYAN HAS NARROW ESCAPE.

Accident to Motor Car Nearly Causes Injury to Occupants.

William J. Bryan narrowly escaped injury in Springfield, Mo., when a motor car in which he was being taken to Doling Park to make an address got beyond control going down a steep hill in the park. The brake broke, but the car was stopped just on the edge of an embankment by R. P. Dickerson, the driver.

FARMERS TO KEEP RECORDS.

Census Director Durand's Appeal for Accurate Farm Data.

It will be suggested by U. S. Census Director Durand to the farmers all over the country that the work of securing accurate returns at the coming census of agriculture will be greatly facilitated if the farmers will keep or provide some sort of written record of their farm operations during the year 1909. This effort to secure the farmers' personal co-operation is but one of a number of ways and means chosen by Director Durand in the effort to secure an accurate, expeditious and economical census concerning population, agriculture, manufactures, mines and quarries, which are the subjects of inquiry defined in the census law.

FIGHT WITH KNIVES IN STREET.

One of the Duelists Receives Dozen Gashes and Dies—Other Escapes.

In a knife duel fought in the street in Akron, Ohio, early Sunday an unidentified man inflicted injuries upon Jovan Kuruchich which resulted in his death. Kuruchich received more than a dozen deep gashes about his arms, chest, neck and head. Kuruchich is believed to have started the fight. He was seen about the city late Saturday night armed with a large butcher knife. A few hours later he was found slowly bleeding to death. Kuruchich told an interpreter that a neighbor had quarreled with him and a duel resulted.

Mystery in Woman's Death.

Mystery surrounds the discovery of the body of Mrs. Alberta Bantan, divorced wife of former United States Senator Phipps of Homer, La., in Breckinridge Park, San Antonio, Tex. The body was found by the police after a telephone message had been received from a man who told of its exact location, but refused to give his name.

Wrights Buy Site for Plant.

Wilbur and Orville Wright have purchased more than 700 acres of farm land northwest of Springfield, O., near Tippecanoe City, as a site for a park to be used in experiments with aeroplanes. It is reported that the Wrights intend to erect an aeroplane factory on the land.

Rob Bank; Escape on Handcar.

The First State Bank at Foxhome, fifteen miles west of Fergus Falls, Minn., was robbed early Monday. The robbers blew open the safe and got all the money in it, about $2,000. They then escaped on a handcar, which they threw into the river near Breckenridge.

Eat 1,051 Dogs, 9,785 Horses.

The official statistics for the second quarter of 1909 show that 1,051 dogs have been slaughtered for food in Berlin under Government inspection, and 9,785 horses.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY.

A new Carnegie library is to be erected at Bemidji, Minn., at a cost of $15,000.

A terrific wind and hail storm in the vicinity of Stephen, Minn., destroyed nearly 40,000 acres of small grain.

It appears that the West is sending a new appeal for laborers. The cry from Nebraska is not now for handy men about the farm, but for such as can work in factories. Help is wanted at once at Omaha, Lincoln and the smaller cities. A story of the same sort comes from Wisconsin. It has been said when there is a great demand for harvesters that even good wages are not as attractive as they might be because the term of employment is so short. Men do not care to make a long journey into a land that is strange to them, with the prospect of being turned adrift within a few weeks. But this demand for factory workers suggests permanent employment.

AEROPLANIST FALLS IN LAKE.

Picked Up by Launches After Attempt to Cross Ontario.

C. Foster Willard, in the aeroplane Golden Flyer, made his first attempt to cross Lake Ontario from Toronto, Thursday night, but a sudden increase of wind and trouble with the ballast made the machine dip its bows at a terrific pitch and he fell to the water when about three-quarters of a mile from the shore. He was picked up by the launches which had been waiting to see the attempt. The aeroplane left the land at about 7:15 and appeared to be completely under control. It went at a terrific pace, at a height of about thirty to fifty feet. Another attempt to cross the lake will be made as soon as the repairs are completed.

30,000 IDLE IN PENNSYLVANIA.

Labor Day Finds Dissatisfied Host in Pittsburg District.

Labor day in Western Pennsylvania presented a unique and grim anomaly. Nearly thirty thousand men are idle as a result of strikes, lockouts and walkouts. The 5,000 glass workers of the American Glass Company, who paralyze the glass industry throughout the country; 3,500 unskilled and nonunion strikers of the Pressed Steel Car Company at Schoenville; 18,000 organized but dissatisfied coal miners in the vicinity of Pittsburg, and 5,000 union tinplate workers aided in making the day set apart for the workingman one to be remembered in labor circles for years to come.

SUFFER FROM DROUGHT IN EAST

Crops Burned and Industries Paralyzed by Lack of Moisture.

Little rain has fallen in western Pennsylvania for several months and the drought is severe. Crops have even burned for lack of moisture and the loss to farmers has been heavy. A dispatch from York says the paper mill of the P. H. Clatfelter Company at Spring Grove, Pa., has been compelled to suspend operations because of the drought. The works are operated by water power. The Schuylkill River is at the lowest point ever recorded and more than a thousand persons employed in the mills at Manayunk, a suburb of Philadelphia, are idle because of the scarcity of water.

1,500 Dead in Mexico Floods.

The town of Tula, in the State of Taimaulipas, Mexico, was visited by another flood the other day. A number of houses were carried away and rich plantations destroyed. Abject misery prevails in the district. General Trevino places the deaths for the State of Nuevo Leon officially at 1,500.

Forbes Calls Suit Blackmail.

Mrs. A. Holland Forbes, wife of the millionaire aeronaut of New York and Fairfield, Conn., has been made defendant in a $75,000 alienation suit brought by Mrs. Ida Rowley, wife of a chauffeur employed by the Forbes family. Mr. and Mrs. Forbes say it is an attempt at blackmail.

Rich, Retaken, Fatally Hurt.

Desperate after his recapture, James B. Hill, Jr., aged 38, leaped off a train which was conveying him back to the county home at Woodville, Pa., and was fatally injured. He escaped from the asylum Aug. 6 in an automobile. He was found at Rock Springs, Ohio. The young man is a firm member of the Edwin M. Hill Lumber Company.

Masked Men Rob Conductor.

Two unknown masked men held up a street car at the corner of Forest and Payne avenues in St. Paul, and robbed Conductor James Perry of $13.80. The motorman attempted to interfere, but desisted when threatened with death.

NINETY SAVED FROM DEEP.

Steamer Hits Rock, but Passengers and Crew Reach Safety.

Thrilling scenes attended the loss of the Allan Line steamer Laurentian, bound from Boston for Glasgow, which piled upon the rocks near Cape Race, N. F., during a dense fog at 6 o'clock Monday morning. The vessel is a total wreck, but the fifty passengers and forty members of the crew escaped to land after a trying experience. The Laurentian was making about thirteen knots an hour when she struck the rocks. The ship rebounded heavily, the shock throwing most of the passengers, who were asleep, from their berths. They stampeded for the deck without stopping to dress, and for half an hour much excitement prevailed. Captain Imrie and his officers succeeded in quieting all hands. A stiff northwest wind banged the ship about, and the situation became so serious at 7 o'clock that orders were given to put the boats overboard, and passengers and crew were taken off in safety.

RAISING LARGER CROPS.

Agricultural Bureau Head Finds Soil Is Not Wearing Out.

Soils of the United States are not wearing out and the crop yields are increasing rather than decreasing. These facts are demonstrated in a bulletin shortly to be issued by the bureau of soils of the agricultural department in Washington, prepared by Professor Milton Whitney, chief of the bureau. The bulletin deals exhaustively with the yields of crops from 1867 to 1906 inclusive. "We are producing more crops per acre than formerly," said Professor Whitney. "This is undoubtedly due to better and more intelligent cultivation, more and better systems of rotation of crops and in later years to the intelligent use of fertilizers through measures of control in the hands of every individual farmer."

SENDS RIVAL POISONED CANDY?

Arrest of Ohio Man May Reveal Clash in Love Affair.

The arrest of John R. Done at Findlay, Ohio, charged with sending poisoned candy to Fred O. Procter, promises to reveal rivalry for the affections of Miss May Routson, with whom, it is said, Dunn and Procter were in love. Testimony against Dunn, when he is arraigned, will be given by Arthur Marks and Dayton Kahn, analytical chemists of Toledo. The report of the chemists shows than in each of the three pieces of candy they analyzed enough strychnine was found to produce death.

Seven Cars Roll Into a Ravine.

The Burlington's St. Paul express, south bound, ran into a washout four miles south of St. Joseph, Mo. Seven coaches were derailed and five of them rolled into the ravine. An unidentified man sprained his foot.

Hilltop, at 1 to 3, easily won the Mohawk selling stake, one mile.

Over half a million dollars were expended in the construction of the new Speedway at Indianapolis.

William K. Vanderbilt's Seasick II. won the Prix de Longchamps, two miles and one furlong, at Paris.

J. R. Keene's Hilarious, 2:06, won the $7,500 Travers stakes for 3-year-olds, at a mile and a quarter at Saratoga.

Seven sectional records were broken in the Central A. A. U. championship meet in Chicago recently and the Chicago Athletic Association won all the honors with a total of 110 points out of a possible 186.

The winning trotters at Detroit, which repeated at Kalamazoo, were Margin, Country Jay, Baron McKinney and Lady Jones. The pacers were George Gano, Cecelian King, Walter W., and Lady Maude C.

Herman Long, at one time the most famous shortstop of the National League, and for years a member of the Boston team, is seriously ill at Denver. He went to Denver a few months ago because of lung trouble.

In the Ohio State Rifle Association shoot for the Catrow cup, Sergeant J. W. Hingle, U. S. marine corps, set up a perfect rifle record, when he hit 21 bull's-eyes in a row, seven each at three ranges, 500, 900 and 1,000 yards.

A. R. Kevlet, the Brooklyn schoolboy, has broken the world's running record for two-thirds of a mile. He covered the distance in 2:47 2-5, or three-fifths of a second better than William G. George's time, made in New York City in 1882.

PEARY ACHIEVES POLE; HAILED BY SCIENTISTS

Laconic Messages Tell of Success After Twenty Years' Perilous Striving.

VICTORY ON APRIL 6, 1909

America's Savants Applaud the Feat Accomplished After That of Dr. Cook.

A little message of seven words flashed by wireless from the coast of Labrador to the New York news bureaus at noon Monday made Commander Robert E. Peary, the second American citizen within five days to report to an astounded world the discovery of the North Pole. Later advices showed that Commander Peary had reached the pole on April 6, 1909, one year, lacking fifteen days, after Dr. Frederick A. Cook had achieved the same prize.

The brief and thrilling message which conveyed the first tidings of Peary's feat was dated from Indian Harbor, via Cape Race, Newfoundland, and read:

"Stars and Stripes nailed to the pole. PEARY."

While this message was being cabled to Europe, where Dr. Frederick A. Cook is now receiving his reward of public homage and royal honors as the first white man to reach the top of the world, and while doubt of its authenticity was being voiced in some quarters, confirming messages began to follow thick and fast, and now there was not the shadow of a doubt that Robert E. Peary, the most dauntless and persevering explorer that ever lived, the man who has spent two decades and as many fortunes in the search for the prize of the centuries, had actually accomplished his task and was returning home with records and white witnesses to prove his conquest.

Sends Joyous Message to Wife.

The explorer's joyous message to his wife was most humanly interesting. It read:

"Indian Harbor, via Cape Ray, Sept. 6, 1909.

"Mrs. R. E. Peary, South Harpswell, Me.:

"I have found the D. O. P. All well. Love. Will wire again from Chateau.

"BERT."

From St. Johns, N. F., came the announcement that Peary had telegraphed the Governor of New Foundland by wireless from Labrador stating that he had reached the pole and congratulating New Foundland on its part in the discovery, because of the fact that the captain and the crew of Peary's ship were New Foundlanders.

COMMANDER R. E. PEARY, U.S.N.

Sure of One White Witness.

One of the most significant dispatches as bearing on any possible future controversy over the honors of discovery was that received in Freeport, Me., at 3 o'clock Monday afternoon by Mrs. W. C. Fogg from her brother, B. D. McMillan, an instructor in Worcester Academy, who accompanied Peary on his trip. The message shows that Peary had at least one white man to confirm his claims. McMillan wired:

"Indian Harbor, Sept. 6, 1909.

"Mrs. W. C. Fogg, Freeport, Me.:

"Arrived safe. Pole on board. Best year of my life. "BEN."

Two Americans Are Successful.

Thus the great North that has locked its gates of ice again the bravest of the world throughout the 400 years during which the pole quest has been carried on has yielded within the brief period of twelve months to the intrepid persistency of two men, and those two Americans.

Everywhere among army and navy officers and scientists and official Washington generally only words of praise have been spoken for Commander Peary. "Such wonderful achievements as this make epochs in the history of the world," declared Captain Veeder, in charge of the United States naval observatory, "and I have no doubt that this discovery will add immeasurably to the sum of human knowledge."

A TRAGIC BLUNDER

By MRS. LOVETT CAMERON

Author of "In a Grass Country," "A Daughter's Heart," "A Sister's Sin," "Jack's Secret," Etc., Etc.

CHAPTER III.—(Continued.)

Then he consoled himself by reflecting that he could certainly be back again by mid-day on Monday, and that, after all, it was but a small sacrifice to make of his own joys to her who had devoted her life to him. Again he thought about Lady Garland, and what a nuisance she would be at such a juncture in the limited space of the little cottage. "By Monday the woman will be gone!" he thought, "and it will be ever so much easier to get Mrs. Garland's consent to our engagement when that appalling sister-in-law of hers has taken her departure! Yes, it really would be wiser to put off explanations and revelations until Monday," was his final reflection on the situation; and then he sent for a time-table, and looked out his train. There was a good one in half-an-hour's time. He packed a small bag of necessaries, sent off a telegram to his sister to announce his arrival, and sat down to the writing table in the bow-window.

"My darling," he scrawled hastily, "please don't be very disappointed and unhappy, but I am unfortunately obliged to go away till Monday; my sister has sent for me on an important family affair, and I cannot possibly refuse to go to her. I must be off, my dearest; please don't be sad, for I shall very soon come back to you. And, darling, will you keep our little secret as you promised me, until we meet again? I don't want you to tell your mother one word about it till I return. Yours, Rupert Carroll."

When he had finished writing, he rang the bell, and the comfortably fat landlady of the "George" answered his summons.

"Can your boy take this note at once up to Mrs. Garland's cottage for me, Mrs. Makin?" he asked.

"Certainly, sir, Tommy shall take it at once."

The fly was already at the door, and his bag was inside it. The way to the station did not lie past Mrs. Garland's cottage, so that Carroll had no opportunity even of looking at the outside of the casket which contained his treasure; but he saw the boy Tommy under his cotton umbrella, hurrying away along the lane with his note to Irene in his hand.

The train came up, and he jumped into it, and soon was borne away from the remote and tranquil village on the Thames, where he had been so happy.

Just as the train turned a sharp curve out of sight of the village and the river, Irene was opening her first love-letter, in the seclusion of her own little bedroom, where she had flown to read it when it was put into her hand.

She was disappointed, of course, dreadfully disappointed. At the first shock of the words that told her that he had gone away, the pretty color fled from her cheeks, and her beating heart sank down coldly and numbly within her. But Irene was, as her lover believed her to be, a thoroughly sensible girl. After the first few moments she began to recover her equanimity.

"Of course he was right to go," she said aloud to herself, as she kissed the letter and put it safely into her pocket. "It is tiresome of course that it should happen to-day, of all days, but he could not help his sister sending for him."

Meanwhile she was not in the least unhappy. She had last night's wonderful joy, that sweet and sacred secret, shared only with him she loved to think about; besides, Monday would soon come—very soon. But it rained the whole livelong day, and not only that day, but on the Sunday, too. The hours wore away very slowly and drearily.

"I why Mr. Carroll has never been near us for two whole days," said Mrs. Garland when tea time on Sunday came, and nothing had been seen of the young man.

Then Irene blushed as she answered with some confusion

"Mr. Carroll is away, mamma, he will not be back till to-morrow."

"Oh, indeed! Well, I must say one misses him dreadfully, he is so bright and cheery; he would have amused us these two wet days."

Lady Garland was looking hard at her niece. The blush, the confused manner, the little hesitation over the young man's name, were not lost upon her.

"There is mischief done already, I do believe!" she said to herself. "What a fool poor Gertrude is, not to see the danger of such an intimacy." Then aloud she remarked with comfortable cheerfulness, as she helped herself to some more bread and butter:

"He has gone for good, I have no doubt; that is what these casual young men do. They are here to-day, and they vanish to-morrow! You will see, my dear," nodding across the table lightly at her sister-in-law, "mark my words, you have seen the last of Mr. Rupert Carroll; he will never come back again."

Oh, why did her aunt's cruel words ring like the knell of Death in Irene's ears? She shivered, and turned sick and cold as she heard them.

CHAPTER IV.

"Certainly, my lord, nothing could be more suitable, my lord. Your lordship's taste is excellent."

And Mr. McGillup, the fashionable jeweler, bowed and smirked as he stood behind his glittering counter in his smart West End shop, and washed his hands in invisible soap and wreathed his face in smiles, for the benefit of his aristocratic customer.

"Now what d'you really think, McGillup?" inquired the purchaser for the twentieth time. "D'you think the pendant alone would do? or shall I have the pearls without the pendant?"

"Well, my lord, as I said before, for a really suitable present such as your lordship would of course wish to give to a lady destined to become your lordship's bride, why, I should decidedly recommend the pendant and the pearls."

The jewels lay in their velvet case on the glass counter between them, a great string of milk-white pearls, with a heart-shaped diamond locket that shone and glistened as Mr. McGillup turned and twisted it about so as to show off its beauty.

"You see there's the ring besides; that is a necessity, I suppose, when a man is engaged to be married?"

"Certainly, my lord," replied the jeweler, grinning. "A necessity, no doubt, as your lordship aptly puts it! But the ring is a mere trifle. Now to my mind, the pearls are nothing without the pendant, and the pendant nothing without the pearls. But you put the two together," suiting the action to the word, "and here you have at once a gift such as a nobleman of your position, my lord, may fitly present to his affianced lady."

Lord Netherville lapsed into silence, turning the jewels over thoughtfully in his hands. He leant half-way across the counter, his head forward, his broad back bent. He was as startlingly like his cousin, Rupert Carroll, as though he had been his twin brother. He was of the same height and build, he had the same dark, clustering, curly hair, the same brown eyes and regular features, and even the auburn moustache was of the same size and fashion. It was perhaps the likeness of their twin mothers that had thus transmitted itself to their sons, the two sisters, who had married two brothers.

Yet there was something a little different when you came to know them both well in the faces of these two cousins. The difference lay, not in feature, but in expression. Rupert Carroll's face was bright and open, his eyes looked you full in the face, with a generous candor, his lips smiled frankly and warmly. But Lord Netherville's eyes were shifty, and his smile was cold and cynical. There was something of calculation in his face, of which there was no trace in Rupert's.

Netherville always had second thoughts in his mind. Thus, though in the present instance he wished to give a very handsome gift to the lady to whom he was just engaged, the wish was prompted quite as much by policy as by affection. He wanted not only to please his lady-love, but also to impress his elderly maiden cousin with his generosity, so that she, on her part, might see the expediency of making a handsome settlement on her penniless adopted daughter. For although he was in love with Agatha Dale, he would very much rather that she had had some small fortune of her own.

"I think I will have them both," he said decisively at last. "But you must give me a good long tick, McGillup."

"Oh, of course, my lord, of course! It doesn't signify to me when you pay."

"I am going down to Kent this afternoon by the 5:15 train from Victoria Station. They must be at my place in good time, say before 4. I think it safer to carry them just as they are in their case, in my coat pocket."

Now to this conversation Billy Watson had been listening with all his ears. He sat in an angle of the wall behind the counter, with a leather in one hand, and a silver butter-dish in the other. He was supposed to be polishing it up.

He was 14 or thereabouts, but though small and slight in figure, his face was preternaturally old and sharp. He had a shock of unkempt black hair falling roughly about his face, from beneath the shadow of which two black, bead-like eyes gleamed piercingly out of his pale, thin face. Just as the transaction was completed, Mr. McGillup turned round and perceived him.

"What are you doing there, Watson?" he asked, sharply.

"A-polishing of the siller, sir," replied Billy demurely, falling to hard on his butter-dish with the chamois leather.

"Who told you to sit in the front shop? You've no business here at all—go back at once."

Billy obeyed meekly, he took himself and his chamois leather and his butter-dish promptly away, into the back premises. Presently Lord Netherville nodded a careless farewell to the jeweler and walked out of his shop.

Now all this took place on Saturday morning—that same wet Saturday morning on which Rupert Carroll at the "George Inn" at Chatswell-on-Thames, had received the letter from his sister summoning him to Kent, and just at the moment when Lord Netherville was walking out of Mr. McGillup's shop, Rupert Carroll, his cousin, was getting into the train which was to bring him up to London. It was a wet morning in London, too—wet and muddy, and odiously unpleasant, as wet weather in London is wont to be. Very few customers came into the shop after Lord Netherville went away.

The morning hours dragged away slowly enough, and the smart young men behind Mr. McGillup's counter looked ruefully and gloomily out of windows at the down-pouring rain. It was early-closing day, but what was the use of a half-holiday with such weather as this?

"May I go, Mr. Grimes?" asked Billy Watson, as 2 o'clock struck. "It's Arthur's turn to put up the shutters."

"Yes, yes—run away, Bill, and mind you come punctual Monday morning," said Mr. Grimes, looking up from the desk where he was finishing up the week's accounts.

Billy threw one anxious look up at the clock, and sped away like an arrow from the bow into the wet and murky street. He ran hard—as hard as he could scamper in a northeasterly direction till he left all the fashionable streets and squares far behind, and reached a region of dirty, narrow slums, where the houses were mean and squalid, and the population ragged and rough. Here the streets were tortuous and intricate; costermongers' carts filled the roadways, and itinerant vendors of all kinds of goods, from second-hand clothes to old tin kettles, hawked their wares along the streets, with shrill and unintelligible cries. Billy Watson seemed to know his way perfectly well through these dark and noisome streets. He passed quickly amongst the crowd, with a nod here and there to an acquaintance, or a laugh in reply to some jest that occasionally greeted him on his way.

But he would not stop. The boy was in a hurry, and he had not yet reached his destination. At length he turned into an alley that was, if possible, narrower and dirtier and more squalid than any other he had as yet passed through.

Half-way down this alley stood a low, dingy public-house, against the doorway of which leant a man of the most forbidding aspect. When he caught sight of Billy Watson runnin' up breathless and bespattered with mud, he gave a short whistle into the darkness of the smoke-begrimed passage behind him. He was immediately joined by two other men who were apparently waiting for the signal. All the three walked up the narrow alley together, and Billy followed them. When they reached the corner house, they stopped and turned round, and the boy came up to them.

"You are late, young 'un," observed the best-dressed man of the three, as he took a handsome gold watch out of his waistcoat pocket and consulted it. "Twenty minutes late, d'ye know that?" he added, frowning severely at the trembling boy.

"I'm very sorry, sir. Don't scold me; twasn't my fault."

"Lucky for you the Marquis don't set Jim to break every blessed bone in your body for you," growled the man next to him, savagely. Billy looked up and shivered at the bare suggestion. Jim was a person of colossal strength, broad and brawny, with a heavy bull neck set into a huge width of shoulder—he could have crushed Billy in one hand like a sparrow.

"Well, have you got any news for us?" inquired the first man, who was better spoken and less rough in manner than either of his two companions, and who seemed to be the leading spirit of the trio. "Has anything been settled? Has he bought them?"

"Yes, sir. He bought 'em to-day. He will 'ave 'em sent this afternoon in time to take down by the 5:15 train, Wictory Station. Lord Netherville bought them pearls this wery morning, and there was some di'monds, too, and 'e's a-goin' to take 'em into the country just in 'is pocket this afternoon."

"Should ye know the gent again if you see 'im?" inquired the third man, who was addressed by his companions by the name of Shuffler.

"In course, sir. I've seen 'im four times. I'd know him anywhere."

"There ain't much time to lose?" remarked Shuffler, and the Marquis consulted his gold timepiece once more. "Come along, young'un."

(To be continued.)

Good Samples.

Mr. Hepworth had been married five times, "and happily every time," as he often said. His first marriage had occurred when he was nineteen and his last at the age of seventy. His last wife was a sensible woman, some years his junior, who survived him, when he died, at the age of seventy-nine.

During his last illness Mr. Hepworth made various plans for his wife's remaining years, and talked them over with her in a matter of fact way.

"You'll have plenty of money to travel, Ellen," he said one day, "and you like it, which I never did. Why don't you take a trip down into Connecticut? There are good folks there, and you'd enjoy yourself. I never went."

"How do you know about the folks, when you've never been there?" inquired Mrs. Hepworth, mildly.

"Stands to reason," said her husband. "The heft o' my wives come from Connecticut—three of 'em, all fine women. If business hadn't kep' me in Massachusetts, Ellen, I don't doubt my last choice would've been made down there, though I haven't got a single regret, mind you!"—Youth's Companion.

Riches—For a Change.

"I done had so much poverty," said Brother Dickey, "dat I gwine ter pray fer somepin' new in de new year. I gwine ter git down on what's lef' er my po' ol' knees an' ax de good Lawd ter make me rich! Not for Him.

"Mean thing!" exclaimed Mrs. Newlived; "it's just brutal of you to call it 'this stuff.' You said you'd be glad if I baked my own bread—"

"Yes, dear," replied the brute, "but I didn't say you should bake mine."—Catholic Standard and Times.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Mott A. Kaylor, of Clear Creek Township, Huntington County, has been appointed a member of the faculty of the Central University of Iowa, located at Pella.

Cyrus Pierse and Andrew Pierse, brothers, of Anderson, have gone to New York to investigate their share in an estate valued at $100,000. Andrew Pierse is a carpenter, while Cyrus Pierse is a teamster.

The incendiary who has been starting a number of fires in Evansville, continues his work, and eight more barns went up in smoke. This makes twenty-seven barns destroyed by fire during the last week, all of mysterious origin.

After being warned by his mother to remain away from the railroad track, Arthur Bristow, aged 11 years, of Evansville, was killed while trying to steal a ride on an Evansville & Terre Haute train.

Prof. W. S. Hiatt, superintendent of the Frankfort schools, killed himself in that city by taking carbolic acid. He was found in the basement by the janitor of the building. Hiatt was elected superintendent about a month ago. No cause is known for his act.

A blazing automobile belonging to Herman Fedler, of Hammond, that caught fire following a gasoline explosion in a Crown Point garage, placed that city in peril of destruction by flames. Fedler and O'Bright, owners of the garage, were each badly burned in extinguishing the flames.

William Parrish Fuller, son of W. W. Fuller, of Boonville, has been appointed to a scholarship in Annapolis Naval Academy, of Annapolis, through the efforts of Congressman John W. Boehne, of the First District. He was recommended by Dr. T. D. Scales, district chairman, also of that place.

While Mrs. R. A. Brown, of Bluffton, was sitting in the yard she was attacked by a large eagle, measuring six feet from tip to tip of wings. She was badly frightened, but seizing a club succeeded in driving off the bird. Mrs. Brown's injuries were slight, consisting of numerous scratches and torn clothing.

Thomas Daggett, while returning to his home in East Germantown, two miles from Cambridge City, was struck by an eastbound interurban car. The accident occurred just outside the city limits. Should Daggett live, the physicians say his right leg will have to be amputated at the hip. He is 60 years old.

Out of forty-nine cows in the vicinity of Jeffersonville examined by the tuberculin test only one was condemned. Many herds still await examination. The Utica milk dealers voluntarily sought to have their cows tested because of the similar movement in Jefferson County, Kentucky, where the test has been made almost a political issue.

John Brickley, aged 10 years, and Earl Hollingsworth, aged 9, were playing together in Anderson when the former asked the latter if he would like to play Indian. "How do you play it?" asked the Hollingsworth boy. Without making a reply the Brickley boy drew a small revolver of 22-caliber from his pocket and fired at his companion. The bullet struck the boy in the temple, making a wound which the physicians believe will cause his death.

Mrs. Josephine Wilson, a woman aeronaut, was seriously injured after making a balloon ascension and parachute leap at Goldthwaite Park, adjoining the city of Marion. She alighted in the top of a tree and after clinging to the bending boughs for almost ten minutes, while effort was made to come her aid, her hold was broken from exhaustion and she fell about sixty feet, alighting at full length on the ground receiving internal injuries.

A serious accident marked the close of the first day of the County Fair at Crown Point, when Nicholas Chefaloo, aged 30 years, a trick bicycle rider, while leaping the gap on a structure fifty feet high, was hurled to the ground. His jaw was broken and he received internal injuries. The trap failed to work as Chefaloo shot out of the loop on the bicycle. The accident occurred in the presence of many panic stricken onlookers. Chefaloo, whose home is in Chicago, may not recover.

The business section of Peru recently has had a strange visitor in the form of a full-grown buzzard. The bird is probably a tame one escaped from a cage, but so far its owner has not been found. It has attracted much attention flying low through the mercantile section and perching upon the buildings. Singularly enough, it has visited all the buildings that were formerly occupied by saloons and are now empty. Many attempts have been made by boys to catch the buzzard, but it is too sly to be caught. It does not appear to scare at anything. No attempt has been made to kill it.

Willard Watkins, aged 3 years, of Madison, tried to lead the family cow home with a rope tied to the animal's horns and around his waist. He probably will recover.

In the court of Justice Bowmaster, Silas Kaufman, a log hauler, residing in Cambridge City, pleaded guilty to the charge of blocking the highway so that Silas Clark, who filed the charge, was compelled to run his automobile up the side of an embankment, in order to pass him.

It is given out that Governor Marshall weighs 132½ pounds, six and one-half of which have been gained during his four weeks stay at Petoskey.

Robert Vanhorn produced this season on his farm at Middlebury a new variety of peaches of which specimens weighed from ten to twelve ounces each.

Orville B. Kilmer, a well-known Warsaw militiaman, has gone to South Bend to undergo an operation for appendicitis. He has been sick for three weeks.

W. H. Ewers, of Danville, Ill., was in Carlisle looking at a site for a manufacturing concern, now located at Terre Haute, that is soon to be dismantled and moved to some town where raw material can be obtained more readily. The factory manufactures various kinds of clay products and gives employment to 150 workmen.

Captain E. M. Baldwin, pilot in the government service during the Civil War, who has been in army service for forty years, now stationed at the depot of the quartermaster's department in Jeffersonville, is one of three veteran employes of the place whose wages have just been cut. Hereafter Captain Baldwin will receive $1,000 instead of $1,800 a year.

Word was received in Bloomington that the Government had purchased the W. T. Hicks and Dr. P. C. Holland lots at the corner of College avenue and Seventh street as a site for the new postoffice. The total cost of the two lots was $14,500. An effort will be made to start the construction work in early spring. The amount appropriated for the Government building is $66,000.

Mrs. Eli Turnbull, aged 51 years, residing a mile west of Churubusco, died from cancer of the stomach, leaving surviving her the husband and a family of grown children. Her maiden name was Elizabeth Witham and she was held in high esteem in this community. The autopsy performed by Drs. Franks and Briggs disclosed a malignant cancerous affection at the pyloric orifice leading from the stomach into the intestines.

The authorities of Vigo County do not know what they are to do with the insane of the county. A number of incurables have been returned from the State institution at Indianapolis, because the county now has more than its quota. The County Poor Farm has all it can care for, and Sheriff Walsh says perhaps ten are under private care in the county. Several are in the jail. Last week seven persons were adjudged insane in the county.

Robert J. Tracewell, controller of the United States treasury, was the guest of Congressman William O. Barnard, of Newcastle, recently. Congressman Barnard entertained Mr. Tracewell and a party of local politicians at dinner at the Bundy Hotel, after which the Controller was taken about the city. The business of Mr. Tracewell's visit was not made known. Congressman Barnard will go to Chicago in a week to attend a meeting of a congressional committee of which he is a member.

Judge Fortune, of the Circuit Court in Terre Haute, gave the new grand jury special instructions to investigate the facts in connection with the Hart-Schreck fight pulled off there July 26. He told the jurors to sift the matter and discover if the bout had been a "prize fight," and if so to indict those connected with it. Following the fight Governor Marshall investigated the local situation in regard to fighting and the action of the judge is supposed to be the result of an agreement made at that time.

Dow Finlayson, aged 30, of Wateska, Ill., is at the Howard County Infirmary in Kokomo suffering from wounds received when he was attacked in the street by Bert Spurgeon, of Kokomo. Spurgeon attacked Finlayson without cause, it is said, knocked him down, kicked him and then stabbed him twice under the heart. When Finlayson was picked up it was thought he was dying, but he revived enough to be taken to the County Infirmary. His condition is serious. Spurgeon is in jail, charged with assault with intent to kill. He was drinking when he committed the assault.

Henry Moore, a laborer, was instantly killed at Monon while assisting an aeronaut in preparing his balloon for an ascension. Moore was watching the process of inflating the gas bag when the balloon, caught by a gust of wind, started upward. Dangling ropes wrapped about the legs of Moore and lifted him from the ground. While Moore was struggling to seize the ropes and right himself, he became entangled in some telegraph wires and fell, head downward, to the ground. He was dead when physicians reached him. Two of Moore's children were in the crowd that witnessed the accident.

Mrs. James Rhine, of Logansport, found her clothing aflame from ignited gasoline which had leaked from a stove, and she saved her own life by rushing into the yard and rolling in the damp grass.

Christian C. Walda, 53 years old and a prominent contractor and builder of Fort Wayne, was killed at Huntington. He stepped on the interurban track to signal the car to stop. The motorman failed to slacken the speed and the car struck him, killing him instantly.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

R. F. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Chicago trade says:

Favorable developments continue to strengthen the commercial position. Heavy payments through the banks are attested by aggregates exceeding those at this time last year, and the record of trading defaults again is satisfactory as to the effects upon credits. Financial conditions generally reflect an ample supply of money, but the improved demand for wider enterprise has created an advanced rate for accommodation.

Unsettled weather throughout the agricultural regions is a temporary hindrance to soil preparation, but the prospects of an unprecedented corn crop is not diminished. New demands in the leading industries come forward rapidly and there is notable increase in the movements of both East and West bound freight. Furnace and steel mill outputs in this district rise to new records and additional capacity under way is rushed to completion.

Railway equipment needs become more clearly defined as the crop season progresses, and heavy contracts are yet being booked for locomotives, cars, coaches and supplies. Structural steel remains in strong request.

Bank clearings, $249,153,694, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1908 by 12.9 per cent, and compare with $213,005,499 in 1907.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 25 last week, against 26 last week, 22 in 1908 and 17 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 4, against 5 last week, 10 in 1908 and 5 in 1907.

NEW YORK.

As the season advances trade tends to show further expansion and industrial lines are becoming more active. Outputs are being increased by plans already in operation and frequent reports come to hand of resumptions by concerns that have been shut down for some time past. Under the circumstances employment is more general, pay-rolls are larger and more money is available for spending.

In a nutshell, trade is good; industry, particularly iron and steel, is active; outputs are close to normal, and prospects are pleasant, the most notable drawbacks being reduced yields of cotton and a smaller than earlier expected corn crop. Within the week house trade has expanded in marked degree, especial activity being noticed in demand for dry goods and millinery. Buyers have been in the markets in large numbers, and while they have taken hold quite freely they are nevertheless exercising much care in making purchases.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with Sept. 2 were 160, against 201 last week, 210 in the like week of 1908, 130 in 1907, 121 in 1906 and 137 in 1905.

Business failures in Canada for the week number 27, as compared with 32 last week and 17 in the like week of 1908.—Bradstreet's.

Women

Women who suffer from female ailments, frequently neglect their trouble, till a general break-down follows. Don't wait till your case is as bad as that—take Cardui in time. It is a safe, reliable medicine, for all women.

Take CARDUI

Mrs. Rena Hare, of Pierce, Fla., tried Cardui and afterward wrote: "I was a sufferer from all sorts of female trouble, had pain in my side, drawing pains in my legs, could not sleep, had shortness of breath.

"I suffered for years, until my husband insisted on my trying Cardui. The first bottle gave me relief and now I am almost well."

Try Cardui.

It will help you."

Monday afternoon, Master Herbert Curie brought us for display, a large beet raised on their farm, north of town. It pulled the scales to the 17 pound mark. He stated that they had quite a few this year and that they raised them principally for cow feed. Can you "beat" that?

Pianos at a Discount of 20 to 40 per cent.

When Lyon & Healy, of Chicago, undertook to put in new flooring in their entire Piano Department it became necessary to move a vast number of Upright pianos so that the work of the carpenters might not be hampered.

To move these pianos quickly, Lyon & Healy offers them at a discount of 20 to 40 per cent. Some of these pianos have been slightly used, but have been put through the Lyon & Healy factory and are practically as good as new. These are no cheap factory pianos, but pianos of makes of good reputation

What Lyon & Healy have done is to mark all these superb pianos (and there are hundreds of them) at greatly reduced prices. The response upon the part of the public is marvelous.

If you know the prices usually paid for good standard makes of pianos, you will need no second invitation to write to Lyon & Healy, Wabash Avenue and Adams Street, Chicago, for alteration sale list and terms, for you can secure a genuine $300 Upright for about $190, or other bargains in proportion.

Lyon & Healy give their own guarantee with every one of these pianos, regardless of make. Nothing like this opportunity has ever been given to music teachers, students, and music lovers heretofore.

The poorest policy and the worst economy is to keep the children out of school. Every day lost has its manifold effort; the knowledge gained on that day is missed, pupil is thrown behind, becomes discouraged, has a bad effect on the class and the very habit is to be avoided. Start in the first day and make it a point to be there every day unless prevented by sickness.

Nervous Prostration

"I suffered so with Nervous Prostration that I thought there was no use trying to get well. A friend recommended Dr. Miles' Nervine, and although skeptical at first, I soon found myself recovering, and am to-day well."

MRS. D. I. JONES,
5800 Broadway, Cleveland, O.

Much sickness is of nervous origin. It's the nerves that make the heart force the blood through the veins, the lungs take in oxygen, the stomach digest food, the liver secrete bile and the kidneys filter the blood. If any of these organs are weak, it is the fault of the nerves through which they get their strength. Dr. Miles' Nervine is a specific for the nerves. It soothes the irritation and assists in the generation of nerve force. Therefore you can hardly miss it if you take Dr. Miles' Nervine when sick. Get a bottle from your druggist. Take it all according to directions, and if it does not benefit he will return your money.

The Barney brick beside The News office was torn down last week so that all danger in passing is averted. When the upper story on the east side was pulled over the entire lower wall was thrown eastward on the church lawn. All that remains standing is the west wall and part of the south wall. If the location is not sold soon the lot will be cleaned up and another building moved in of a frame structure.

Rodgie Tryon came near having his neck broken, last Wednesday noon. He had started to dinner from his work in the field, and decided to ride one of the mules in. They were not used to being rode but as he was a new hand at the Bearss farm he was not acquainted with them. He was thrown to the ground lighting on his head and he was brought to the house in a bad condition. We see he is out but his face is swollen considerable.

Next Monday our school will open. A good start is a battle half won. The busy seasons, harvest feasts, reunions and fairs will be past. The golden opportunity meets you at a most opportune time. You have had a rest from your labors and been refreshed by pleasant associations, and now feel ready for duty. You are impressed that life requires a fitness to get the most out of it, and your aspirations lead you in seeking for that which will mete out to you a full recompense of reward for endeavors put forth. Our schools have wisely and carefully considered you and your desires and have made special provisions to meet these demands, and cordially invite you thither. You will find here good society, pleasant associations, and a most hospitable people. Come and see us, learn our school advantages and know they are not excelled by any township in the state.

A WHOLE YEAR FOR $1.00

That's what you can do for some friend—send him THE ST. JOE NEWS fifty-two times for only a dollar.

Better than a letter, because it gives ALL the home news each week; there is positively no token you could offer which would make a home so happy in your remembrance as this newspaper mailed to some distant relative or friend.

We are making it just as good as it possibly can be done for $1 00. In fact, lots of publishers have raised to $1.50 on not so creditable a paper as this—and we tell you frankly that when you plank down your dollar on our table for a friend, you'll get your money's worth. This is a good copy to start with. We'll save an extra one until Monday. Yes?

The Lake Reunion.

The Seventh annual reunion of the Lake family—was held in Wm. Tyndall's grove, 1½ miles east of Spencerville, August 21st., 1909. The day was all that could be desired and at an early hour the carriages could be seen wending their way back to the beautiful grove which had been previously provided with all conveniences to make old folks comfortable and young folks happy.

The fore part of the day was spent in hand shaking and greetings of those who had not met since the last reunion and those from a distance who had never attended previous reunions. As the noon hour came creeping along all had forgotten their breakfasts and longed for the monday meal which was quickly spread and one hundred and seventy-six hungry mortals were soon seated around a table loaded with a variety of good things to eat. Then to visit and make merry the noon hour. After dinner a short time was spent in visiting, and all were again invited to the tables to enjoy a good supply of ice cream that had been provided.

After which a business meeting was held to elect and appoint officers for the coming year which is as following John N. Lake, New Haven, Ind., Rt. 2 president, and William O. Lake, Spencerville, secretary. Then the crowd fell into the hands of the photographer only for a short time however when good-byes were said and all started for their homes feeling that it had been a day well spent.

Versatile Destiny.

A man becomes a fan and soon loses his hearth and home. Another yearns to shuffle off this mortal coil and gets kicked into a prison cell by his hasty father. Another learns to his surprise, as thousands have learned before him in various ways, that there are all kinds of unsuspected dangers in sitting on a sofa with a young woman. A wife may spring a divorce, a father make take a sudden notion to kick or spank, and lightning may yank an innocent young man away from his girl and make dents in the ceiling with him. Destiny is a surprisingly versatile thing, with a million and one ways of knocking human plans galley-west.

WOMEN'S KIDNEYS

Mrs. Rebecca Mock, 1795 E. Rich Street, Columbus, Ohio, writes: "I believe I would still be a victim of kidney troubles but for Doan's Kidney Pills, for when I started using them I was in constant pain with my back, and no other remedy had been of any use. The kidney secretions were irregular, and I was nervous and lacked energy. But Doan's Kidney Pills gave me prompt relief and continued use cured me."

Extravagant Living and the Unemployed.

Some of these wealthy people attempt to justify their extravagance on the ground that it gives employment to a great many, says Orison Swett Marden in Success Magazine. No greater delusion ever crept into a human brain than that wanton extravagance is justified on the ground that it gives employment, for the demoralizing and debauching influence of it all upon those uselessly employed infinitely outweighs any possible good it may do.

It is true that many poor women, girls and children are enabled to eke out a miserable existence by spending years of precious time and energy working upon a piece of lace embroidery, or a thousand-dollar gown to be worn only once or twice by a rich woman. But is there no better destiny for human beings made in God's image than to wear their lives out and ruin their eyesight, as is done in numerous instances, in making that which appeals only to the vanity of women, many of whom, in all their lives, never earned the equivalent to the food which they consume in a single month?

The vulgar flaunting of wealth, which we see on every hand, is a constant suggestion, a perpetual temptation to the poorer classes to strain every nerve to keep up appearances, "to keep up with the procession" at all hazards.

PRESSED HARD.

Coffee's Weight on Old Age.

When prominent men realize the injurious effects of coffee and the change in health that Postum can bring, they are glad to lend their testimony for the benefit of others.

A superintendent of public schools in North Carolina says:

"My mother, since her early childhood, was an inveterate coffee drinker and had been troubled with her heart for a number of years, and complained of that 'weak all over' feeling and sick stomach.

"Some time ago, I was making an official visit to a distant part of the country and took dinner with one of the merchants of the place. I noticed a somewhat peculiar flavour of the coffee, and asked him concerning it. He replied that it was Postum.

"I was so pleased with it, that after the meal was over, I bought a package to carry home with me, and had wife prepare some for the next meal. The whole family liked it so well, that we discontinued coffee and used Postum entirely.

"I had really been at times very anxious concerning my mother's condition, but we noticed that after using Postum for a short time, she felt so much better than she did prior to its use, and had little trouble with her heart and no sick stomach; that the headaches were not so frequent, and her general condition much improved. This continued until she was as well and hearty as the rest of us.

"I know Postum has benefited myself and the other members of the family, but not in so marked a degree as in the case of my mother, as she was a victim of long standing."

THE POPULAR PULPIT

SONGS IN THE NIGHT.

By Henry F. Cope.

"God, my maker, who giveth songs in the night."—Job 35: 10.

It is remarkable that those people who have strengthened the world's store of optimism have been those who were educated in the school of suffering, while those who have left only a memory of pessimistic complaining have usually had least of which to complain; their lives have seemed sad because of habitual self-absorption.

Job in his losses, David in his exile, Jesus as the man of sorrows, Bunyan in his prison, Milton in his blindness, Robert Louis Stevenson in his thraldom of disease, all have taught us to look up, to hope, to have faith in the eternal goodness, to catch the blessing in the guise of pain and loss, and to earn for ourselves the crown of a joy that blooms through sorrow.

The problem of pain is always greater to those who must stand by and see others suffer, perhaps unable to help them by any means, than it is for those who themselves must bear the pain. It is true there is no wholly satisfactory solution of the mystery of suffering, none that satisfies us in its real presence, but in its effects, in its fruitage on those who face it in high courage, we may see some suggestions of its meaning in our universe.

This is the world's great school, the place where the affections and the higher attributes are educated. Here we learn patience, fortitude, faith, sympathy, strength to serve and to lead. None of the lessons are such that we would seek them of ourselves; none are such that we would lose them afterward if we could.

It is the pain that enters the home that binds the family together. Never are the ties stronger than when all gather by the couch of suffering or when they stand together straining their eyes across the great void. Only those who know realize how homes are hallowed by the fact of belonging to two worlds.

Out of suffering rise our great songs. The poetry that reaches our heart has been written by eyes blinded by tears. It opens its riches to us when we read it in the same way. Just as liberty has been born in prison walls, so has joy and the confidence of final victory over disease and pain come out of the hours of anguish and broken spirit.

Perhaps if we could probe the mystery of suffering we might be tempted to administer its curriculum ourselves. We can only for ourselves determine that it shall not conquer us, that we shall not be like dull schoolboys who weep over their lessons instead of learning them, that this world shall lose all unnecessary suffering and gain all the good out of all that remains.

So when the night comes it is for us to determine whether it shall inspire us to song or lead us with complainings to make it yet darker. Here is the time to sing when it is hardest of all to raise the voice in cheer and encouragement. When it is our night there are always others who would be aided by our song. Blessed are those who sing in the shadows.

Somehow, to believe that love is over all, that the infinite goodness is greater than all the evil, to know with the old man Job that, though affliction may rob me of all that men call my possessions, the abiding and unchanging values remain, that suffering after all only pricks the surface—that is to find a song in the darkest hour.

And these experiences make tender our hearts to one another; my need reminds me of my neighbor. We would soon be calloused, utterly indifferent, but for these blows that break up the surface of the life. The poor and those who know need are tenderest in heart one to another. Just to acquire the grace of sympathy were worth the course in sorrow.

We may not solve the mystery of suffering, but we can face it and sing through it; we can take all the good there is in it to ourselves and make our own lives sweet and refreshing through it. We can sing songs in the night; we can learn patience with one another. We can keep our own hearts open in sympathy; we can turn the dreary hours to song in some other life, for to think of the sorrows of others is to find the joy that lies hidden in every sorrow for us.

FAINT HEART NEVER WINS.

By Dr. George Clarke Peck.

"Be strong and of good courage."—Joshua 10: 25.

It was observed by an ancient that "faint heart ne'er won fair lady." Not only so, but "faint heart" never won anything worth winning. It stands before life's open doors hesitant, at the foothills of great possibilities, in the presence of some supreme achievement afraid.

Many a man is poor chiefly because he has been afraid to trust his money in other hands than his own. What uninvested millions lie hidden away in gunnysacks and under floors! All we need to start a panic is to suddenly increase the number of commercial "faint hearts." All the longed-for commercial revival waits is a restoration of confidence. So great campaigns remain unwaged, great deliverances unwrought, splendid continents unacquired and unsubdued because of our faint hearts.

A census of such timid folk would doubtless make a long list, but such a list is never quite so depressing as when it includes those from whom we have the right to expect better things. "The worst thing about some good people is that they are such cowards." There is a species of cowardice which goes with respectability and belongs to great decorum. It is not by any means the cowardice of the wicked who "flee when no man pursueth," neither is it the cowardice of the pure craven. It is the exhibition of those from whom we expect a different spirit—of a Nicodemus in the council chamber; of an Erasmus in the reformation.

It is said that certain enraged beasts invariably wait a sign of terror in the eyes of their victim and with the first intimation of such terror the animal springs to the attack. Thus the forces of evil watch for some sign of weakening on the part of those who are set to defend the right. The mere blanching of cheek, some first evidence of faint-heartedness, is all the signal the enemy needs.

But to say that men and causes are defeated by faint-heartedness is like ascribing death to "heart failure." The question still remains as to what induced the faintness. "Conscience," perhaps which "makes cowards of us all." There is no moral weakener like a sense of personal demerit. Few of us can carry comfortably and jauntily a guilty soul. That state of mind which needs no accuser acts like an inward paralysis upon the soul's best powers.

Faint-heartedness indicates also want of conviction. Some one says that a bank never succeeds until its president takes it to bed with him. But this is only another way of saying that a man must believe tremendously in the work to which he sets himself. "He starved his business," explained a mutual friend by way of accounting for a certain commercial failure. "He never put himself into it." Nor can a man put himself into his task until he believes in his task. A faint heart is often a confession that its owner's soul is not yet engaged.

But the fundamental cure of cowardice must be had from God. To be convinced of His immense opulence of resource, to know that He has a greater stake in us than we have in ourselves, to believe that He never sends His children on fools' errands is one part of a sure cure for timidity. "The secret of the Lord is with those that fear Him." And those who in the best sense fear the Lord are not afraid of anybody else.

HYMNS YOU OUGHT TO KNOW

BLEST BE THE TIE THAT BINDS

By John Fawcett, D. D.

[John Fawcett (Lidget Green, Yorkshire, England, Jan. 6, 1739—Wainsgate, July 25, 1817), an English Baptist pastor, was the author of several beautiful hymns. It is said that, in 1772, after he had served the little congregation at Wainsgate for some years, living on a small salary, he decided to accept a call to an important church in London. He packed his goods and prepared to leave. But his affection for his people led him to recall his acceptance and to remain with them. On that occasion he wrote this hymn. He little knew that he was writing a hymn that would be sung in many lands and at almost all times of parting and of reunion.]

Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love;
The fellowship of kindred minds
Is like to that above

Before our Father's throne
We pour our ardent prayers;
Our fears, our hopes, our aims are one,
Our comforts and our cares.

We share our mutual woes,
Our mutual burdens bear;
And often for each other flows
The sympathizing tear.

When we asunder part,
It gives us inward pain;
But we shall still be joined in heart,
And hope to meet again.

This glorious hope revives
Our courage by the way;
While each in expectation lives
And longs to see the day.

From sorrow, toil, and pain,
And sin, we shall be free,
And perfect love and friendship reign
Through all eternity.

Nervous Passenger (on lake steamer)—It must be terrible to think of an accident happening to the boat while you are away down there in that hole. Stoker—It's jist the other way, ma'am. If the boat sinks I won't have to go through more'n about half as much water as you will 'fore I git to the bottom o' the lake.

"Well, Bobby, how do you like church?" asked his father, as they walked homeward from the sanctuary, to which Bobby had just paid his first visit. "It's fine!" ejaculated the young man; "how much did you get, father?" "How much did I get? Why, what do you mean? How much what?" asked the astonished parent at this evident irreverence. "Why, don't you remember when the funny old man passed the money around? I got only ten cents."—Lippincott's.

Honored by Women

When a woman speaks of her silent secret suffering she trusts you. Millions have bestowed this mark of confidence on Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y. Everywhere there are women who bear witness to the wonder-working, curing-power of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription—which saves the suffering sex from pain, and successfully grapples with woman's weaknesses and stubborn ills.

IT MAKES WEAK WOMEN STRONG IT MAKES SICK WOMEN WELL.

No woman's appeal was ever misdirected or her confidence misplaced when she wrote for advice, to the WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Dr. R. V. Pierce, President, Buffalo, N. Y.

CUTICURA CURED HIM.

Eczema Came on Legs and Ankles—Canadian Chief of Police Could Not Wear Shoes Because of Bad Scaling and Itching.

"I have been successfully cured of dry eczema. I was inspecting the removal of noxious weeds from the edge of a river and was constantly in the dust from the weeds. At night I cleansed my limbs, but felt a prickly sensation. I paid no attention to it for two years, but I noticed a scum on my legs like fish scales. I did not attend to it until it came to be too itchy and sore and began getting two running sores. My ankles were all sore and scabby and I could not wear shoes. I had to use carpet and felt slippers for weeks. I got a cake of the Cuticura Soap and some Cuticura Ointment. In less than ten days I could put on my boots and in less than three weeks I was free from the confounded itching. Capt. George P. Bliss, Chief of Police, Morris, Manitoba. March 20, 1907, and Sept. 24, 1908."

Severe.

Samuel Gompers was talking in the smoke room of the Baltic about a recent newspaper attack on a rich corporation.

"It was a cruel attack," Mr. Gompers chuckled. "It was as cruel as the Jonesville Clarion's paragraph about old Deacon Hiram Ludlow. This paragraph headed the Clarion's obituary column. It said:

"'Deacon Hiram Ludlow of Frisbie Township, aged 82, passed peacefully away, on Thursday last, from single blessedness to matrimonial bliss, after a short but severe attack by Maria Higgins, a blooming widow of 37 summers.'"

Imperishable Wood.

A curious source of wealth is reported by the French consul at Mongtze, in Upper Tonkin. It lies in wood mines. The wood originally was a pine forest, which the earth swallowed in some cataclysm. Some of the trees are a yard in diameter. They lie in a slanting direction and in sandy soils, which cover them to a depth of about eight yards. As the top branches are well preserved it is thought the geological convulsion which buried them cannot be of very great antiquity. The wood furnished by these timber mines is imperishable and the Chinese gladly buy it for coffins.

Ask Her This Question

"Do you know of any woman who ever received any benefit from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?"

If any woman who is suffering with any ailment peculiar to her sex will ask her neighbors this question, she will be surprised at the result. There is hardly a community in this country where women cannot be found who have been restored to health by this famous old remedy, made exclusively from a simple formula of roots and herbs.

During the past 30 years we have published thousands of letters from these grateful women who have been cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and never in all that time have we published a testimonial without the writer's special permission. Never have we knowingly published a testimonial that was not truthful and genuine. Here is one just received a few days ago. If anyone doubts that this is a true and honest statement of a woman's experience with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound write and ask her.

Houston, Texas.—"When I first began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I was a total wreck. I had been sick for three years with female troubles, chronic dyspepsia, and a liver trouble. I had tried several doctor's medicines, but nothing did me any good.

"For three years I lived on medicines and thought I would never get well, when I read an advertisment of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and was advised to try it.

"My husband got me one bottle of the Compound, and it did me so much good I continued its use. I am now a well woman and enjoy the best of health.

"I advise all women suffering from such troubles to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. They won't regret it, for it will surely cure you."—Mrs. Bessie L. Hicks, 819 Cleveland St., Houston.

Any woman who is sick and suffering is foolish surely not to give such a medicine as this a trial. Why should it not do her as much good as it did Mrs. Hicks.

"NO BABIES, NO BALLOTS."

Priest Advocates Giving Wives and Husbands Vote for Each Child.

"Family suffrage; or, no babies, no ballots." This is the new idea of Father Phelan, editor-priest of St. Louis. He advocates one of the most novel and original bills ever submitted to a legislature relative to women and their rights.

This measure, which the priest says he will submit to the next session at Jefferson City, asks for family suffrage in Missouri for the purpose of encouraging large families. Father Phelan will also submit suggestions relative to women co-respondents, prohibiting a divorced husband from marrying the co-respondent in the case. Should his measure gain the approval of the law makers of Missouri, the standards of woman's importance will be materially changed.

"I would give every family an additional vote for every child born into it," asserts Father Phelan. "If a couple has ten children we would give the family twelve votes. In case the couple agreed politically we would permit the father to cast the whole twelve votes. If the couple were divided on their views of politics we would give the wife her own vote and the votes of all her daughters, and the husband his own vote and those of all his sons.

TO CATCH COUNTERFEITERS.

Roberts Case Illustrates How All Nations Protect Their Money.

The arrest recently of John Roberts in Kentucky on the charge of making counterfeit Mexican national-bank notes is of interest in illustrating the manner in which counterfeiters are run down in all nations. In the United States there is a statute making it an offense to make counterfeit money of any other nation, either of currency or bank notes. The offender is tried and punished in this country. The secret service agents of the Treasury Department do not go outside of the United States to run down alleged counterfeiters of American currency, but in practically every country there is a law similar to that of this country with regard to makers of spurious foreign coins. In the event that a counterfeiter who has made the illegal money in this country goes to the country whose currency he has counterfeited the offender may be extradited by the American authorities if they have evidence of the making of imitation coin in this country. Owing to the difficulty experienced by counterfeiters in disposing of foreign imitation money in this country few cases of this kind have been reported. Expert money changers usually detect the imitation money.

DESPERADO IS CAUGHT.

Man Who Held Off Farmers as Flames Raged Wounded in Woods.

After emulating a desperado for two days, James Burns, a farm hand, surrendered to a constable's posse following a fight at Mingo Junction, Ohio, Thursday night. He was wounded in the melee. Burns is accused of setting fire to Mrs. Minnie Otte's barn Tuesday night. When a crowd of farmers appeared to put out the fire he stood guard with a rifle and refused to permit any one to try to quench the flames. Tiring of seeing the flames, he entered the Otte home and refused to permit the family to enter during the night. Wednesday morning Burns again set fire to the barn. This time he fired at persons who approached the structure. Constable George Grifith organized a posse and tried to rout the man from the house. Burns fired several times and escaped from the house to the woods. In the midst of the battle the man cried out in agony, saying he was shot and would surrender if he were given medical aid. Being assured that he would not be harmed, he dragged himself out of the bushes and threw down his guns.

SOLID GOLD & SILVER AWARD

For the Best Ear of Corn

To be Known as the W. K. Kellogg National Corn Trophy

To be Awarded at the National Corn Exposition, Omaha, December 6 to 18, 1909.

Over one hundred thousand million (100,000,000,000) ears of corn were grown in the United States last year. Over a billion dollars were paid for them. More than a million and a quarter extra dollars went into the pockets of the farmers for corn this year than they received for the previous year's crop.

The reason for this may be found in the fact that the people of the United States are beginning to learn how delicious corn is and to realize its full food value.

Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes has placed corn among the indispensable items of daily fare.

The makers, therefore, are interested in the development of the King of Cereals, and have decided to award a beautiful trophy for the man, woman or child who can produce the best ear of corn in two different seasons.

Professor Holden, of the Iowa State College, the greatest authority on corn in the world, will award the prize at the National Corn Exposition, to be held at Omaha, Neb., December 6th to 18th, 1909. Two simple rules will govern the plan, and they are:—that you send your best ear of corn to the National Corn Exposition, Omaha, Neb., before November 27, 1909; and that you are a member of the National Corn Association. Full particulars regarding which can be had by writing to National Corn Exposition, Omaha, Neb. Tie a tag securely to your specimen and word it, "For the Kellogg Trophy Contest," and write your name and address plainly. If yours is judged the best, you will get the trophy for 1910. If you succeed again next year or the year following, the trophy will become your property for all time. In other words, you must produce the best ear of corn two different years.

There will be no restrictions. Any man, woman or child belonging to the Association can enter. It will be open to every state in the Union. Professor Holden will judge the corn particularly on the basis of quality. The growing of more corn per acre is one object of the award, but the main purpose of the founder of the trophy is for

A WORD FROM SASKATOON

A Few Years Ago a Straggling Hamlet, Today This Is a City of Twelve Thousand, Adding Annually Twenty Per Cent to Its Population—And the Spirit of the New Northwest Displayed at Saskatoon Is but a Sample of That in All the Great Saskatchewan Region—George B. Lockwood Gives Us an Intimate Glimpse of This New World.

[Special Correspondence.]

Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, Aug. 17.—Only a few years ago there was nothing in sight here but the prairie stretching in every direction to the far horizon, whitened here and there by the bones of buffaloes cruelly slaughtered by the thousands in the seventies either for their hides or for the mere love of killing; today, by the way, Canada treasures a herd of several hundred buffaloes, bought in the United States, and would not part with them for a king's ransom. Six years ago Saskatoon was a straggling hamlet. Today it is a city of 12,000, adding 20 per cent or more to its population every year. It has the spirit of a city ten times its size, and it is easy to believe, commanding as it does an immense area of agricultural territory now being fast developed, that it may yet be as much ofa metropolis as it hopes to be. Failing in its ambition to be made the capital of the province of Saskatchewan, Saskatoon has been awarded the provincial university as a balm for wounded feelings. Canada is providing generously for public institutions of higher learning, so that it is probable that within a few years there will be an institution here which will rank with the western state universities in equipment and the size of its annual budget. The name Saskatoon is taken from a berry which is native to the Saskatchewan valley.

The Immensity of Canada.

Over a road still in process of construction, one travels a day and a half from Winnipeg to reach this section of Saskatchewan. Journeying over these vast prairies one begins to get an idea of the immensity of Canada, which is larger than the United States by 250,000 square miles, and nearly equals the area of Europe. Lord Strathcona, whose huge fortune is the result of his faith in the possibilities of the New World, says that the population of the Dominion in the twentieth century will reach eighty millions, and witnessing the development here, one is willing to accept that statement. Two hundred thousand people are entering Canada each year, nearly all of them going to the soil. Canada, it is pointed out, begins the new century with as great a population as the United States had in the beginning of the nineteenth, and with infinitely better opportunities for increasing that population than seemed to offer to the young republic a century ago. The quarter of a million Americans who have come into Canada in the past few years have brought with them property valued at more than one hundred million dollars, so that the per capita wealth of Canada is being increased rather than lowered by her immigration. Two hundred and fifty American manufacturing establishments have located branches in the Dominion. One half of Canada's foreign trade is with the United States, so that the development of this great country is of the most vital interest to our people. Canada's foreign trade aggregates annually more than a half billion. Its capital invested in manufactories is over four hundred millions, and their annual output reaches in value a half billion, but Canada's manufacturing interests are very small as compared with those of her great neighbor to the south. Forty-five per cent of the Canadians till the soil, and 37 per cent of Canada's farmers own their homes.

An Economic Invasion.

There are those who profess to find cause for anxiety in the current of American immigration that is sweeping into Canada. But we in the United States are increasing in population at the rate of 4,000 per day, nearly a million and a half a year, or six times the number of all the Americans who have gone to the Dominion in eight years. And these people are going where they will help to solve the problem of an adequate food supply that is beginning to confront a nation which has been increasing the demand for food products much faster than the supply.

The Canadian resents the suggestion that he is a near neighbor to the polar regions. He calls attention to government reports which show that good root crops are grown as far north as the Mackenzie and Yukon rivers, which are as far north from here as Saskatoon is from Denver. Attention is called to government investigations which show that north of the settled portions of Canada lie practically unexplored lands aggregating in area more than a million and a half square miles which possesses agricultural possibilities. It is claimed that in the Peace River Valley, north of this section, there is yet unsettled good agricultural land aggregating as great an area as the settled lands of the big provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. "There is land enough in western Canada, if tilled," said James J. Hill recently, "to feed every mouth in Europe." Good crops of small grain have been raised more than four hundred miles north of this city, and nearly a thousand miles north garden and vegetables have been successfully raised. With the extension of the railroads now so rapidly going on it is evident that Canada is on the eve of a wonderful agricultural awakening. Hundreds of millions of dollars are being invested in railway building. One road alone is employing 50,000 men on construction work this year. Hudson Bay will soon hear the whistle of the locomotive, and even the region of the Great Lakes will not be much further away from Liverpool by way of the port to be built on the bay than by way of New York. It has long been assured that Hudson Bay was an ice locked body of water during the winter months, but later investigation shows that navigable channels can be found all the year round, and that the weather is no more severe in that region during the winter months than on Lake Superior. The first frost strikes this section of Canada ordinarily about the tenth of September, sometimes as late as the last of next month. Wheat ripens in this portion of Saskatchewan at this very time,—about the middle of August, so that the cold does not interfere with the crop. Even the winter climate, it is said, is not more severe than that of the Dakotas. There is but little snow or wind, and the days are bright and sunshiny, with a dry, clear atmosphere.

Her pastry may not always be just right, and she may occasionally burn her bread and forget to replace missing buttons, but for solid comfort all day and every day she is a very paragon. Home is not a battlefield nor life one long, unending fight. The trick of always seeing the bright side, or, if the matter has no bright side, of polishing up the dark one, is a very important faculty, one of the things no woman should be without.
